I think the fact that—I think it is clear that the major narcotics dealers very carefully weigh the plusses versus the minuses, the assets versus the liabilities, the benefits versus the detriments, and very clearly this death penalty wil be a deterrent to their criminal activities.

I commend the gentleman. I very strongly urge my colleagues to vote for this amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. I would be standing before the House, Mr. Chairman, opposing this amendment if it were perfectly drafted; I will admit that.

I oppose the death penalty. I do not think it has a place in a civilized society. I think we, as other civilized western nations, can learn to do without it and to find better ways to seek deterrents without taking human life at the hands of the State.

But I do not think that is the reason that a majority should vote against it today because I know that a majority do not agree on that score. By introduction of this amendment into this debate and into this bill, we have taken a very divisive issue on which people disagree morally, as a matter of good faith, and thrust it as a partisan and divisive issue into the middle of something on which there is broad agreement in this House, that is that we should have a comprehensive and aggressive drug bill.

We should all be able to hold our heads high. We may disagree with one or another amendment, but hold our heads high and vote "yes" for this bill. And when this amendment passes, if it does, it will become very difficult for some of us to vote "yes."

We may be forced to do so against our consciences because we want to make a strong statement about drugs. I would urge the Members of this House to consider that in casting their vote on this amendment.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

Mr. MCCOLLUM. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and I have worked for a long time on the issue of the death penalty together in many, many battles so far in this Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure we will be working a long time together to try to get the revisions that we need not only in this particular evening but on other occasions in Federal law dealing with the death penalty for heinous crimes where we really do need to have that kind of punishment and that kind of deterrence.

I do not know why the big hoopla tonight over this particular proposal, though, because this is nothing in terms of what maybe we could have out here and what I wish that we could have out here tonight. We need to revise the Federal laws on the death penalty, giving the death penalty for assassination of the President, for kidnaping, for peacetime espionage on the civilian side to go along with the peacetime espionage death penalty on the military side that my amendment was adopted gave us last year in this Congress. And if we are talking about drugs alone, I for one do not see why we do not look at having a death penalty for anytime that we have a death that results from a drug dealing by these heavy traffickers when someone dies from the use of those drugs.

Frankly, I do not see why we do not have a death penalty in this situation for real tough traffickers even though you do not have a death that results, although I realize that there may be some court challenges to that particular proposal.

I think we ought to try that.

But all we are doing here tonight, all that is in this amendment that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is asking us to vote on, is to have a death penalty in that very narrow case where you have that organized criminal who is a repeated, continuous criminal who has done a lot of drug dealing and he goes out and intentionally has somebody murdered in the course of his business. That is the only thing we are doing tonight. I would think that this body would overwhelmingly, overwhelmingly adopt the death penalty in this situation. It is inconceivable to me that we would not do that much, when we ought to be doing a lot more.

I will join with my colleague in the future to bring about some of that.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment.

I truly fail to understand the political appeal that the death penalty seems to have for so many Members of this House. But I know one thing, that it has nothing to do with this drug package that we are considering today. For those people that are so concerned about getting a vote on this death penalty today, it has something to do with the politics of the Committee on the Judiciary, and they just waited until the bill came to the floor to give vent to the pent-up feelings that they have. I am begging you do not hold the drug package bill hostage to this vindictiveness.

Let me tell you something: there are other moral grounds why people may object to the death penalty, but I am thoroughly convinced that this bill that we are considering today no one thought of until there was an opportunity to circumvent the hearing process of the Judiciary Committee and just bring it to the floor under the rule that was carefully crafted in order to make certain that we expedite this bill.

Having said that, let me tell you about some of my personal concerns about how other people can completely disregard the right to life after birth.

That is the way that this bill is written, certain juries can consider who will die for one set of facts and another jury might consider who will die for another set of facts. We recognize that people's value of life vary from community to community. What is shocking to me is that some facts were revealed to me that in the State of Florida during the period of 1976 to 1980 there were 286 blacks that killed white folks in the State of Florida, and during this very same period of time there were 111 white folks that killed some black folks in the State of Florida.

When we took a look to examine, when they took a count of who was found eligible or convicted and given the death sentence, the score was: for the whites, zero; for the blacks, 48.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. I ask my colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey, if he wishes to close.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains on each side at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would announce that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] has 4 minutes remaining; the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, this is a controversial issue, no doubt about that, no doubt that there are strong feelings on both sides. Within my church, the Catholic church, there is a dispute as to the efficacy of the death penalty. I would not support the death penalty if I did not feel it was a deterrent. I am satisfied in my own mind it is a deterrent.

I had an opportunity a number of years ago to speak with Vincent Bugliosi, the assistant district attorney at that time of Los Angeles, perhaps most famous for prosecuting the Manson family. I asked him about the death penalty. And he talked to me about a number of interviews he had with people sitting in prison in California who had opportunity and reason to kill people on the scene. That is, they had opportunity to kill the only witnesses that could have tied them to the crime they had just committed, and they did not do so. He asked them why they did not do so. He said—this is at the time when the death penalty was still real in California—he said, "because we knew we could get the chair for it."

So he was saying he interviewed people who had every reason to murder witnesses.

We have examples now where witnesses are murdered precisely because they could tie people to the crime and they know that there is no death penalty available to the perpetrators of the crime.

This is a very narrowly drawn death penalty. It specifically talks about those involved in a criminal enterprise, the traffickers who intentionally kill another person. That is what it is talking about. They are the ones who are weighing the pros and cons, who are trying to make an economic decision as well as a decision as to what might befall them if they get caught.

So all we are saying is give us a chance to have a vote. Somebody says there is politics about the Judiciary Committee here. We are caught in a catch-22 situation.

We are refused the opportunity to present a death penalty in the Committee on the Judiciary, we are refused the opportunity to pass it out of committee, and then if we bring it to the floor, we are criticized because we did not follow the committee process or we did not go through the amendment process in the committee, which would have been allowed.

You cannot have it both ways, gentlemen, you cannot have it both ways.

If we are denied the opportunity to have it there, we are going to use the opportunity we have it here, and it does fit into this bill.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, it is going to be very difficult for me to do this in 1 minute.

Some years ago, Adam Clayton Powell stood in the well of this House and talked about the flow of narcotics in his district, and he was ignored. As a result of that, it spilled out, and now there are subcultures dealing with narcotics.

Many of those subcultures are headed by people under 18 years old. They are professional in their operation; they are the kingpins, they control their turf, and they order people to be killed. They are 18, 17, and 16.

But under this bill age is a mitigating factor and therefore though they commit the same offense as any adult, they cannot be subject to the death penalty.

Let me add very quickly: Under this bill they cannot even be tried as an adult the way this bill is worded. So what you are doing is you are excluding a whole category of offenders who commit murders, exempting them from the death penalty. Someone said earlier that this was one of the happiest days of their life. This is one of the most tragic days of my life, when in our zeal, in our hatred against drugs we trample the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] is recognized for 1½ minutes.

Mr. HUGHES. We have on the floor right now about four Republicans from the Subcommittee on Crime, and I would just like to get their attention because much has been said about the working of the Committee on the Judiciary. The work product in title VI is the work product of the Subcommittee on Crime, which I am proud to chair. If any of the members of the Subcommittee on Crime can step forward and tell us when we have had any bills that were bottled in the Subcommittee on Crime, I wish they would do it now.

The fact of the matter is that has not been the case. We have had a mill, we have turned out 25 anticrime bills. I happen to support the death penalty. I do not agree with most of my colleagues on the Committee on the Judiciary.

One of the last cases I tried as a prosecutor was a capital case

I strongly support the death penalty in selected instances. I would support the death penalty for a drugpin. But I want to tell you, I must tell you I feel a little uncomfortable, and I must tell you about this amendment. We had no hearings in my subcommittee. I do not have jurisdiction. It was narrowly drafted. It is going to effect a very narrow class. It is attached to the continuing criminal enterprise statute.

To make it germane, it was tacked on to that statute, where there is drugs involved and where in fact it fits in with those specifics, it would only be a handful of cases, if that, that it would affect.

What I am concerned, and I want to share it with you, I fear that when this bill leaves here, and this is going to carry, that we are going to see a filibuster in the other body, we are going to see the whole drug bill go down the drain.

□ 1855

That is my fear, and you have to weigh that in the balance. That is what I am doing, trying to weigh that.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey need not feel any sense of guilt about his work as chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime. It is the chairman himself, the gentleman from New Jersey, who told me about the status of the conditions of the Judiciary Committee that from time to time compelled the gentleman to oppose some of my principles, some of my issues, because of what would happen in the Judiciary Committee. I thanked the gentleman for giving me that insight. So the gentleman need not feel guilty about his work on the Subcommittee on Crime.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I am not feeling guilty; I am just making a statement of fact.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I agree, the gentleman is not guilty.

Mr. Chairman, I close this argument by reading from that letter to which I alluded before and which now is part of the RECORD and which I will be distributing with the help of my colleagues at the doorways at the end of the debate in this issue.

The letter from the Justice Department in which the presidential support and Federal law enforcement endorsement are contained says, and this is the strongest statement we can make:

We feel that House action on this measure will represent the clearest test of the determination of Members to give federal law enforcement authorities the weapons we must have in order to deal effectively with narcoterrorists and renegade drug traffickers whose contempt for human life defies understanding.

There is a Federal judge who lies dead at the hands of a drug assassin. There are drug law enforcement officers who lie dead at the hands of drug dealers.

The President of the United States supports it; Members of Congress support it; and most importantly of all, the American public demands it. Let us vote "yes" on this issue.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 296, noes 112, not voting 23, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. McDade for, with Mr. Conyers against.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 374, the Gekas amendment, I was temporarily out of the Chamber and not recorded. Had I been present I would have voted "yea."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment No. 34 to be offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] is in order.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BENNETT

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BENNETT: Page 224, after line 13, insert the following:

Subtitle H—Miscellaneous Provisions

SEC. 671. TRANSFER OF CERTAIN DEPORTABLE ALIENS FROM STATE AND LOCAL PENAL FACILITIES TO FEDERAL PENAL FACILITIES.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any alien, upon conviction, who is incarcerated in a State or local penal facility for an offense, including an offense involving controlled substances, the commission of which makes such alien deportable under section 241 of the Immigration and Nationality Act and who at the time of entry into the United States did not possess an immigrant visa, shall, upon written notification by the appropriate State or local official and within thirty days of such notification, be transferred to a penal facility under the authority of the Director of the Bureau of Prisons. The Attorney General shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this section.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and seek to oppose it.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] will be recognized for 5 minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] will be recognized for 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, if adopted, aliens who enter this country without adequate immigration inspection, who are here because of international failures on the part of our Government, will be placed in Federal prisons.

The focus of this amendment is Cuban illegal aliens who came here during the Muriel boat lift in 1980 and subsequently committed crimes. Most of these crimes go to this sort of relation for their incarceration.

The amendment will put the responsibility where it belongs, on the Federal Government. As things now stand, States are bearing an unfair burden due to the foreign policy of the United States and a failure of the U.S. Government to handle these properly when they come in.

Currently, there are 834 Cuban felons in Florida jails. This is not only a problem from Florida, but it is also a problem for many other States. New York State has 225 and Texas has a large number.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Florida has a very unique situation now. We are the recipient of a large number of Cuban refugees, many of them who are supposed to be deported. Under existing law, they would be subject to deportation, but we are caught with the problem now because, of course, Cuba does not want to take these people back. It puts us in a unique situation which I think needs a law which is unique to our particular area, as well as to areas that are similarly affected.

The Federal Government does have under existing law an obligation to house these people awaiting deportation.

I think what this law does, and I compliment my friend, the gentleman from Florida, for bringing it to the attention of this body, it simply recognizes that fact and in fact mandates the Federal Government to go forward with what I consider to be its responsibility.

Florida under the law, as all of you know, as any State, has no ability to regulate the importation or deportation of people in and out of this country. Because of that we are stuck and we are a victim.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to just say that I commend the gentleman for this effort. I think this is a very good amendment.

Let me just remind my colleagues about something. Because of Florida's unique geographical position, we were the ones in 1980, at the end of 1979 and 1980, to be flooded with this refugee wave. Many of those are fine people who have taken a strong leadership role in the community. They have done good for the State. They have done good for the community.

The problem is the approximately 20,000 or so who became what was known as the deranged criminal element.

We have paid, the citizens of Florida have paid for that. The Federal Government has refused to pay for their hospitalization when they have problems with medical care and all the other problems we have been paying for, educational problems, the cost of education on us, not the Federal Government.

The one thing we ask you to reimburse us for, in all right, is what it costs us to incarcerate criminals when they commit crimes. It is a Federal responsibility.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's amendment is right on the money with a problem that is extremely serious. We in central Florida have a number of dealers who are illegal, illegally here, who are dealing in crack, which has become one of the most tremendous problems that we have. They get convicted, they sit in our jails, they await appeals and so forth, and the Immigration and Naturalization Service will not do anything about that because of the cost they say is involved to the Federal Government in removing them from the State prisons and putting them in Federal prisons as they await deportation.

Well, my word, whose problem is this? These are illegals who have no business being here in the first place. They are involved with drugs. We need to get them deported. We do not have to wait until they serve their sentence or some appeals are exhausted. They ought to be taken out of the country now.

It is our responsibility. If they are short in funds somewhere, let us move it over there. We will find the funds and worry about that as the time comes; but the pressure needs to be on to get those illegals dealing in crack and cocaine out of this country as fast as we can possibly get them out under the deportation laws as they now exist.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment is right on target and I fully support it.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that Florida has 1,900 people in this category who ought to be in Federal prisons who are in our local prisons.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I thought we had our quota of Florida amendments today, but apparently not.

This is a particularly inappropriate amendment. The amendment really is not limited to drug offenders, but is related to all who do not possess immigrant visas in this country and there may be 10,000 to 20,000 such persons. That is the estimate as to the number of aliens who have violated State law and are incarcerated in State or local jails.

Now, with this bill, we will expect to see a lot more people imprisoned in the Federal system.

Rather than help, the gentleman from Florida would dump another 10,000 to 20,000 pesons who are convicted, not of a Federal law, but of State laws into the Federal system.

I would like to briefly read a letter made available to us today from the Justice Department, signed by John R. Bolton, Assistant Attorney General. It reads:

> This is to express the grave concerns of the Department of Justice with respect to the proposed amendment which would authorize transfer of illegal aliens in State and local penal facilities to the Federal Bureau of Prisons. It simply is not realistic in the light of current conditions. The Federal inmate population today has increased from 24,000 in 1981 to 41,000.

It goes on to say:

> Consequently, Federal prisons are now overcrowded by 50 percent.
> In short, it would be simply impossible to incarcerate that number of additional offenders—

Referring to 10,000 to 20,000—> in Federal correctional facilities. In short, we believe the amendment regarding detention of aliens, combined with the existing overcrowding and an increased inmate population relating to enhanced sentencing of drug offenders, would precipitate a major crisis in the Federal prison system. Moreover, it could prove counterproductive by resulting in court ordered early releases of Federal inmates.

That is the Justice Department position.

□ 1930

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman. I thank my chairman on the committee that deals with the Bureau of Prisons for yielding, and I join him in opposing, with great respect the offeror of this particular amendment.

If I understand it correctly, it would apply to the universe of those who have entered the United States without an immigrant visa, which means students, which means business visitors, which means as many as 10 million people who enter legally but are not entering with immigrant visas. This is in addition to the very important argument that the gentleman from Wisconsin made, which is the immediate moving over to the Federal prisons of 10,000 to 15,000 to 20,000 prisoners.

I would prefer and I hope that the House might go along with the version within the immigration bill, which we believe will come to the floor this year, which deals with illegal aliens, people who are here illegally. Our bill provides reimbursement to the States for the incarceration costs of illegal aliens, and I think that that is how we ought to tailor it, but will not deal with people who might have entered legally.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I thank my colleague, and I would add that the Federal system already has 1,862 Cuban Marielitos in Atlanta in a Federal facility, overcrowded and in questionably constitutional conditions, and we would add to that crisis by this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, Federal prisons are 50 percent overcrowded now. If we require more to be transferred from State to Federal prisons, judges will order more Federal prisoners turned loose under the laws against overcrowding, and some of the ones turned loose will be criminals who should not be discharged that early.

The cost of the construction required to house these extra prisoners would be $1 billion, plus $300 million per year for personal and costs. That means this Congress would need to increase by one-half of 1 percent this year the amount that has to be cut across the board from all appropriations—nutrition, health, law enforcement, courts, FBI, education, whatever—to make up for this increase, because we do not have the money within the total outlays permitted under Gramm-Rudman.

There was a vote here on July 27 in which 223 Members voted for the Frenzel amendment. Those Members who voted for that amendment voted to cut $161 million out of some of these same programs that are being increased under this bill. Those who voted on July 27 to cut $161 million from law enforcement, $39.5 million from prisons, $30.4 million from INS, etc. are talking about adding $1½ billion today for the same programs they voted to cut.

I think Members should reflect on that inconsistency and the fact that any increase will be provided later by across the board cuts in every discretionary program.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, it was implied at least by a previous speaker that these include legal aliens, but that is not true. The language says that these aliens are deportable under the section "who at the time of entry into the United States did not possess an immigrant visa * * *." It specifically says that in the amendment. That is one reason that I had the amendment read, rather than saying forget about it. I wanted everybody to read the words that these are illegal aliens.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. In any event, the Justice Department anticipates that there are 10,000 to 20,000 individuals, convicted not of Federal but of State law, who would be affected, to complicate the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] has expired.

The gentleman from Florida. [Mr. BENNETT] has 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not have much time, so I have to be real brief.

First, these are illegal aliens, and second, they are here today because of improper entry, and so that is the Federal Government's responsibility, and it is the culpability of the Federal Government for not ousting them. They are supposed to oust them under the law, and they have not done so. So they are allowing them to be in State jails.

This is not the responsibility of the State of Florida, the State of New York, or wherever they are; this is the responsibility of the Federal Government. The Federal Government under the law is supposed to exclude them. They are supposed to get them out. They were put into State institutions because of the fact that they did State crimes, but they are illegally here.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from Florida, Mr. BENNETT.

We in Florida have been coping with the consequences of the Mariel boatlift since 1980. Florida's Gov. Bob Graham tells us there are currently 834 Mariels and 1,898 other illegal aliens who are incarcerated in Florida's State and county jails for drug-related crimes. The Mariel prisoners cost the State of Florida $8 million a year. Only $1.8 million of that amount is reimbursed by the Justice Department. We receive no reimbursement for the other illegal aliens. This is an injustice to the taxpayers of Florida and other heavily impacted States.

The Bennett amendment is very simple. It states that, upon conviction, any alien incarcerated in State or local prisons for drug or other offenses would be transferred to a Federal Bureau of Prisons facility, within 30 days of notification by State or local authorities. This action is reasonable and treats the taxpayers of Florida and other impacted State far more equitably than they have been treated in years past. Local and State taxpayers should not continue to bear the burden of the criminal justice consequences of the Mariel boatlift. The Federal Government decided to admit these individuals and the Federal Government should be responsible for maintaining convicted Mariels and illegal aliens in Federal prison facilities. I urge my colleagues to vote yes on the Bennett amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 198, noes 206, not voting 27, as follows:

Mr. PRICE changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Messrs. GINGRICH, RAHALL, BATES, BADHAM, HORTON, EMERSON, LEHMAN, of California, COELHO, and WHEAT, Mrs. BOXER, and Mr. TOWNS changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. WRIGHT] having assumed the chair, Mr. CARR. Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5484) to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops and in halting international drug traffic, to improve enforcement of Federal drug laws and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments, to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

PERMISSION FOR AMENDMENT NO. 36 TO BE OFFERED BY MR. SMITH OF FLORIDA TO H.R. 5484

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to allow amendment No. 36, scheduled to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN], as printed in the committee report, to be offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO DELETE SECTION 673 FROM AMENDMENT NO. 36 TO H.R. 5484

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the last section of amendment No. 36, section 673, be deleted from the amendment upon consideration by the body. This has been requested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I will not object.

It is my understanding that the sense-of-the-Congress provisions of this amendment are being dropped, dealing with the Attorney General and FBI and Immigration and Naturalization Service, cooperating and utilizing the existing nationwide computer capability. Is that what the gentleman is proposing?

I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, that is what we are proposing. The FBI had a problem with the use of the NCIC in certain instances, and we have agreed to work with them, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN] has requested that this section be dropped.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

OMNIBUS DRUG ENFORCEMENT EDUCATION, AND CONTROL ACT OF 1986

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 541 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 5484.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 5484) to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops and in halting international drug traffic, to improve enforcement of Federal drug laws and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments, to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts, and for other purposes, with Mr. CARR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose earlier today, consideration of amendment No. 34 had been completed. Amendment No. 35 is in order at this time.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MCCOLLUM

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subtitle H—Miscellaneous Provisions

SEC. 671. DESTRUCTION OF SEIZED CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES.

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(f)",

(2) by inserting "or II" after "schedule I" in each place it appears, and

(3) by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(2) All controlled substances in schedule I or II that are seized for violation of this title may be destroyed as soon as possible subsequent to seizure after being photographed, weighed, and representatively sampled for evidentiary purposes.".

Mr. McCOLLUM (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I asked unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] will be recognized for 5 minutes and a Member opposed will be recognized for 5 minutes.

The Chairman recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, what this amendment does, and I believe we can resolve this in a moment with a colloquy with the chairman of my subcommittee; what this amendment does is to clarify that seized controlled substances can be destroyed before trial if the evidence is going forward and all of the parties involved on the prosecution and the court agree to do that.

I think it is a very important thing that the Government have control of that fact. They do not quite now.

All we need to try a case is a small sample of a substance whether it be cocaine, marijuana, heroin, some other drug that we are trying a drug case on. Unfortunately, a lot of people dispute that fact in terms of what the law allows them to destroy and to not destroy. We are seeing stockpiled in our country huge quantities of narcotics that are really quite dangerous to have stored in this large amount in certain locations within the Government. Right now what we are attempting to do in this amendment is to clarify the law to make sure that anything more than the necessary small quantity for use at trial, can go ahead and be destroyed while we are awaiting trial, if they are controlled substances in class I or class II.

The summary forfeiture and expedient destruction of schedule I and schedule II substances authorized by the amendment would substantially alleviate a big problem by DEA. The indefinite storage of these substances in vaults at present is occurring; it constitutes a security risk of a critical portion of these drugs set-aside, and it is an enormous cost to the taxpayers.

We also are clarifying which ones from the schedules are included. I do not think this is controversial. We need the authority.

I would be glad, if the gentleman would seek it, to yield to my distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime, Mr. HUGHES, so that we can have a colloquy and clarify this amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCOLLUM. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good amendment. We have so much contraband stored it is just unimaginable. It is costing us millions of dollars in security, it is being stolen, pilfered. We do not really have to keep all this contraband in bulk. It varies from vicinage to vicinage, it depends upon local conditions, local attitude with regard to what is kept and what is destroyed. It makes sense to destroy it. The only question I have is I would assume when we talk in terms of representative sample we are talking about a sufficient quantity that we can do a reanalysis, if need be, if there is another trial, for instance, both by the prosecution and the defense, so that we have sufficient quantities of the contraband that would serve as well in the event of a retrial.

Mr. McCOLLUM. The gentleman is absolutely correct, that is the intent of the author of this amendment, and we would not want to do anything less.

Mr. HUGHES. I would urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McCOLLUM. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ENGLISH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman from Florida. I think this is a good amendment. It will save us a great deal in the form of storage, and as the gentleman well knows, this has become a tremendous problem as far as the volume of contraband.

So it definitely is an excellent amendment, and I certainly want to commend him.

Mr. McCOLLUM. I thank the gentleman, and I will retire at this point asking my colleagues to vote for the amendment. I do not think it is a problem, but it is an opportunity to correct a flaw.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there a Member opposed to the amendment? If not, all time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment No. 36 to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN] will, by the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered into, be offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SMITH OF FLORIDA

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follow:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Florida: Page 224, after line 13, insert the following:

Subtitle H—Miscellaneious Provisions

SEC. 671. REQUIRING PROMPT INS RESPONSE TO INQUIRIES OF LOCAL OFFICIALS CONCERNING ILLEGAL ALIENS ARRESTED FOR DRUG-RELATED VIOLATIONS.

Section 287 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1357) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d) In the case of an alien who is arrested by a Federal, State, or local law enforcement official for a violation of any law relating to controlled substances, if the official (or another official)—

"(1) has reason to believe that the alien may not have been lawfully admitted to the United States or otherwise is not lawfully present in the United States,

"(2) expeditiously informs an appropriate officer or employee of the Service authorized and designated by the Attorney General of the arrest and of facts concerning the status of the alien, and

"(3) requests the Service to determine promptly whether or not to issue a detainer to detain the alien, the officer or employee of the Service shall promptly determine whether or not to issue such a detainer. If such a detainer is issued and the alien is not otherwise detained by Federal, State, or local officials, the Attorney General shall effectively and expeditiously take custody of the alien.".

SEC. 672. PILOT PROGRAM TO IMPROVE INS RESPONSE TIME TO LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICIALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—From the sums appropriated to carry out this Act, the Attorney General, through the Investigative Division of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, shall provide a pilot program in 4 cities to establish or improve the computer capabilities of the local offices of the Service and of local law enforcement agencies to respond to inquiries concerning aliens who have been arrested or convicted for, or are the subject to criminal investigation relating to, a violation of any law relating to controlled substances. The Attorney General shall select cities in a manner that provides special consideration for cities located near the land borders of the United States and for large cities which have major concentrations of aliens. Some of the sums made available under the pilot program shall be used to increase the personnel level of the Investigative Division.

(b) EVALUATION.—At the end of the first year of the pilot program, the Attorney General shall provide for an evaluation of the effectiveness of the program and shall report to Congress on such evaluation and on whether the pilot program should be extended or expanded.

Mr. SMITH of Florida (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, let me just say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN] is not here to offer his own amendment because of a family matter which necessitated his return to his home district.

Please allow me to read into the RECORD the statement of the author of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to introduce an amendment to the omnibus drug bill which will further close the gap in our Nation's defenses against narcotics.

I was a teacher before being given the privilege to serve in the United States Congress. I have seen the effects narcotics have on young minds and the waste of future potential at the hands of pushers.

Often, those dealing drugs have entered this country illegally and show absolutely no fear of United States law. This is because those agencies charged with handling this particular problem are presently incapable of meeting the challenge.

My amendment will help to alleviate this problem. It serves to enhance the performance of the Immigration and Naturalization Service's Investigative Branch in its battle against illegal aliens who use our streets to peddle death.

It addresses local law enforcement complaints concerning the INS' inability to issue a judgement on a suspect's citizenship status fast enough to allow the authorities to continue to detain him.

In a one month period in New York City, 724 cases involving crimes of varying degree were referred to the INS's District Office for status verification. After 8 weeks, 286 of these were dismissed by the District Office as not being serious enough to bother with and 325 were still awaiting initial action.

Obviously, the suspect cannot be held indefinitely, pending the issuance of an INS detainer. Quite often, an individual who is eventually found to have entered the United States illegally has already been set free. But you can rest assured that he will be back in business somewhere else and ruining somebody else's future.

My amendment requires the INS to respond quickly to an inquiry by a local law enforcement agency and make a determination as to the status of the suspect. If the individual is determined to be an illegal alien the INS must take the necessary actions to detain the suspect and process the case.

I, with the assistance of the distinguished Majority Leader, propose a pilot program to establish or improve the computer capabilities of the local INS offices and the local law enforcement agencies. According to the General Accounting Office, such a program would immediately reduce by 30 percent those suspects prematurely released for lack of identification.

The program will run in four municipalities, chosen by the Attorney General with special consideration for larger cities with large immigrant populations and those cities which are located near or on national borders. At the end of a one year period, the Attorney General shall report to Congress on the effectiveness of the program.

The effort underway is tantamount to a life or death struggle for the health of our Nation. All of the provisions in the Omnibus legislation address a crucial area in this battle. My amendment ensures that fewer of the guilty persons slip through the cracks in the system. I urge the acceptance of this amendment and commend all of my colleagues who have chosen to take a leading role in this campaign.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment being offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN].

I had drafted a similar amendment that seeks to accomplish the same thing: Ensuring that aliens convicted of drug crimes are deported as expeditiously as possible.

I want to remind the committee of action that Congress took just 1 year ago. Under section 132 of the State Department authorization, the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board was to agree on uniform guidelines that would permit the sharing of information on foreign drug traffickers to ensure that they are not permitted to legally enter the United States. The State Department was to share with DEA and Customs information on all drug arrests of foreign nationals in the United States so that information may be communicated to our embassies that issue visas.

Under the law, the Foreign Affairs Committee should have received 7 months ago a report on steps taken to implement that section. As chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee's Task Force on International Narcotics Control, I still am waiting for this report.

The lack of internal communication within the Justice Department and the lack of coordination by the Drug Enforcement Policy Board disturb me greatly. How can we expect a coordinated policy when the Department of Justice itself is so disorganized?

I use this opportunity to remind the appropriate departments and agencies of their obligation under the law. We should already have had in place an information sharing program on alien drug traffickers. The footdragging must stop.

I urge the adoption of the Ackerman amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to congratulate the gentleman. It is a good amendment. If you wonder about the tie-in between illegal aliens and drug trafficking what that tie-in is, take a look at the report of the INS to the Senate Appropriations Committee. A survey of southern California law enforcement agencies reports that 50 to 80 percent of those arrested for selling crack are believed to be illegal aliens.

So obviously there is a very definite tie-in.

This is a good amendment, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming the balance of my time, let me just say this: we have so many severe problems in this country that it is very difficult to do something about. This one is a problem that we can do something about. With the sophisticated computer technology that we have today, it is an absolute crime that we cannot get information on suspected drug dealers who are illegal aliens from the INS. We are waiting at the Foreign Affairs Committee for 7 months for a report that was mandated to be filed by the INS on the upgrading of this equipment. This is a very good amendment. I commend Mr. ACKERMAN. I joined him before in offering it; I join him now in offering it, and I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAZZOLI. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I appreciate what the gentleman said. I certainly have no philosophic problem with what the gentleman offers, but I would just ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] has expired.

Is there any Member who opposes the amendment?

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] is recognized for 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI].

Mr. MAZZOLI. I appreciate my friend from California taking the time. Because I think it is important to at least talk about this amendment. Whether we have a vote on it is conjectural. But I would just, using my friend's time, direct a question to my friend from Florida.

I think it is well and good to suggest that the INS is taking time, too much time in responding to the inquiries of State and local law enforcement officials, and as you say from your vantage point on the Foreign Affairs Committee, taking too much time to produce a report.

But the reason they are taking too much time is they do not have the people, they do not have the money, they do not have the resources.

So I may respectfully ask, how does the Ackerman amendment, which imposes additional responsibilities on the INS, deal with their lack of resources? Therefore, does it give them resources to deal with the problem?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNGREN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Immigration, on which I have the pleasure to serve, and I have great admiration for him, he is well aware of the answer. We have not put in the additional resources. This only creates a pilot program to see if within the current confines of their budgetary limitations and with the personnel they have on hand they can create a system. If that system is viable, I know the chairman, joined by me and many others, will be there to once again do what this administration has frankly not been really willing to do, and that is put significant resources into the INS to do the job. I urge my colleagues to remember that if this pilot program works, that is what we intend to do.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Would my friend from California yield?

Mr. LUNGREN. I would yield again to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI].

Mr. MAZZOLI. I appreciate what my friend says about the pilot program. I think the Ackerman amendment has another section which requires the INS to take into immediate custody all aliens who are here illegally, unless those State or local law enforcement officials have a detainer on that illegal alien. I think the GAO report, which I have had a chance to glance at, dealing with the city of New York suggests that under the current situation the INS does not have the people to allow them to make these immediate investigations of the bona fides of the individuals. Yet the Ackerman amendment demands that that be done. I wondered how that is going to be handled, and where the resources will come from.

Mr. LUNGREN. Let me reclaim my time just to say that I do oppose the amendment. I am not going to call for a vote on it. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] came over and asked if I would not object to the unanimous consent request to offer the amendment because of the circumstances of the author. I acceded to that demand although I must say I do have some problems with it for the very same reasons established by the chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky.

I think we would all like this to be done. But the language in here is mandatory. It gives no discretion to the Attorney General or to the Commissioner of the INS. It does not say "if you have the resources, do it." It says, "It shall be done," which suggests to me that with the limited resources they have now they are going to have to take them from somewhere else.

I will tell you in my own area of Los Angeles for the present time those of us who are Members of Congress making an inquiry of the INS of the Los Angeles office get to call them once every 62 days. On the 62d day they will answer my inquiries. Any other time a constituent says to me, "Can you help me with a problem?" I have to say, "Yes, wait until my 62d day and I can inquire." That is just one manifestation of the fact they do not have enough personnel.

I would like to say that this administration has put more increased resources into the INS than any previous administration but in spite of that we still do not have enough. It is a worthy goal. I do not think it is totally practical, but I do not think this is the place to fight it out. We will probably work it out in conference.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNGREN. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman's concerns about that.

Let me point out two things: one, the INS investigations division has been slashed from 970 positions in 1976 down to only 690 positions this year.

The alien problem, especially as it relates to drug smuggling, deserves a much higher priority than it has.

Mr. LUNGREN. Reclaiming my time——

Mr. SMITH of Florida. If the gentleman would just allow me to finish——

Mr. LUNGREN. Let me say in response that the administration did take into account some of the Grace Commission recommendations to take some of the administrative positions out.

In addition, we added approximately 850 new personnel, and by eliminating about 150 of the administrative side, a total of 1,000 new personnel, all most all in border patrol. I understand that we need more in the INS.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNGREN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is well aware that the Congress has been fully supportive of the effort to put more into the INS, because we know that that will help us clear some of these problems.

We are asking now that we start a program. The mere fact that we do not have all of the resources that we need should not prevent us from starting down the road to cure a problem that we know exists.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment No. 37 is in order.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DAUB

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

SEC. 702. LIMITATION ON REISSUANCE OF AIRMAN CERTIFICATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (2) of section 602(b) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. 1422(b)(2)) is amended by striking subparagraphs (A) and (B) and inserting the following:

"(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Administrator shall not issue an airman certificate to any person whose airman certificate has been revoked under subsection (c) of section 609 of this title.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (C) of section 602(b) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 is redesignated as subparagraph (B).

Page 224, line 20, strike out "702" and insert in lieu thereof "703".

Mr. DAUB (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I will not take all of the time, but I do want to bring to the attention of my colleagues this amendment in very clear form.

What the pilots do who have a license to fly in the United States, if they are involved in the trafficking into this country any of the drugs that we have talked a long time about yesterday and today, is, in my judgment, flying death not to a corn field or a wheat field somewhere, not to an aviation airstrip somewhere, but these pilots are flying death into the school yards of America. And if they get caught, they might get their license suspended for 1 year to 5 years. And if they are put into prison and rehabilitated citizens and they get out, they can get that license to fly in America back again.

I think, particularly considering the fact that we are now going to employ the Army on our borders, use evidence obtained without a warrant in a court of law, imprison for life those over 21 who have been convicted for a second time of selling drugs to children or near a school, and consider the death penalty, that this is one other additional step, certainly not nearly as drastic one might argue as putting that pilot in jail for life, that we could do to improve this bill.

It certainly conforms with the procedural standards that are now contained within Public Law 98-499 that was reported well and is in the law now, as amended in 1984 by the Public works and Transportation Committee.

I would hope that my colleagues would agree to this amendment. I think it improves the bill, and I ask for a supportive vote by my colleagues.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAUB. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the gentleman for his amendment.

I remember 4 or 5 years ago one of the first visits I made to an air support branch of the Customs Service. They made the point to me that is one thing to take away the airplane; it is something else if we can finally take away the license.

I think there is no question that any person who uses that license to go out and fly loads of drugs into this Nation, I think he deserves to have his license jerked and jerked permanently.

I think the bottom line comes down to the fact that there is a lot of temptation out there. I remember a few years ago, and I suppose it is probably even more today, that the price that a pilot could get flying a load from Colombia into south Florida was around $150,000. And for someone who may be an out-of-work airline pilot or something of that sort, he may be tempted by that. If he knows that he is risking the loss of that license entirely, I think he will think long and hard before he runs that risk. So I commend the gentleman.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Oklahoma. [Mr. ENGLISH]. I know of no one who has labored harder on this subject in his subcommittee for over 5 years now to elevate the body's awareness and to bring these matters to our attention. I thank the gentleman for his support.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman I rise in oppositon to the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from Nebraska. I admit that I rise opposed somewhat reluctantly because generally I support efforts to increase the penalties for drug smuggling. But in this particular area of aviation law, as the gentleman who chairs the Aviation Subcommittee I believe the effort to increase penalties could very well be counterproductive in the war on drugs.

The amendment would require that if a person were convicted of an aviation drug smuggling offense, that person would be permanently banned for holding an airman's certificate. Present law bans the issuance of an airman's certificate for up to 5 years if a person is convicted of a drug smuggling offense. This penalty was established by the Congress in the Aviation Drug Smuggling Act just 2 years ago. At that time, we considered whether a lifetime ban was preferable, and we decided it was not.

The principle program with the amendment is that it would remove important prosecutorial and administrative discretion. When law enforcement authorities have caught a pilot involved in drug smuggling, a mandatory lifetime revocation of that pilot's license would greatly reduce the flexibility of the authorities to induce the pilot to present evidence against other, more important drug smugglers. So with this amendment we may be foregoing significant opportunities to catch the bigger fish.

Under present law, the FAA Administrator is explicitly authorized to reduce the penalty of revocation if he or she deems it in the public interest. This amendment would remove that authority and require that the full penalty be imposed even when it was counter to the public interest and the fight against drug smuggling.

I am also opposed to the amendment because it belies the concept of possible rehabilitation of a drug violator by making an important penalty a lifetime penalty. I believe we need to be tough on pilots involved in smuggling. But if we take away a pilot's license for life, we should be clear that we are not taking away his or her unique skills, and a pilot would continue to possess these skills after a jail term. But that pilot, without a pilot's license, could only use his or her skills in an illegitimate or illegal manner. So with the amendment we would be foreclosing the opportunity of someone to use his or her skills ever again in a legitimate way providing a strong incentive to continue in illegal drug smuggling after they are back out on the street. Again, with this amendment we would only take away their license, not their skills. They could continue to use these skills without a license, meaning they could only be used in an illegitimate or illegal manner.

Again, I support strong drug penalties, but we need to be careful that in this effort, we do not actually make the situation worse or take away important law enforcement tools.

I urge my colleagues to vote no on this amendment.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment.

I realize that the penalty appears to be harsh, but I cannot think of any traffickers who are more difficult to apprehend than the aviators. Certainly most of the contraband, the drugs, coming into the United States is coming by air.

It just seems to me that if airmen want to resist the temptation of the millions of dollars that are out there, we have to find something of value that he or she would treasure, and I cannot think of anything more than their certificate to fly.

It seems to me that if we are looking for cooperation once arrested, that these people besides having a revocation of license, should be facing a substantial jail term. This incentive not to go to jail should be enough for them to cooperate in terms, as the chairman of the subcommittee said, getting bigger fish. But I cannot think of anything that is too harsh for those people who violate the privilege of flying and are bringing drugs knowingly into the United States.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

I thank my good friend for his supportive remarks.

I want to assure my good friend and person with whom I served on the Public Works and Transportation Committee, and I know of his diligent work on this particular section of the law, that the prosecutor still has the discretion and the FAA Administrator still has the discretion to use the pilot, if they seek to get him to confess and help them to get the names of those higher up in a trafficking scheme, still has the discretion not to bring suit and/or not to prosecute.

The other side of it, precedurally, is that in fact the license is not actually taken away for a lifetime until a conviction does occur. So I think there is plenty of room to protect the gentleman's concerns. I do understand them and appreciate them being raised and made a part of the record.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I want to urge my colleagues to adopt this amendment. I think it is an important and appropriate step.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the next amendment in order is amendment No. 38.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CHANDLER

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHANDLER:

Page 231, line 14, insert "and" after the semicolon.

Page 231, line 16, strike out the semicolon and insert in lieu thereof a period.

Page 233, line 23, insert "and" after the semicolon.

Page 233, line 25, strike out "; and" and insert in lieu thereof a period.

Page 245, strike out line 24 and all that follows through page 248, line 4 (and redesignate the succeeding section accordingly).

Mr. CHANDLER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD, and I also ask unanimous consent that the record show that this amendment is being offered by myself and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is to title VIII of the education section of the bill. I want to say from the outset this is not a cut in funding. It is not a cut whatsoever. What the bill does is it mandates that 10 percent of the funds that are allocated for education, 10 percent of those funds would be devoted to grants for higher education institutions. This amendment strikes that requirement. That is all that it does. It simply says that the Secretary of Education does not have to devote 10 percent of whatever funds are appropriated eventually to higher education.

I want to emphasize that we are dealing here with very limited funds. Three hundred and fifty million dollars are authorized. I think that it is very likely it will be less than that that is appropriated. We ought to target those resources where it will do the most good.

When I was home for the recess, I conducted a meeting with law enforcement officers, educators, people who are experts in treatment and the overwhelming response that they gave me to where would we be wisest to devote our resources, the limited resources that will be made available in this bill was to the young. In fact, they said, "If you are dealing with junior and high school, let alone college, you are probably too late."

The spirit of this amendment is to address that problem and to say let us take those precious resources that we do have and spend them where they will do the most good.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment the gentleman from Minnesota and I are offering to title VIII, the education title to H.R. 5484, would delete from the bill the requirement that the Secretary of Education award to institutions of higher education 10 percent of the funds available each year.

It is my view that the funds authorized under this title should be reserved for drug education and prevention efforts at the elementary and secondary level. The U.S. Department of Education, researchers, and school officials are indicating that attitudes toward drugs are being developed at an increasingly early age. Initial experiences with drugs, such as marijuana, are also taking place at a very early age.

A 1983 Weekly Reader survey showed that 25 percent of fourth graders reported pressure to try alcohol and marijuana and 50 percent of seventh graders reported pressure to try marijuana. Further the Education Department indicates that between 1984 and 1985 61 percent of high school seniors have at least tried an illicit drug, with cocaine reportedly used at least once in the last year by 13 percent of 1985 seniors. The percent of seniors reporting that they used cocaine in the last year more than doubled between 1975 and 1985.

I refer to these statistics for the purpose of focusing the attention of this body on the need to be judicious in the expenditure of funds under title VIII of this legislation. I believe we should target the drug education and prevention moneys where they can be most effective—that is with the younger students. It is at this level where a truly lasting impact can be made on our youngsters—while they are still developing habits and attitudes toward all aspects of life.

This, of course, does not prevent postsecondary institutions from establishing their own policies and controls to establish and maintain an antidrug learning environment. Many already have such policies and controls. Others are in the process of developing them.

Finally, I do not believe that setting aside 10 percent of the available education funds would be likely to have an impact upon college and university students. A stricter enforcement of existing policies at the postsecondary level could, however, have a major impact. Students at this level are much more likely to understand the consequences of their actions than those in the elementary and secondary schools.

Again, this amendment is designed to better target the funds available in the education title to this bill. Let's do a thorough job of educating our children about drugs at an early age—when it can make a difference. This amendment would not reduce authorization levels, but would simply eliminate the 10 percent requirement for postsecondary schools.

I urge the adoption of this bipartisan amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

Mr. PENNY. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to encourage my colleagues to support the Chandler-Penny amendment.

The amendment addresses the crucial need to direct drug education programs where they can do the most good: among our younger students. It accomplishes this by omitting from the bill the requirement that 10 percent of the funds for education programs be awarded to postsecondary schools.

Mr. Chairman, during the Education and Labor Committee's consideration of the bill, several members—myself included—raised the concern that the proper focus of education efforts to stem our drug problem is among younger students not college and university students.

Study after study shows that drug use is increasingly a problem in the primary school grades. A recent Department of Education study indicates that between 1984 and 1985 61 percent of high school seniors have at least tried an illicit drug, with cocaine reportedly used at least once by 13 percent of 1985 seniors. The percent of seniors reporting that they used cocaine more than doubled between 1975 and 1985. It is even more disturbing to me that a 1983 Weekly Reader study found that 25 percent of fourth graders have used or have felt peer pressure to try marijuana.

I refer to these statistics for the purpose of focusing the attention of the House on the need to use those funds provided for in the bill in an effective manner. We should target drug education and prevention funding where prevention has its best chance—that is with the younger students. It is at the elementary and secondary school level where a truly lasting impact can be made in our effort to get our children to say no to drugs.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that setting aside 10 percent of the education funds in this bill would have an impact on college and university students. First of all, it will not reach that many college campuses. Ten percent of the money set aside here amounts to a very small allocation, that will then be put out on a grant basis to campuses that do some good grant writing. But it will not reach very many many campuses across the country and it means that the vast majority of our campuses in America will not get access to these few dollars anyhow.

In addition, we have already encouraged in a variety of ways our colleges and our universities to more strictly enforce antidrug policies, and there is some evidence that those policies are now working. In fact, this afternoon, in the Higher Education Conference Committee, we approved language that will make it a requirement for campuses to certify that they have drug education and prevention programs in place in order for them to continue to participate in student financial aid programs. Moreover, college and university students are much more likely to understand the consequences of their actions than those in the elementary and secondary schools.

The Chandler-Penny amendment will not—let me emphasize, Mr. Chairman, will not—prevent any postsecondary institution from developing their own policies and controls to maintain an antidrug learning environment. Many already have such policies and controls. Other schools are in the process of developing them.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I remind my colleagues that preservice and inservice training of teachers and others in drug abuse education is an authorized activity at the State and local levels under the State grant program created in the bill. Nothing in this amendment will affect those funds.

Members, this amendment is only designed to better target the limited drug abuse prevention funds in the bill. Let's insure that at an early age our young children are educated on the horrors of drugs—when it can make a difference.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of the Chandler-Penny amendment.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I think the membership should know precisely what this amendment does. The Chandler-Penny amendment eliminates the allocation of funds to institutions of higher education to provide preservice and inservice teacher instruction, instruction for law enforcement officials, instruction to community leaders, parents, and Government officials.

This is a clear instance of ignoring the need for this kind of expertise and Mr. CHANDLER'S amendment would exclude this use of funds under the bill. It is simply not enough to rely on athletes and entertainment personalities to influence our youth.

They also need effective teaching which demonstrates that drugs are harmful.

The Chandler amendment would also eliminate funds for programs for drug abuse education for college students. While many students are exposed to drugs before college, others are introduced to them in college. These college students, like elementary and high school students, deserve attention in this particular proposal.

Title VIII in this bill, as reported out of the Committee on Education and Labor, is supported by the American Council on Education, the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges, the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, the Association of American Universities, the Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities, the Association of Jesuit Colleges and Universities, the Association of Urban Universities, the Council of Independent Colleges, the National Association for Equal Opportunity in Higher Education, the National Association of Schools and Colleges of the United Methodist Church, and the National Association of State Universities.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if this is a declaration of war, there should be no reason why we should exempt institutions of higher education from the mobilization.

I think it is widely supported. It was included in the proposal out of the committee by a strong vote of that committee on behalf of these institutions.

Mr. Chairman, I urge defeat of the Chandler amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to this amendment. I think it is ill-conceived and I am a little disappointed in the Members who offered it, because it is totally inconsistent with my experience with them to date. I really feel that if we had an opportunity to discuss it before they introduced it, we might well have prevailed upon them.

I should call the attention of the House to the fact that just this afternoon in the conference between the House and the Senate and the reauthorization of all the higher education programs, we accepted an amendment by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] which requires that every college or university or institution receiving any aid under higher education in its agreement with the Department of Education, that as a condition precedent to students at that campus receiving any aid or the college itself receiving any aid, they will represent to the Department that they have in place on that campus a campuswide comprehensive drug prevention program.

Now here we are just a few hours later on the floor of the House saying we are putting in the higher education bill a requirement that you will have on every campus in this country a drug program, but we do not think that the college campus is the proper place to attack the drug problem when it gets to be 9 o'clock in the evening.

Now, that is totally inconsistent. The vote on the House side today in that conference was virtually unanimous for the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN]. The Senate accepted it by unanimous action. It will be in the law and we will be telling every college in the country, even those who do not believe that they presently a drug problem, that they have got to become engaged in drug education, that that is a condition for their continued eligibility for Federal aid.

Then this evening we have the proponents of this amendment saying the college campus is the wrong place to be teaching about drugs. How do you teach drug education teachers who are going to go into the schools that they are talking about here? Where are they taught? They are not taught in the elementary and secondary schools. They are taught on the college campus.

How do you teach law enforcement people to conduct courses in drug use prevention? You take them to workshops on college campuses.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CHANDLER].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. COLEMAN OF MISSOURI

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Page 233, after line 7, insert the following new sectioon (and redesignate the subsequent sections accordingly):

SEC. 804. ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL TRUST FOR DRUG-FREE YOUTH.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—In order to encourage private gifts of real and personal property to assist the Secretary in carrying out the national programs of drug abuse research, education, and prevention under section 831 and the activities of the Advisory Council under section 803, there is hereby established a charitable, nonprofit, and nonpartisan corporation to be known as the National Trust for Drug Free Youth.

(b) BOARD OF DIRECTORS.—The National Trust for Drug-Free Youth shall be under the general direction of a Board of Directors. The overall priorities, policies, and goals of the National Trust shall be determined by the Board in consultation with the Secretary. The Board shall coordinate the activities of the National Trust for Drug-Free Youth with the Secretary. The Board shall be composed of three members appointed as follows:

(1) one member shall be appointed by the President;

(2) one member shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and

(3) one member shall be appointed by the Majority Leader of the Senate.

(c) PRINCIPAL OFFICE.—The National Trust shall have its principal office in the District of Columbia and for the purposes of venue in civil actions shall be considered an inhabitant and resident of the District.

(d) GENERAL POWERS.—The National Trust shall have the following general powers:

(1) to have succession until dissolved by Act of Congress, in which event title to the properties of the National Trust, both real and personal shall, insofar as consistent with existing contractual obligations and subject to all other legally enforceable claims or demands by or against the National Trust, pass to and become vested in the United States of America;

(2) to adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal which shall be judicially noticed;

(3) to sue and be sued, complain and defend in any court of competent jurisdiction;

(4) to adopt and establish such bylaws, rules, and regulations, not inconsistent with the laws of the United States or any State, as the Board considers necessary for the administration of its functions, including among other matter, bylaws, rules, and regulations governing administration of corporate funds;

(5) to accept, hold, and administer gifts and bequests of money, securities, or other personal property of whatsoever character, absolutely or on trust, for the purposes for which the National Trust is created;

(6) to sell, exchange, or otherwise dispose of as it may determine from time to time the moneys, securities, or other gifts given or bequeathed to it;

(7) to appoint and prescribe the duties of such officers, agents, and employees as may be necessary to carry out its functions, and to fix and pay such compensation to them for their services as the National Trust is created; and

(8) to audit the financial records of the corporation.

(e) LIMITATIONS.—The National Trust shall not have authority—

(1) to issue shares or stock or declare or pay dividends; or

(2) to loan funds to its officers or directors.

(f) REPORTS.—The Board shall submit an annual report and independent audit to the Congress and the President concerning the expenditure of funds under the National Trust.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This amendment creates a national trust for drug-free youth which will serve as a catalyst and a vehicle for people to contribute their individual funds, as well as corporate funds, to a fund which will help defray the expenses of the educational drug prevention section of this bill.

It is a nonprofit corporation, a nonpartisan corporation created now by Congress which will be created by three people. The President will appoint one member, the Speaker of the House will appoint another member, and the majortiy leader of the other body will appoint a member.

These people, in conjunction with the Secretary of Education, will embark on a fundraising effort in this Nation, I think, very similar to what we have seen happen with the Statue of Liberty, where Americans have contributed well over a quarter of a billion dollars to aid in the glorification of our past.

I think the American public is willing to make a tremendous contribution, a financial commitment to help secure the future of this Nation. So the drug-free youth trust fund will be set up under this amendment.

I think it is a good idea and one which, very frankly, I think has very widespread support in that regard.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from California, the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have indicated acceptance of the amendment. I think it is an excellent amendment. I know of no opposition to the amendment and I commend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] for offering it.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman for his amendment and urge its strong support. I point out that there are organizations very similar to what the gentleman is proposing here in existence in several of the States.

For example, there is a drug-free youth organization in California. It has been quite successful and, as a matter of fact, last year, the wives of the California delegation held a fundraising function here in Washington and raised some $50,000 on rather short notice for that organization.

I think that the gentleman is exactly right. The public will support this kind of a drive and it can have an effect in two ways. One, the money will be helpful and the involvement of people in the process will be very helpful.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN] for a colloquy with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the chairman engage with me for a minute in a colloquy?

Mr. Chairman, I note in this section with respect to the State Advisory Council on Drug Abuse Education and Prevention, I speak to page 238, that I spoke to the chairman about earlier, it has come to my attention, and a little bit too late to amend the section to specifically related to members of the boards of education of the various States, and specifically in subsection (c), speaking to officers of State and local governments, I would like to ask the chairman what his view is as to whether or not that includes members of the boards of education of the various States to be mandated to serve on this council.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of New York. Certainly, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, it was the intent, obviously, to include local boards of education. If there is any doubt as to whether or not the world "local government" does not do that, may I call attention to the fact that the rest of that section of paragraph 4 does say that the council appointed by the Governor and determined to be broadly representative of the general public certainly would include them by reference.

In addition to that, in the report of the committee, this language is included. While the legislation specifies that certain kinds of individuals who, at a minimum, must be included on such advisory committees, the States and the local education agencies are free to include others whose membership would enhance the effectiveness of the advisory committees.

I would assume that under that type of instruction, school board officials would certainly be given consideration.

The act, however, does not mandate it, but obviously it does allow them to be included and certainly in the charge to the Government that it should be broadly representative, I would certainly assume that they would be included.

Mr. MARTIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman very much for that explanation.

Mr. HAWKINS. May I also add that if, in addition to that, further clarification is needed, I assure the gentleman that in the conference, we will certainly take steps to clarify that.

Mr. MARTIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman because I feel it is very important for members of boards of education to be included.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS] is recognized for 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, this is an extraordinary provision. Are we providing money to be controlled by whom? In other words, what I am asking is, and I belong to a number of groups that are working on combatting narcotics, funding for communities that are working in this area, but it never occurred to me that we could pass a bill in Congress that would nationalize the whole effort and have it all, I suppose, going through one single conduit.

How would some of the organizations that I am already a member of, and they are rather small, I must admit, could they get in on the act or would they be competing with this new national monster?

Is there another Lee Iacocca to come forward to chair such a committee as the gentleman proposes?

Why could we not, and I know this is daring, but why could we not just let the private sector get it together and do it themselves?

I recall many lectures about getting the Government off of people's backs. They seem to have come from this side of the room more than this side of the room, but how did the Government get into the business of organizing private charitable donations?

I know we are getting desperate in this war, but this is about the last straw. I do not know how I am going to go back and tell all of the organizations, one in Highland Park, one in Conan Gardens in Detroit, that you either have to file an application for a grant application, or I do not know what the mechanism is going to be. Or let us just dissolve and get with the national movement.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONYERS. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS] has raised a number of questions that I would like to respond to.

This is not an unprecedented venture into legislation. We have the National Trust for Historic Preservation; we have a trust for national parks and resources of that nature.

I want to let the gentleman know that the effort that we are putting together here is to focus national attention on a source where people can send their money. I am talking about corporations making tremendous contributions to a national effort and also individuals. I do not think it is going to detract from the gentleman's individual efforts throughout the country; but I think it will focus attention where a lot of people have not made those contributions.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman suggesting that the Citizens Against Crime in Highland Park, MI, will be just in a friendly competition for funds with this national organization?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. If the gentleman will yield further, Mr. Chairman. Just like there are historical societies probably in every county in this country that the gentleman may feel are competing with the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

Mr. CONYERS. Then the gentleman does suggest that there will be a little friendly competition?

Then, Mr. Chairman, I will have to respectfully dissent from this unanimous consent about raising bread from the citizens to fight the war against drugs. I do not think at 9 o'clock at night that this is the safest or the most cogent hour for us to all come together and create another trust fund like that that preserves our national environment, and that rebuilt the Statue of Liberty and other funds.

I think this idea, on reflection, is all wet.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment No. 40, to be offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] is now in order.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to proceed with that amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] withdraws the amendment.

Under the rule, it is in order to recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI] for amendment No. 41.

Mr. LEWIS of California. The amendment has been withdrawn, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, it is in order to recognize the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to offer amendment No. 42.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PEPPER

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PEPPER: Page 260, line 2, strike out "$180,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$280,000,000".

Page 260, line 10, strike out "two thirds" and insert in lieu thereof "four-fifths".

Page 261, line 8, strike out "one third" and insert in lieu thereof "one-fifth".

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, a few months ago the distinguished chairman of the Select Committee on Drugs, the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], allowed me to sit with him while he was holding a hearing on the drug problem in Miami, my district.

We sat there and listened to the admiral, the head of the Coast Guard, representatives of other agencies of the Government, and civil authorities State and national, talk about the tremendous magnitude of this drug problem, of the vast quantities of drugs being brought into our country from Latin America.

As I sat there and listened to those men struggling over how to interdict these hundreds and hundreds of airplanes, these hundreds and hundreds of boats, these various other means of communication and transportation bringing these drugs into the United States.

I wondered what a magnificent task it would be for us ever to be able to interdict all of these drugs coming into our country. So I began to wonder, why are they coming here? To get the money. I began to wonder: Should we put more effort and more money behind reducing the demand? If we reduce the demand, there would not be any occasion for them to bring the drugs here. There would not be anybody to buy them.

Now I have some facts here from our Select Committee on Drugs, prepared for this discussion. For example, there are 550,000 Americans dedicated to the use of heroin. There are 5 million Americans committed to the use of cocaine. There are 20 million Americans habitually using marijuana.

Americans spend an estimated $120 billion a year on drugs. Then I found from this report, the number of treatment admissions per cocaine use in America has increased from 26,000 to 36,000 in the last year.

Only 19 percent of the money being spent for education and treatment comes from the Federal Government. Over 80 percent of the State alcohol and drug agencies identified a critical need for treatment programs for use under the age of 19.

Lastly, the resources allocated are inadequate to meet the challenge.

So I am simply saying to you, my colleagues, let us add at least $100 million more to the $280 million that is already in the program, in this bill, for education and treatment. If we dry up the demand, we will reduce the supply, you may be sure of that.

So I am asking you, will you not favorably consider an additional $100 million—let us see if it does not make some difference. Maybe we will find that we should put the impetus on education and treatment and be more effective that way than in trying to interdict this market to those who have so much to gain by bringing their illicit drugs into our market.

Mr. Chairman, today I rise in support of my amendment to increase the funds for substance abuse treatment in the omnibus drug bill under title IX. This amendment will provide an additional $100 million for drug rehabilitation to the states under a formula based on the population at risk and the relative per capita income. I believe that this is one area that was neglected during the formulation of this very important, all American bill. We know that the provision of treatment services is cost effective and a proven method of rehabilitation of drug addicts. This is extremely important since these addicts are responsible for the majority of crimes committed in our society. It has been documented that with treatment the average addict's criminal activity can be reduced by 84 percent.

Arresting people alone will not make the crime problem go away. Putting people in jail will not by itself end crime in the United States. Eventually, these people wil be back on the streets, using drugs again and returning to careers of crime to support their habit. We can stop a large portion of the crime in the United States, instead of just waging guerrilla attacks on it, by eliminating the craving for drugs that drives people into the streets to rob and kill our neighbors.

Treatment services are woefully inadequate to treat the 500,000 heroin addicts, the 4,000,000 regular users of cocaine, and the 20,000,000 regular users of marijuana in the United States. Presently, out of the estimated 24.5 million individuals who have a drug problem only 272,042 are receiving treatment. It has also been determined that only 10 percent of those actively seeking treatment are able to enroll in a program. In fact, the need for treatment centers is so great virtually every State responding to a survey indicated they required more resources. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that increasing the amount earmarked for treatment from $100 million to $200 million will provide all the resources needed in this area but it will be of significant help.

The need is so great that the cost seems low when you compare it against the benefits it will provide not only to the addicts but also to society in general. Today we are embarking on a multibillion dollar war on drugs. To be successful we must push ahead on all fronts—law enforcement, prevention, education and treatment. If our efforts on any one of these fronts are weak, we risk losing not just a battle but the whole war.

By spending now on treatment we can reduce the need for increased expenditures in the future in the other areas. For too long our country has concentrated its efforts on reducing the inflow of illegal narcotics into our country while ignoring the need to reduce the demand for the drugs within our borders. As long as people are willing to pay for drugs there will be those who are willing to provide them.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I want to urge my colleagues to vote for my amendment. The need is real. We have the chance to expand dramatically the treatment services available. We must not let this opportunity slip away.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the chairman of the Committee on Rules, as someone who has always understood how serious this problem was.

I would just like to say, for those people who think that the $100 million is a lot of money, I can tell you that for the $100 million, we can get a lot of savings.

In New York City, we got a waiting list of some 2,000 people, waiting to get into some of these treatment centers. Mr. Chairman, the tragic thing is that some of these are merely children, children that have run away from home, children that are picked up by priests and ministers in trying to help these kids; kids that are responding to hot lines, where we are paying for a hot line, and people call the hot line, and there is no place for them to go, no place for them to receive assistance.

It seems to me that if we are sending a message out that we want to help, that one of the cruelest things we could do is to get people, like when Jesse Jackson convinces the kid to come up in front of his peers and say, "I made a mistake, I'm on drugs," at least to be able to have the kid get some treatment after he recognizes that he or she has a problem.

I do not think this is costing us any money. I think in the long run it is going to save us some money, because these kids normally end up in jail.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the gentleman very much for his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 5484 and Mr. PEPPER's amendment to the bill. I am pleased to see that Members on both sides of the aisle have come together in this declaration of war on drugs in the United States. H.R. 5484 is the first comprehensive piece of legislation to reach the House floor on this issue, and I am proud to have been an original cosponsor of this historic bill.

The drug crisis has reached epidemic proportions in the United States, with the use of controlled substances increasing at alarming levels. It has been estimated that well over $100 billion will be spent on illegal drugs in the United States in 1986.

The drug problem is no doubt a national problem that requires a national response. Drug use has unfortunately become a fact of life in every segment of our society, from the elementary schools to the corporate boardrooms.

This legislation attacks the problem on several fronts, including the creation and expansion of programs that address education and prevention of substance abuse and rehabilitation for those who have already become involved with drugs. I am particularly interested in these provisions, due to the fact that they are designed to steer the next generation away from this deadly trend. Our greatest national resource is our young people, and we have a responsibility to help them to realize their full potential. This cannot happen unless they say no to drugs.

In my home State of Missouri, we have seen that the stakes are all too high where drugs are concerned. According to the Missouri Department on Probation and Parole, 65 to 70 percent of the 28,995 adults on probation and parole in Missouri were under the influence or had a chemical dependency at the time their crime was committed. Of the 10,000 people currently in Missouri's prisons, 7,500 have some type of chemical dependency.

I would also like to note that abuse of cocaine has increased dramatically in the St. Louis metropolitan area. The recovery center at Christian Hospital Northwest has said that they have witnessed an increase in cocaine addiction among their clients. Drug and Alcohol Rehabilitation and Treatment, Inc. [DART, Inc.] of St. Louis has reported the following numbers for admissions to treatment in facilities in the area as a result of cocaine dependency: 205 in 1982; 248 in 1983; 274 in 1984; 363 in 1985; and 108 for the first quarter of 1986—the projection for 1986 is 450.

As you can see, this situation must be addressed and we must invest in rehabilitation for the thousands of Americans who have become chemically dependent. Ideally, we would prefer to prevent any American from ever experiencing substance abuse; however, we have an obligation to do whatever we can to assist those trying to kick these deadly habits.

I would like to commend each of the committees that contributed to this legislation and I urge my colleagues to support this bipartisan effort to reduce drug trafficking and improve drug education and treatment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there a Member in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of our time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment No. 43 by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN] is in order at this time.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, it is in order to recognize the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BILIRAKIS] to offer amendment No. 44.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BILIRAKIS

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BILIRAKIS: Page 268, strike out line 1 and all that follows through line 19 on page 274 and redesignate part D as part C and section 920 as section 910.

Mr. BILIRAKIS (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BILIRAKIS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Chairman, I am told that my colleagues will love me so much, because I have the last amendment, that hopefully they would see fit to accept the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment is a simple one and merely seeks to strike that provision under the Energy and Commerce Committee section of the bill which would create a $650,000 commission, to investigate drug use by college athletes. The commission would also be required to investigate the impact of television on athletics and athlete recruiting practices.

Mr. Chairman, it simply does not make sense to me that we would include in an omnibus drug package a high-cost commission to study college athletic programs. Yes, we are all concerned about the use of drugs on college campuses and I have expressed my concern to every college and university president in the State of Florida. However, we can't let all of the media hype push us into irresponsible public policy decisions.

Most of the items which the new commission would study are presently being addressed by the President's Commission of the National Collegiate Athletic Association at no cost to the taxpayers. The NCAA is the appropriate body for the consideration and implementation of solutions to the problems in our university and college athletic programs. Not the Congress or a Federal commission.

Opposition to this commission was voiced by the Washington Post yesterday in an editorial which I would like to insert in the RECORD. Additionally, I recently received a letter from the Tampa-based Drug and Alcohol Health Care Services, which conducts drug rehabilitation programs for young people, stating that they feel a decision to fund a new sports commission would be an error, which I would like to insert in the RECORD.

That letter reflects a shortage of counselors due to low wages, and it tells of a substantial waiting list.

This situation isn't unique to my district; but is happening across the Nation. With such a serious shortage of counselors and facilities, it makes a lot more sense to strive to address these problems than to create a commission to study recruiting practices and the impact of television on college athletes. These commissions are getting out of hand. Just a few short weeks ago, the Energy and Commerce Committee reported out a bill to establish a boxing commission. Where is it going to end? If we don't address the needs of the children who are drug abusers now and waiting in line to be admitted to a treatment program, they may never have the opportunity to become college sports heroes. I hope my colleagues will join in supporting my amendment.

In January, the NCAA authorized drug testing for any athlete competing in the association's championship events and the 18 major-college postseason football bowl games, as well as penalties for any athlete testing positive. In addition to the NCAA's actions, each college and university can have its own drug testing programs and I am told many of them do. Had hearings been conducted on the establishment of an Advisory Commission on the Comprehensive Education of Intercollegiate Athletes these points would have been brought out. These people are trying to clean up their own houses without Government interference or tax dollars.

If my amendment is passed, we won't be neglecting college athletes. There is already included in the bill a White House Conference on Drug Abuse and Drug Trafficking Control which will have the authority to address the use of drugs by college athletes, and for that matter the use of drugs by people in the entertainment field.

The letter and article follow:

TAMPA HILLSBOROUGH COUNTY DRUG ABUSE COMPREHENSIVE COORDINATING OFFICE, INC.,
Tampa, FL, September 8, 1986.

Mr. MICHAEL BILIRAKIS,
Congress of the United States, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. BILIRAKIS: I am sending to you a letter concerning House Bill HR 5334 which addresses Federal programs for the prevention and treatment of drug abuse.

As I discussed with Sandy Handberry, it is important that you understand that the current treatment resources are stretched beyond capacity. Without additional resources, waiting lists for client treatment will continue. Last year DACCO provided services for 2,354 clients and their families.

At the last board meeting of the Florida Alcohol and Drug Abuse Association, of which I am a representative, ten government funded programs were polled in reference to their waiting lists. It was shocking to learn that more than 600 clients are currently awaiting treatment services in those programs.

Counselors who provide these services are currently being paid at an entry level salary of $12,000.00 annually. This includes counselors that have a master's level degree.

We feel that a decision to fund the new sports program would be in error until these existing inequities are addressed.

If you have any questions or if I can provide you with any additional information, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

BARBARA ROSENBERG,
Director of Administrative Services.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 10, 1986]

HANDLE THIS PACKAGE WITH CARE

The trouble with the drug problem is that there are no quick fixes. Surely, after all these years, members of Congress know that. What, then, is going on in the House this week? A mammoth bill and a set of amendments full of all sorts of proposals—some good, some doubtful and some really awful—are up for consideration. Yes, the war on narcotics is a hot political issue, but before this package is pushed through on the eve of national elections, legislators should take a deep breath, count to 10 and look critically at this legislation.

The rush to legislate began only six weeks ago when Speaker O'Neill announced a major bipartisan initiative on the drug problem. Each House committee with narcotics jurisdiction—there are at least nine—was asked to report a package of drug bills before the Labor Day recess. These bills were then rolled together into a single proposal and sent, via the Rules Committee, to the floor. It's a wish list, really. It contains a little something for everyone who has a plan for fighting drugs. Some of these ideas, such as long mandatory prison sentences for pushers, have been tried in the states and failed. Others look like window dressing. Do we really need a new White House Conference, a study by DOT on the relationship between drugs and highway safety (yes, a study) or a federal Advisory Commission on the Comprehensive Education of Intercollegiate Athletes? Then there are the "Beefing-up" proposals: more coordination, more confiscation of assets, more pressure on drug-producing countries. Is any of this in response to a thoughtful and considered analysis of what is already being done?

Some zealots believe that even this package isn't enough. They propose to offer amendments on the floor that would bring the armed forces into the law enforcement effort, create a good-faith exception to the exclusionary rule and institute a federal death penalty to deal with traffickers. The fear of more reasonable members is that in this can-you-top-this atmosphere, just about anything will be passed and quickly considered by the Senate, where a comprehensive bill was introduced yesterday.

There is no doubt that narcotics are a major national problem in our society and that much can be done to address it. Education programs seem to be making a dent, for example, and should be continued. Results will be slow in coming, but we believe they will be steady. Activities in support of this trade by banks and individuals who handle the enormous amounts of money involved must be curbed. And law enforcement must be firm, well funded and well organized. There is much that is good in the House package, but the pressures of time and politics behind this rush are dangerous. It may take some political courage to challenge any part of it, but if legislators aren't careful, an awful lot of bad law could slip through in the guise of a tough and popular assault on narcotics.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY] is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. OXLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, just briefly, all of our colleagues received a telegram from the NCAA. I would like to quote from it if I may:

No hearings were ever held on this proposal. In fact, the proposed role of the commission is in major part simply repetitive of ongoing initiatives already undertaken in the education community. Under these circumstances expenditures of $650,000 in taxpayer funds appears unwarranted.

I think that says it all. We cannot fight the drug war whether it be on campus or wherever it may be, with another commission. I would certainly hope that we do not burden this already burdensome bill right now with some more extraneous commissions that have been set up.

I would ask that the Bilirakis amendment be adopted, and we can get on with fighting the drug problem without burdening the NCAA or college athletics or anything else.

The bill capably handles the question we are dealing with, that is the drug problem on campus, as my friend from Florida pointed out, with the White House conference and with other sections of the bill.

We do not need another commission. I ask you to support the Bilirakis amendment.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LUKEN], the author of this provision.

Mr. LUKEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I urge this body to vote "no" on this amendment. Many college presidents and academicians are concerned about the students as persons and want to break out of the bonds of the NCAA, and they are pleading for our help today. This bill offers that help. If you vote for Bilirakis, you will deny that help. These college presidents say that their athletes are being systematically exploited at universities and big-time professional sports business, that these same athletes, like Len Bias, infrequently attend class, have no plans to graduate, they are consigned to jock dormitories and separated from the mainstream. They leave college, usually do not graduate, and they leave unprepared for the game of life.

These college presidents, not the NCAA, have told us that these deprived students turn to drugs to fill in the void. Yes, the NCAA made an in-house investigation in 1982 but today the scandal of players who are bought, rented and hired by the college, not to be students but to be a commercial commodity, has reached new heights.

Let us examine this NCAA. You all have letters from the NCAA. The NCAA is the one opposing this provision in the bill.

Then I have letters from college presidents, 40 of them who are supportive, individually. They are asking for our help. Is the NCAA interested in the kids? What they are interested in is the bottom line, the big-time sports business; that is what they are interested in. They are interested in the $40 million they got, the $40 million from the college basketball tournament this past February or April, I guess it was. The season does not end in February any more; it ends in April or May or June.

They got that $40 million, and did that go into any drug abuse programs? Has anybody here suggested that the NCAA has promoted any drug abuse programs? It is going to be left for this body, it is going to be left for others, it is going to be left for the presidents, the academicians who are asking for our help simply to give them the clout to strengthen their hand.

A vote for Bilirakis would be to deny those college presidents, those who are interested in the students as students, not as commodities and as athletes, a vote for Bilirakis would be a continuation of Exploitation U; the exploitation of these youth.

Let us vote against the Bilirakis amendment and end this exploitation.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, my colleagues, professional sports personalities represent role models for our youth. That is a fact. It is also a fact that college athletes enjoy a special privileged status in their schools, they are the subject of envy and admiration, they enjoy the respect of their fellow students. The tragic death of Maryland basketball star Len Bias underscored the reality of drug use on our college campuses.

The purpose of the Advisory Commission on the Comprehensive Education of Intercollegiate Athletes is to examine the prevalence of drugs in college sports and the role of colleges and universities in discouraging illegal drug use by athletes.

An objective and dispassionate assessment of this issue is overdue.

The legislation provides an appropriate forum for these activities. Please vote against the amendment that would strike out that provision, go along with the recommendation that Mr. LUKEN has made, it is an excellent one.

Mr. Chairman, I urge opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, drug use and abuse in America has reached epidemic proportions. No instant congressional panacea can cure this problem. But a well conceived and multifaceted assault on drug abuse can reverse this trend and help to unhook millions of Americans from drug dependency.

Consider, for example, that some 25 million Americans have tried cocaine and that about 2 million of these are actually addicts. No wonder that cocaine is an $11 billion a year industry or that its use resulted in the deaths of 563 people in 25 cities last year. Rural North Dakota alone accounts for about 1,000 drug arrests each year.

Perhaps even more alarming is the growing popularity of crack or cheap cocaine. Because it causes a speedy rush of exhiliration, it may spawn addiction in even greater numbers than other forms of cocaine. The director of the National Cocaine Hotline refers to crack as ". . . the dealers's dream and the user's nightmare" because of its relatively low cost and quick effect.

Police report that increased crack use has also engendered increased crime in several cities. Users become so deranged from its psychotic effects that they may perpetrate brutal crimes.

Users not only endanger others, they also harm themselves. Cocaine abusers suffer from such debilitating symptoms as emphysema-like damage to the lungs. increased heart rate and blood pressure, weight loss, and malnutrition. And as many addicts have discovered, the road to recovery is paved with broken glass.

Because of such realities of cocaine abuse—as well as the entire gamut of chemical dependency—Congress has marshalled a frontal assault on drug abuse and drug trafficking. And this action rests on the bedrock of popular support for concerted action on the part of citizens across the Nation. Without doubt, we could hope that we did not have to wait for a crisis to act vigorously. As Yale University's professor of psychiatry, Dr. David F. Musto, recently argued:

> It would be far better if a public consensus against cocaine and other seductive drugs did not have to be relearned every few generations, but there seem to be no easy ways to ensure such a lasting public attitude.

ACTION ON DRUG ABUSE

Fortunately, such a consensus is emerging in the general public and now Congress is putting these concerns into action. I rise in support of the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act as a strong effort to tackle this problem. It will help us to attack both the illegal supply of drugs and to prevent the demand for drug use in this country.

The bill will help curb the supply of drugs by increasing penalties for most drug-related offenses and by establishing a minimum 20-year jail sentence for certain forms of drug trafficking and manufacturing. Moreover, it will authorize added funds for drug enforcement, prison construction, and drug enforcement grants to local police.

Among the noteworthy enforcement improvements which I endorse is expanding the Armed Career Criminal Act to include a mandatory 15-year prison term for possession of a firearm by a person with three convictions for drug trafficking. Keeping drugs away from kids means keeping dangerous career pushers off the streets and playgrounds of America.

As daunting as the task may seem, we must also expand our efforts to cut off drugs at their source. Drug interdiction and drug crop destruction present mind-boggling tasks, when one considers that worldwide traffic in drugs involves dozens of countries, thousands of miles of unchecked borders, and thousands of tons of drug transactions. Yet, we are not without tools for the job.

This bill requires the U.S. representatives to international organizations to make drug eradication a top priority. Whenever foreign countries refuse to cooperate with us we can more easily suspend foreign aid under other provisions in the legislation.

REDUCING THE DEMAND FOR DRUGS

But as one Justice Department official informed me, we could send out the entire Air Force on drug interdiction and still fail to cut off most of the drug traffic. That is why we also need a massive campaign of drug education and prevention to dry up the demand for illegal drugs.

This bill authorize $350 million for each of the next 3 years for the development of drug abuse education programs run by State governments, local school boards, and colleges and universities. These funds will help bolster curriculum development, counseling, early referral and intervention, as well as community education.

Educators in North Dakota inform me that such efforts have played a major role in curbing and preventing drug abuse by our students. My only concern with the new progam is that resources reach local schools and communities and not get tangled up in the drug education bureaucracy.

Among the communities assisted by this bill are Indian reservations, where chemical dependency of all kinds is a major health problem. The bill will focus added resources on drug education, prevention and law enforcement. This will not only help tribal members to use their own human resources more productively, but also reduce the burden on the law enforcement officials in surrounding communities for dealing with such problems as drunk driving.

THE ILLUSION OF DRUG TESTING

While this bill moves us down the right roads of drug interdiction and drug education, some would also say that we needed expanded drug testing of employees to clean up the work place, to make it safer, and to set an example for young people.

Undoubtedly, the careful and complete use of topnotch drug tests may help ensure greater safety in such critical jobs as air traffic control, transportation, and public safety. Unfortunately for proponents, drug testing is a tricky, costly, and intrusive business.

Initial screening tests have such a rate of inaccuracy that they may miss up to 50 percent of drug users and find false drug-use indicators in 5 percent of samples. As a result, a second more sophisticated test is needed to verify the screening results. While initial tests may cost only a few dollars, the follow-on test might run as much as $100.

In other words, a valid, one-time test of Federal employees might cost over $200 million. Whether such a cost is warranted deserves careful debate and scrutiny before we rush down the path of limited and highly questionable testing programs. The same could be said for the private sector.

In addition, accuracy also requires what experts call a "chain of custody" from the time a urine sample is given until its testing land labeling. In the strictest program this also entails close observation of test subjects as they produce a urine specimen.

To expand on this debate, I include for the record a recent article entitled "Drug Testing: Open to Misuse and Many Hazards."

In closing, Mr. Chairman, we need wise investments in drug enforcement and education—as this bill provides. I support this bipartisan, comprehensive effort and urge its support by my colleagues.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 10, 1986]

DRUG TESTING: OPEN TO MISUSE AND MANY HAZARDS

(By Philip J. Hilts)

Drug testing is a tricky, technical business that under ideal circumstances can accurately identify more than half of those who have used drugs, while falsely accusing a tiny percentage.

But in practice, testing like that in use at many companies is subject to so many hazards and serious questions of misuse that it would be virtually impossible to set up a program free from significant human error and potential for fraud, according to experts.

Drug testing is being considered by the Reagan administration for a wide range of federal employees.

Experts say the greatest abuse of the technology comes in business, and that as the test become more widespread, the toll in mistakes and false accusations may be large. "I just hope there isn't too high a body count" before testing is done properly, said Theodore Shults, corporate lawyer for CompuChem, a drug-testing firm in Research Triangle Park, N.C.

By consensus, the best testing programs—and the system used by the military—first employ a screening test using a rough method, followed by an expensive and far more accurate second test. The first test misses a substantial nmber of people, perhaps as many as half, who have signs of drug use in their systems. It also falsely finds drug indicators in urine 5 percent of the time at a minimum, possibly more frequently.

Because of the high inaccuracy rate of these initial tests, the second is used to check results showing drugs present. This second test, experts say, is critical to any testing system but frequently is not used by business.

The typical sort of testing expected in a large screening program, like that being considered for federal employees, involves taking a urine sample and testing it for two to eight drugs. Some drugs can be identified for a few days after they have been taken, such as cocaine, and others for months, such as marijuana.

Factors affecting the accuracy of the final result include whether the sample was taken correctly with a witness present; whether the person tested has eaten or drunk something that will confound the test; the type of test used to take a first look for drugs; the type of test used to confirm the first result, and sloppiness such as mislabeling or contamination of the sample at any stage of the process.

The hazards of testing begin before the urine sample is taken. Subjects may be taking prescription or nonprescription drugs that can falsely give positive readings on the initial test. In addition, the amount of liquid taken before a test can affect the result.

Drugs that can cause false positives in screening for marijuana use, for example, are anti-inflammatory drugs and such common painkillers as Advil and Nuprin. In testing for amphetamines, drugs that can give false positives include diet pills, nasal decongestants and heart or asthma medication.

Accuracy also requires a clear "chain of custody" of the urine sample, witnessed at every step to prevent switching, adulterating or mislabeling.

Thus, in the strictest programs, test subjects must be closely observed while they urinate into sample bottles.

When samples are taken to the laboratory, two screening tests are most common: the radio immunoassay (RIA), and the enzyme-multiplied immunoassay technique (EMIT).

Both use methods in which special chemicals from the body's immune system, called antibodies, pick out drugs or drug-breakdown products if they are present in the urine.

Both methods are also relatively inaccurate. In a study by the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, 13 drug-testing firms were sent urine samples not knowing they were from the CDC. The study showed that results varied from zero correct to 100 percent correct in identifying drugs such as cocaine, morphine and barbiturates. Most firms were correct less than half the time.

In contrast, Cmdr. Walter Vogl, a senior policy analyst in the office of the assistant defense secretary for health affairs, said that in military testing of about 3 million people annually, the first screening tests are correct about 90 percent of the time.

Experts agree that the most important drug test is the second, confirmatory test. This must be done with a gas chromatograph mass spectrometer test, according to D. Ian MacDonald, director of the federal Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration.

While screening tests cost a few dollars a sample, this second test can cost as much as $100. Its accuracy, however, is counted by experts to be near 100 percent, not counting human errors such as mislabeling.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, we call for opposition to the Bilirakis amendment, and I yield back the balance of our time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BILIRAKIS].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 165, noes 245, not voting 21, as follows:

Messrs. BROOMFIELD, BENNETT, and FUQUA changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Mr. TAUKE changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to stress the importance of the media's role as we accelerate our efforts in combatting the national drug abuse menace. This legislation creates a Media Advisory Board which will have the crucial task of informing and hopefully educating our young people about the harmful consequences from any consumption of any hard drug.

This Media Advisory Board will bring together experts from the broadcasting and publishing industries, and from the program production and advertising communities. These are the groups who have the special knowledge and experience to shape and convey the best possible message to America's youth—that drug abuse hurts.

The formation of this panel presupposes that much more needs to be done by our Nation's media to drive home this message. But our action here in no way should be construed as ignoring or belittling the initiatives already started by many communications media. In fact, the antidrug program campaigns of which I am aware appear to be well-conceived and already may be discouraging some young people from experimenting with drugs.

For example, the National Broadcasting Co., Inc. [NBC] has been conducting antidrug abuse campaigns since 1980. NBC's first campaign was entitled "Get High on Yourself"—a theme that stressed individual self-respect to the exclusion of drug use. The most recent on-air campaign—"Just Say No"—centered on peer pressure messages, relying on consensus research which identified positive peer pressure as an effective way to fight substance abuse.

NBC and other broadcast groups are already planning new and more targetted campaigns for 1986–87. It is this kind of expertise and experience that we hope will be brought together in our media advisory panel. Because, although much has been done, much more is necessary.

I am proud to have joined my colleague, TIM WIRTH, in introducing this amendment in committee. Our Nation's media need to accelerate their efforts in helping us fight this enormous threat.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act. This legislation represents a bipartisan, comprehensive approach to one of the most serious social problems confronting America today. It replaces appealing homilies and empty rhetoric with a multifaceted attack on a problem that cannnot be solved overnight or through any one approach. Indeed, we must address the drug problem on all fronts if we are to have any hope for success so great is its dimensions.

The legislation would allocate about $1.5 billion over the next 3 years for education, Federal prison construction, aid to drug producing nations willing to join the fight against drugs, as well as assistance to State and local agencies for the same purpose. The bill also increases penalties across the board for most drug offenses, as well as creating new ones.

I. THE SCOPE OF THE PROBLEM

Drug abuse in the United States is an intensifying problem that creates huge health, economic, law enforcement and social problems. In recent years, both the accessibility and affordability of such dangerous drugs as cocaine has threatened to tear apart the nation's social fabric.

Between 1970 and 1985, arrests for drug violations have doubled from 400,000 to 800,000, according to FBI statistics, and these figures reflect only a tiny percentage of those who abuse drugs and have serious problems as a result.

The dollar value of cocaine seized at our borders by U.S. authorities increased from about $15 to $75 million between 1984 and 1985. Marijuana seizures went from about $30 to $50 million in the same period, and law enforcement officials are among the first to admit that they confiscate a tiny share of the drugs that come into the country. Estimates of that total range from $27 to $110 billion annually.

Absenteeism, accidents, and inefficiency due to the use of drugs cost American employers an estimated $33 billion per year.

A recent development of frightening proportions is the easy availability of a processed form of cocaine which is smoked, called crack. Crack is throught to be even more highly addictive than other forms of cocaine or heroin. While a gram of cocaine sells for at least $100, two small pieces of crack, or enough to get three people high can be purchased in almost any American city for about $10. Perhaps the most alarming elements of the crisis are that crack and other drugs are readily available on school yards across the land.

While crack has received the lion's share of publicity in recent months, the pervasive nature of alcohol and marijuana abuse by youngsters and adults is a continuing problem. A recent study by the National Center for Health Statistics put the national medical bill for drug abuse at $59.7 billion, while alcohol abuse accounted for $116.7 billion.

In view of the scope of the problem the bill is a small but important step in the right direction.

II. DRUG ENFORCEMENT AND PENALTIES

Those that traffic in drugs do so for profit. It is big business and if we are to have any success at all we must alter the balance between the rewards, which are often vast, and the punishment, which is often too slight to dilute the attraction of the millions that can be made in the drug trade. It is not just the suppliers, however, that must be deterred. The users, many of whom are young and impressionable, view drugs as a recreational vice, with little potential for serious harm. We must impress upon the users that this is not the case; that drugs are a serious and dangerous business and that no matter how satisfying the kick, the punishment makes it an even worse gamble than it already is.

The legislation increases the penalties for most drug-related offenses, makes it a crime to sell drugs near school grounds, which includes colleges and universities, makes it illegal to use children to manufacture or distribute drugs, and permits the Justice Department to enter into joint operations with state and local police for drug enforcement.

Although the bill increases the penalties for drug trafficking, it also acknowledge that there are differing degrees of culpability in the drug world. Thus, separate penalties are established for the biggest traffickers, with another set of penalties for other serious drug pushers. If death or bodily injury results from the manufacture or distribution of drugs, the bill mandates a prison term of 20 years to life. The bill also doubles the normal penalty for using children to distribute drugs, and establishes a 15-year mandatory sentence for possession of a firearm by an habitual drug trafficker. For those caught with small amounts of drugs, the bill increases the fines that can be imposed rather than mindlessly sending individuals off to prison when another form of deterrence would be more appropriate.

The resort to increased penalties to combat criminal activity has often been undermined by the paucity of available prison space. Needless to say, a long sentence is of little value if overcrowding of prison facilities influences prosecutors to arbitrarily drop or reduce charges or necessitates the early release of convicted felons. The legislation puts its money where its mouth is in this regard and appropriates several hundred millions for Federal prison construction. This sends a clear message to those who violate the law that these increased penalties are more than just idle threats.

Of course, increasing the Federal criminal penalties alone will not be sufficient to deter illegal drug trafficking. Historically, law enforcement in this country has been a local function, and the legislation recognizes that the full cooperation of State and local governments must be enlisted to effectively combat this problem. For this reason, the bill substantially increases the funds available for drug enforcement assistance. This, I believe, is a welcome sight in these times of budget austerity for it indicates that we are willing to spend money to combat an urgent national priority.

III. DRUG INTERDICTION

In addition to putting drug traffickers behind bars, we must increase our efforts to halt the introduction of illegal drugs into our country from overseas. The available supply of drugs can be reduced in several ways, and I am pleased that the legislation takes a broad approach to the problem.

The first line of defense against drug smuggling is the Coast Guard and the Customs Service. The legislation provides these agencies with both the increased resources and the clear sense of mission necessary to put a crimp into the huge volume of illegal drugs flowing into the United States. It also expedites the procedure under which vessels or vehicles carrying illegal drugs can be seized to secure payment of penalties; prohibits the importation of drug paraphernalia; provides greater flexibility to use drug informers; and establishes tighter reporting requirements needed to monitor the entry into the United States of vessels, vehicles, or aircraft that might be carrying illegal drugs.

No matter how much we increase the effectiveness of the Coast Guard and the Customs Service, however, it will never be sufficient as long as producing countries continue to export drugs to the United States in large quantities. The legislation attempts to deal with this problem by establishing an incentive system which rewards those nations that establish effective drug eradication programs, while penalizing those that do not.

Specifically, the bill instructs the U.S. executive directors to the multilateral development banks to oppose any financial assistance to countries that have not developed and implemented drug eradication programs. Conversely, it instructs the U.S. executive directors to support increased assistance for such eradication programs and to encourage increased lending for crop substitution programs.

Many of the drug-producing nations are extremely poor and drug crops are virtually the only source of income for millions of their inhabitants. In light of this economic reality, it will not be easy to turn them away from such activities, but we must make a start, and I believe that it is far preferable to offer positive incentives rather than negative sanctions to accomplish this.

In addition to utilizing the financial power of the multilateral development banks, the legislation also provides for trade sanctions against those countries that fail to cooperate with U.S. efforts to reduce drug trafficking, authorizes millions in new appropriations for foreign drug interdiction and eradication efforts, and permits the military, under carefully specified conditions, to assist in these operations.

Again, I prefer an approach that seeks to enlist the cooperation of foreign governments rather than one that seeks to coerce them. Moreover, I am a bit uneasy about allowing U.S. military personnel to participate in overseas drug interdiction efforts. Still, our military has enormous resources at its disposal, and to the extent that these could be used to reduce drug trafficking, this could represent a positive contribution to the fight against drugs.

IV. DRUG TREATMENT, PREVENTION AND EDUCATION

It is axiomatic in economics that demand creates supply, and until we do something to cure America's apparently insatiable appetite for illegal drugs the problem will continue, despite the most earnest enforcement and interdiction efforts. The legislation recognizes this fact and focuses on prevention, treatment and education. Funds are allocated for treatment and community services, radio and television announcements, research, training of personnel, and drug education.

It is particularly important that we target our school-age population and educate them as to the dangers of drugs if we are to have any chance of getting on top of this problem. Indeed, just a few years ago it was widely believed that cocaine was harmless, nonaddictive drug. Tragic and bitter experience has demonstrated the folly of this belief. We must develop a better way to learn the truth about drugs. Fortunately, the bill recognizes this fact, and does not rely purely on law enforcement activities, which although critical, cannot, unlike education, get at the root of the problem.

V. CONCLUSION

This legislation is but a start, but I believe it is a good one because, primarily, it does not rely on any single approach in trying to deal with a problem whose dimensions are so vast. Still, the magnitude of the problem necessitates large financial commitments to deal with it; but money alone will not be sufficient. Parents, friends, relatives, churches, schools, labor, and management must join with Government in a concerted effort to eradicate the drug problem. Individuals must assume responsibility for their own lives and actions and reject the drug culture. Government's proper role is not to supplant, but to support these efforts.

It is time to put aside the false rhetoric and recognize the drug problem for what it is—perhaps the great single threat to America's social fabric. This is why we have a Govenment in the first place, to marshall the resources necessary to deal with this extraordinary problem. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is a positive first step which deserves our wholehearted support.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5484 and this national declaration of war on drugs. H.R. 5484 should mark an end to Government complacency over the dire need to readdress aggressively the issue of illegal drugs in our society.

I support the bill's broad scope which seeks not only to reinforce our efforts abroad to interdict drugs at their source but to focus on the domestic demand. With this legislation, funds will be provided for community-based drug eradication efforts and a national advisory council will be created to deal specifically with shrinking demand and deglamorizing drugs among young Americans. In the same breath the Omnibus Antidrug Act gives the United States the power to persuade drug producing countries that it is no longer in their interest to preserve this immoral but lucrative industry. As for the notorious drug trafficker, the unscrupulous leeches which feed on the pain, suffering and ignorance of the drug user. This package dramatically stiffens mandatory penalties for pushers in the spirit of "deal drugs, go to jail."

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I reiterate my support for H.R. 5484 and commend my colleagues for working in a truly bipartisan manner to strike down the evil menace of drugs which threaten to destroy the fiber of this Nation from within.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Chairman, as a sponsor of this Omnibus Antidrug Act, I believe that we must have a comprehensive Federal antidrug abuse policy that addresses every phase of this complex problem.

The seriousness of this tragic drug epidemic has been obvious for quite some time.

The recent deaths of two famous athletes have focused national attention on the tragedy of drug abuse.

Revelations of suburban, as well as urban, drug abuse are not new. But, the recent CBS documentary showing the effect of "crack" and other drugs in our northern New Jersey communities brings the whole issue very close to home.

I have heard from distraught parents and law enforcement officials who lack the tools to stop the illegal use of drugs within their communities. Those very real needs are not fully covered within our current codes of criminal justice.

I have spoken to young people within my district who have told me that "crack" is easily obtained.

I have attended drug prevention assemblies in our schools where you could hear a pin drop as young people who were former drug abusers told their stories of thievery and prostitution to support their habits.

We know that we have a real problem.

But the actions needed to treat this disease in our society have not been as obvious.

Since 1981, the Reagan administration has been putting increasing pressure on the importation of drugs and has pressured other countries to eliminate illegal production.

As Members of Congress, we have been attempting to create a drug prevention program piecemeal for several years. Now, we have done what many of us felt was the right thing to do for quite some time. We have brought all of these individual proposals together in one bill.

This bill has strong bipartisan support and takes an across-the-board approach to our drug problems. It puts teeth in our efforts to stop drugs coming into the country and backs it up with a multibillon-dollar financial commitment.

It provides our local law enforcement officials with the tools they need to increase their efforts. And, it expands current efforts to provide treatment for those individuals who have become physically or psychologically addicted to these substances.

The bill cracks down on designer drugmakers, money launderers, and traffickers, with mandatory sentences up to life imprisonment for those contributing to drug-related deaths.

It creates a comprehensive drug education and abuse counseling network to help prevent this epidemic from spreading.

The bill also steps up Coast Guard and Customs efforts with additional personnel and equipment and calls for a Presidential study on the possible uses of National Guard forces in the antidrug fight.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support this comprehensive approach and then to go one step further to break the biggest link in the chain of drug production, delivery, and dependency.

I am referring to the organized system that exists exclusively to make big money by distributing imported, watered down, and repackaged illegal drugs for street sales.

Criminals who are making big money from this illegal enterprise and whose actions result in the death of another person deserve the most severe possible sentence. I feel the death penalty should be an option for juries in this particular instance.

I urge my colleagues to support this death penalty provision being offered as an amendment today, and strongly urge my colleagues to support this comprehensive legislation.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Chairman, during the last few weeks the media has been reporting the hype generated by both bodies of Congress over the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act, a measure which will provide the necessary armor to fight drug abuse.

Congressional concern over this issue is well founded. Drug abuse in our country has reached dangerous proportions. We have recently witnessed the cocaine-related deaths of two popular athletes. Our daily newspapers document that crack is being used, on a large scale, by all economic categories of our society.

A recent New York Times/CBS News poll indicated that two-thirds of the respondents would support an increase in taxes to jail drug sellers. While some are shocked by this poll, I think the message is extremely clear—the costs of drug abuse are taking their toll on our society, both economically—through increased medical costs, and emotionally—by draining our work force and human spirit.

In New York alone, there were 137 deaths due to cocaine use within the last year. During the 1984–85 school year, 6,000 individuals were arrested for selling illegal drugs to schoolchildren, and over 60 percent of our prison population in New York were convicted of drug- or alcohol-related charges.

I think the House should be commended for developing this legislation and bringing it to the House floor. This effort is long overdue. The omnibus antidrug measure will increase penalties for drug-related offenses and will establish a minimum 20-year jail sentence for drug trafficking and manufacturing which results in serious injury or death. Additional funds will be provided for the Drug Enforcement Administration, prison construction, and drug enforcement grants to local police. The current crime of selling drugs near school grounds would be extended to include colleges and universities, and the bill would create a new offense against using children to distribute or manufacture drugs.

In New York State, the legislation will provide funds in the form of matching grants for drug enforcement; authorize money to assist the Customs Service in the State; provide additional funding for Federal prison construction and operations; authorize several million dollars to New York's drug treatment and rehabilitation services; and additional money for our State's education and drug prevention programs.

In addition, I was pleased to see my amendment, as introduced in the Ways and Means Committee, included in the final package. My amendment will encourage individuals participating in international trade to come forward and aid the Customs Service with useful information to apprehend criminals. The proceeds of the Customs forfeiture fund will be available to reimburse private citizens for expenses incurred in assisting Customs enforcement efforts. It is my hope that the publicity surrounding these awards will generate new information and new arrests.

The menance that illegal drugs poses to our Nation has finally begun receiving the attention that it demands. Now that my colleagues in the House accept this reality, I hope our efforts will be mirrored by the other body.

Mr. FUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Omnibus Drug Enforcement and Control Act (H.R. 5484) particularly regarding the provisions that recognize the importance of Puerto Rico as one of the crucial borders of the United States. This comprehensive bill contains several measures of importance to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico which will help us to continue our longstanding fight against the substantial drug traffic which flows to and through our island from abroad.

Stemming the flow of drugs is very important to the 3.5 million American citizens of Puerto Rico since drug traffic and crime in the island have increased alarmingly during the past recent years to become the most important problem which Puerto Rico faces today. The numbers are shocking. Crime due to drug trafficking is suffocating our small island. The murder rate in 1985 was more than twice the national average and increased, in San Juan, a further 61 percent in the first months of this year. Robbery was at a level approaching twice the national average and, during the first months of 1986, increased another 44 percent in the metropolitan areas. A violent crime related to drugs is committed every 4 minutes in Puerto Rico and studies conducted at the University of Puerto Rico show that the real figures for some of these crimes can be up to 2.8 times the amount indicated in the statistics collected by the Commonweath police department. Even so, the police department estimates that the type I crimes including homicide, robbery, burglary, and theft, which are largely drug related will reach an all-time high of 118,560 in 1986 despite the fact that the size of the police department budget has increased 24 times over the 1950 level.

The U.S. attorney in Puerto Rico and the police superintendent estimate that between 70 and 85 percent of those crimes are drug related. Given this figure, it is not surprising to find that the Federal authorities alone have confiscated close to $2 billion in drugs in the past 3 years. A recent drug raid conducted less than a month ago, and code named Operation Pedestal, involved 270 Federal agents, mostly flown in from the United States. It also included more than 70 Puerto Rican agents plus our local SWAT team. That operation resulted in 62 arrests and 51 more were anticipated. The drug ring that was broken by this particular raid stretched from the Netherland Antilles, Venezuela, and Colombia to Puerto Rico, New Jersey, and Florida and carried out at least 12 so called drops. Surprisingly enough, this particular ring concerned itself only with the local market, although such a huge operation would seem too big for Puerto Rico. Upward of $3 million in property were confiscated, including 16 residences, 9 automobiles, 3 boats, and 2 airplanes.

The New York Times of August 17, writing about Operation Pedestal stated and I quote:

> Officials of the Drug Enforcement Administration say Puerto Rico is a major transshipment point for drugs, particularly marijuana and cocaine, that are bound for the United States [mainland].
> Because Puerto Rico is formally a point of entry to the United States, there are no Customs Service checks on flights bound from the Commonwealth to the United States. The Drug enforcement agency says that 80% of the Drugs that reach the island are transshipped to the United States. An official involved in the raids said only a small part of the drugs brought in by those indicted by a federal grand jury here Monday had been shipped to the United States.

If this ring accounts for only a fraction of the 20 percent of drugs that enter Puerto Rico, I shudder to think what the total volume is, considering the fact that the local addict population is estimated at 300,000.

The importance of Puerto Rico as a border, in both national and local terms, cannot be underestimated and, as the U.S. attorney in San Juan stated, crime in Puerto Rico will not decrease until we control the drug problem. He is concerned that the situation in Puerto Rico will grow worse due to the rapid inroads "crack" is making in Puerto Rico. Recently confiscated cocaine paste suggests the existence of drug-processing laboratories in Puerto Rico, something new to the island.

The importance of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico as a transshipment point is due not only to the fact that it is strategically located, that our common borders allow unrestricted and unchecked access to the mainland, but also to the gaps in the existent radar coverage of the island. The Federal Aeronautics Agency radar in Puerto Rico are mainly geared toward commercial traffic. Some controllers have been known to cooperate with the drug traffickers. As a result, those controllers were among the ones arrested recently. Using personnel common to the Puerto Rico Police Department and the National Guard, some temporary radar facilities are being operated for more than 8 hours during the day. At night, when smugglers operate, radar coverage is clearly inadequate despite our best efforts. In a recent meeting with the former special agent in charge of the Drug Enforcement Administration as well as the current special agent in charge for Customs, I was told that the most effective way to reduce drug traffic and particularly illegal flights under the 5,000-feet level, was to install an aerostat in the island. A significant portion of the hundreds of miles of coasts in Puerto Rico is inadequately monitored. In fact, top DEA and Customs officials in Puerto Rico have said to me personally that Federal agencies in Puerto Rico do not have the technical capacity to detect low-flying aircraft, particularly at the southwest coast of the island, which is the one closest to Central and South American drug sources.

Puerto Rico is one of the three major "choke" points in the fight against narcotics and its importance in stemming the flow of drugs cannot be overlooked. The Government of Puerto Rico and the Federal agents in Puerto Rico need our help. Through their concerted efforts, I am happy to announce, Interpol has decided that they will establish an office in Puerto Rico soon. However, this is not enough. We need more help. This is why I believe that in addition to the several provisions of H.R. 5484 that deal with or apply to Puerto Rico, this Congress should also express its intention that one of the seven radar aerostats provided for in title II of H.R. 5484 should be placed in Puerto Rico.

The aerostat which we are asking for U.S. Customs operations in Puerto Rico will not only benefit the 3.5 million United States citizens of Puerto Rico but all the citizens of the Virgin Islands and the Nation as a whole. We simply cannot ignore them.

We cannot solve our drug-related problem unless one of the aerostats made available under other provisions of this bill is placed in the insland. As I have said already, Puerto Rico has been recognized by the United States DEA as one of the three major entry points for illicit drugs from abroad. The United States district attorney in Puerto Rico has estimated that drugs worth billions of dollars are coming to Puerto Rico and the mainland through the island's border. Without adequate equipment, such as the aerostat, this huge gap will persist. It behooves this House to help resolve this situation.

Before concluding, I would like to thank Congressman SEIBERLING from Ohio for recognizing the need for increased radar coverage in Puerto Rico. I also want to thank the other members of the Interior Committee and of the Select Committee on Narcotics for the attention they have given to the serious crime and drug problems in Puerto Rico and for the help they have provided me in drafting the parts of this bill that deal with Puerto Rico.

I am particularly grateful for the help received from them and from the leadership in my efforts to assure that the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is given additional resources to continue the strong battle against drugs that we have been waging in the island for several years now.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, this is war. No foreign enemy, however insidious, could possibly have wrought as much destruction on our young people in peacetime as drugs have. We all all know what's happening. Lives are being lost, careers ruined, families broken, and dreams destroyed. We've had enough talk; the time has come to act. We need a comprehensive national strategy to combat drug abuse, and we need it now. That's what this omnibus drug bill is all about, and I wholeheartedly support it.

The size of the problem is truly staggering. Almost 60 percent of the world's entire population of illegal drugs ends up in the United States. That's more than 12 million tons of heroin, 65 million tons of marijuana, and 150 million tons of cocaine crossing our borders in this year alone, adding up to $120 billion in sales, more than the net sales of General Motors.

We, as Americans, and particularly as parents of teenagers, have to become more aware of the dangers of drug abuse and take action to stop it. By necessity, much of the responsibility for discouraging young people from seeking the illusory pleasures that drugs seem to offer falls on families and local communities. This omnibus drug bill, however, embodies what the Federal Government can do to see that drugs are not available to those foolish enough to seek them.

Sure this bill costs money, wars tend to do that. But we must recognize that there are both legitimate and illegitimate functions of government; the trick is to be able to tell the difference. If defending our country, enforcing our laws and saving the lives of our young people are not proper responsibilities of government, then what is? I'm going to keep on cutting the fat out of the Federal Government, but I'm going to leave the muscle alone.

The drug bill imposes mandatory sentences on drug traffickers, bans so-called designer drugs, beefs up the Drug Enforcement Agency, and gives the Government the ability to control our borders. All of this is long overdue. I'm prepared to do whatever it takes to end this national tragedy of drug abuse, and I'm sure that every tax paying citizen out there agrees with me.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman as a coauthor of the comprehensive drug bill being considered today, I rise in strong support of enactment of this important legislation. The overwhelming problem of drugs needs to be dealt with severely, efficiently and effectively.

The clock on this Nation's drug problem is not just running, for may it has already run out. The fabric of society is being eroded, and it is essential that Congress address this problem in a responsible and timely manner.

This legislation takes needed steps to increase enforcement of drug laws, toughen penalties for narcotics trafficking and improve drug abuse education, treatment and prevention programs. The bill offers a broad approach to a problem that can no longer take a backseat in our list of priorities. Our constituents recognize the drug problem as a top domestic concern, and we must not ignore their call for action.

Of the people, by the people and for the people is the best definition of our democratic form of government that I have heard. It is not just our way of life stressed and strained by the drug problem, but society itself is threatened with destruction unless we act. It is time for the Government to respond on behalf of the people.

It is clearly time for the Congress and the citizens of this Nation to join together and direct our resources and our determination toward combatting the drug problem. Hand in hand, we must work to educate, enforce, prevent and attack this problem. We can afford to do no less. The time for mitigation is over. The time for action is now.

Mr. Chairman, when the House concludes its consideration of this legislation, I trust that my colleagues will join with me in giving this measure our whole-hearted and overwhelming support.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act of 1986.

Americans have spoken loud and clear on the subject of drug trafficking and abuse: they are sick and tired of losing generation after generation of young people to illegal drugs. Americans have lost too many friends, too many neighbors, and too many children to merely stand by and watch more young lives go down the drain. The people of Connecticut, as well as the people of every State in the Nation, want strong action against drug trafficking and they want it now.

This legislation brings Congress into step with the desires of this Nation's people. This excellent legislative package assembled through a bipartisan effort of the House leadership sends a clear and distinct message to drug traffickers and pushers here and abroad: America will not complacently watch illegal drugs flow over its borders and destroy the minds and bodies of those we care most about.

I am especially pleased that this legislative initiative increases funding for drug education programs in our Nation's schools. When I introduced my own legislation to promote drug education programs in January, the Student Chemical Substance Abuse Prevention Act, I received an outpouring of response from people in eastern Connecticut who welcomed increased support for drug education programs. They firmly believe, as I do, that America's drug crisis will only be solved when young people clearly understand the hazards of illegl drug use and the many options available for treatment and rehabilitation.

The drug education provisions of this legislation, which have been carefully crafted by the Education and Labor Committee, will be particularly effective in fighting the war on drugs because State and local school districts, not the Federal Government, will be charged with developing individualized and school-specific solutions to the drug problem. Each school system has to fight its own style of war against drug abuse, and I am pleased that the Federal Government has belatedly stepped in to help them fight that war.

Despite the specific nature of each school's drug problem, there are certain truths which can be discovered about the causes of drug abuse and the most effective ways of telling young people about the hazards of using illegal drugs. By funding drug abuse education demonstration programs, my legislation and the legislation we are debating today will save the Federal Government millions of dollars by preventing reduplication of needed drug abuse research and by encouraging school systems to look at the experiences of other school systems.

I, therefore, urge my colleagues to approve this comprehensive legislation. We cannot and must not wait to act until another generation of young people are lost to drug abuse.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act and want to say how important it is, in my view, that the House is giving drug abuse priority attention. The problem of drug abuse in this country is growing. Almost 3 out of 4 young people now will try an illicit drug before they reach their mid-twenties. And despite tragic deaths demonstrating the hazards of cocaine, only 34 percent of those in twelth grade believe there is a real risk in trying cocaine—a figure reflecting practically no change since 1978. Clearly more education and prevention efforts are needed since our children are continuing to experiment with drugs.

Prevention of drug abuse begins in the home. But the Government has a critical role. This bill places emphasis on a number of fronts: Stronger penalties for those trafficking in illegal drugs, new treatment programs for those addicted to drugs, and new efforts to stem the production and distribution of drugs from foreign countries. The bill requires trade sanctions on foreign countries that are sources of illicit drugs. Denial of preferential tariff treatment or imposing added duties if a country does not cooperate with U.S. efforts to reduce drug trafficking is only common sense self defense. The bill also requires drug-producing countries to establish eradication programs as a condition of receipt of U.S. aid. And the bill adds funds and manpower to the Coast Guard and Customs service to increase the effort to stop illegal drugs from entering this country.

As a participant in the development of parts of this bill in the Energy and Commerce Committee, I want to underscore the value of one of my amendments to give priority to young people, ages 15 to 24, in establishing and conducting treatment programs. Our greatest leverage on drugs is to stop young people before they start. Young people do most of the experimenting with drugs. Over one in two high school seniors have used illicit drugs. My amendment would focus our prevention money where the problem is and where the money would be best spent.

A second amendment I authored would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to contract with the Institute of Medicine to study of the extent and adaquacy of public and private insurance coverage or other payment sources for drug and alcohol treatment. We have little information on health insurance coverage of drug rehabilitation. When seeking treatment for drug and alcohol abuse, like so many other medical problems, people need public or private insurance coverage to assist in paying for what can be expensive services. In many cases, people just assume their insurance covers drug rehabilitation, but learn that it is quite limited. If treatment programs are not covered, people are not able to break their addiction. This study will be a first step toward determining whether we have to improve coverage and if so how much.

Drug abuse is a wide ranging problem in our society and calls for a multi-faceted approach. No single committee or government agency can tackle the problem alone. Clearly, more than public relations campaigns are required. This bill is a concrete step toward effectively combining our resources to tackle and defeat drug abuse.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4584, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act, which authorizes funding for a wide variety of programs designed to strengthen the enforcement of drug laws, stem the flow of illegal drugs into the country, increase penalties for illegal drug activities, expand Federal prison facilities, and assist drug education and treatment to prevent drug abuse.

This bipartisan legislation is the product of the combined efforts of 12 House committees and incorporates all or part of 20 drug-related bills previously introduced in the House of Representatives. It is the most sweeping drug control measure ever considered by Congress, and I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this important initiative.

House consideration of this comprehensive proposal is recognition of this body's concern about the tremendous toll which the drug problem is taking on the fabric of our society. It also reflects growing sentiment throughout the country that the Federal Government should take the lead in controlling this national problem and repesents tacit acknowledgement that past and current antidrug efforts have been insufficient.

The fact of the matter is that for years Washington has bungled the battle against illegal drugs. We seem to be forever launching a new antidrug campaign which, after the initial fanfare, quickly recedes into the background, while the human cost of illegal drugs grows ever greater.

The magnitude of the drug problem in our country dictates that we can no longer tolerate occasional pronouncements of concern followed by prolonged periods of inaction. It is time to take serious, comprehensive action against the drug problem. The "war on drugs" must move from the realm of empty rhetoric to that of grim reality.

We have an opportunity to initiate such action today through passage of the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act. This legislation holds real promise for progress in the fight against drugs.

The key to this effort is the word comprehensive. For the first time, we could have an antidrug program that does not pretend the problem can be solved just by intercepting drug shipments or just by educating users or just by attacking drugs at their source.

The fact is that illegal drugs must be fought at every stage: in the countries where they originate; at points of entry into the United States where they may be interecepted; on the streets where they are sold; in the homes and schools where education against their use must be delivered; and at the clinics where their users can be rehabilitated. That is the approach embodied in the bipartisan Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act.

H.R. 5484 seeks to strengthen interdiction and eradication efforts and improve drug enforcement, education, research and education. Specifically, it would:

1. Increase penalties for various narcotics offenses and mandate a prison term of 20 years to life imprisonment for drug trafficking and manufacturing that results in serious injury or death;

2. Authorize additional funds for numerous drug-related law enforcement activities, including additional Drug Enforcement Administration [DEA] efforts, prison construction, and State and local drug enforcement assistance;

3. Increase funding for the Coast Guard to provide for more personnel and equipment to help stop the flow of illegal drugs into the country;

4. Increase Customs Service authorization to improve drug interdiction;

5. Make it easier to detect and prosecute money laundering, which is frequently used by drug traffickers to hide their illicit profits;

6. Require drug-producing countries to establish eradication programs as a condition of U.S. support for multilateral development bank aid;

7. Impose trade sanctions on drug producing or exporting nations that refuse to cooperate with U.S. antidrug efforts;

8. Provide additional funds for drug interdiction and eradication programs in foreign countries;

9. Permit U.S. agents to accompany foreign police on drug raids;

10. Authorize funding for Defense Department procurement of antidrug equipment and assign Coast Guard personnel to Navy ships to make arrests in drug smuggling areas;

11. Create grant programs for local drug education and treatment programs and fund Indian drug abuse programs;

12. Mandate Federal drug education programs and a demonstration program to determine the feasibility and cost of drug treatment under Federal health plans; and

13. Require the President to recommend a reorganization of executive agencies to better combat drug trafficking and abuse.

Mr. Speaker, there is no problem more tragic to the families it destroys, or more menacing to our society and its citizens, than drug abuse. Defeating drugs will take the combined, continuing efforts of the President, both parties in Congress and, especially, the public.

The Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act is a realistic centerpiece for this effort. I urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 5484, and I hope that the Senate will follow the House's lead on this important issue so that a comprehensive antidrug bill can be sent to the President to be signed into law this year.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 5484, the omnibus drug bill. This legislation before us today represents a comprehensive initiative which effectively addresses the issues of enforcement, prison construction, interdiction of drugs from foreign nations, and education.

This bill is broad in scope and crosses the jurisdictional lines of numerous House committees. I would like to congratulate the Speaker and the majority and minority leaders for the guidance they have given all of us on this landmark legislation.

Certainly no one needs to remind the families of those individuals who have been scarred by drug abuse of the need to take drastic action on this issue. They know the pain of a young person gone astray or of a promising life ended prematurely, due to the misuse of illegal drugs.

The American people have developed an increasing awareness of the problems associated with drug abuse. A recent New York Times survey revealed that 13 percent of all Americans believe that drug abuse is the most important problem facing the Nation today. This contrasts with only 2 percent who held this position in a similar survey in April of this year.

Mr. Chairman, these people know that the cost of drug abuse is high; both in human terms and in lost worker productivity in our Nation's businesses. They also know that use of illegal drugs in no longer isolated to urban neighborhoods or along racial lines. This has become an issue of paramount importance to every American.

Any effective drug plan must have an effective educational component, one which provides drug education at an early age. In this regard I would like to take note of the fact that the section of H.R. 5484 which was drafted by the Committee on Education and Labor includes many of the most successful provisions of the Governor's Alliance Against Drugs; a very successful State program initiated by Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the problems associated with drug abuse have no Democratic or Republican solution. The bipartisan effort that has brought this bill before us today is testimony to that fact. I would urge all of my colleagues to support H.R. 5484.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend you, the distinguished majority leader, and the various House committee chairman and ranking minority members who worked so hard to put together this comprehensive approach to the tragic problem of substance abuse in America. All Members of this body are aware of how rapidly this epidemic is spreading throughout our society. It crosses all socioeconomic, racial, ethnic, and geographic lines, and it is fitting that we address this problem in a bipartisan manner.

I am proud to have worked with the chairman of the Interior Committee, Mr. UDALL, as well as Mr. KILDEE from the Education and Labor Committee and Mr. WAXMAN from the Energy and Commerce Committee to formulate the provisions of this bill dealing with substance abuse as it occurs among native Americans. This section addresses a distinct aspect of substance abuse within our society, and I am pleased that it has been incorporated into this comprehensive legislation.

My friend from Nebraska, Mr. BEREUTER, and I have been working with the Indian community for approximately 3 years on a comprehensive approach to combat alcoholism on Indian reservations. The product of those 3 years of work is the Indian Juvenile Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Act (H.R. 1156), which was passed by both the House Education and Labor and the House Interior Committees this summer.

Three years ago, Mr. BEREUTER and I were aware that there was a serious problem with alcohol and drug abuse on America's Indian reservation. But as we get more and more involved in the issue, the scope of the problem loomed larger than either of us had ever suspected.

The problem of substance abuse among native Americans is serious across-the-board, but it is especially among Indian youth. Recent studies have indicated that at the tender age of 11, one-third of all Indian children have used alcohol with some frequency. Over and over we listened to tragic stories about young people destroying their lives by abusing drugs, alcohol, and readily available inhalants like Lysol and other cleaning fluids, paint thinners, and antifreeze.

If we ever hope to combat the problem of substance abuse on indian reservations, our single best hope is to take a preventive approach and focus our best efforts on Indian children at an early age.

Many troubling health and social problems on Indian reservations today can be directly linked to the abuse of alcohol and drugs. IHS statistics reveal that Indian youth are two times as likely to commit suicide as the general population—80 percent of those suicides are alcohol-related. Indian young people are tragically killed in automobile accidents more than twice as often as the general population—75 percent of those losses are alcohol-related. Finally, young native Americans are about 16 times more likely to die prematurely because of chronic alcoholism than the average American. This is clearly a present and growing tragedy of great proportions.

I would further point out to my colleagues the the health and social problems associated with alcohol and drug abuse only intensify later in life for the untreated substance abuser. IHS hospitals today are taxed to the limit with patients suffering from diseases directly associated with substance abuse: chronic liver disease, cirrhosis, alcoholic psychoses, and alcoholic dependence syndrome. Young mothers abusing alcohol during pregnancy have caused the incidence of Fetal Alcohol Syndrome among newborn native Americans to skyrocket, casrrying over the detrimental effects of substance abuse to the next generation of Indian children.

Administration officials have correctly stated that alcohol and substance abuse are the most serious health and social problems facing Indian people today. Despite this acknowledgement, the BIA and the IHS have assumed little responsibility in coordinating their various efforts to focus on the epidemic of drug and alcohol abuse. The IHS, for instance, has directed only one percent of its budget for substance abuse programs. H.R. 1156 clearly and emphatically calls for a coordination of Federal resources between the IHS, the BIA, the Department of Education, and other relevant programs so that Indian people can establish a specialized framework to effectively attack the scourge of drug and alcohol abuse.

The ray of hope that has continually shone throughout our discussions of this issue was the testimony of Indian people. Over and over, Indian people from all over the country indicated their desire to battle this extensive problem head-on. In a series of congressional hearings in Washington, Albuquerque, Phoenix, and Rapid City, SD, tribal officials, parents, teachers, elderly people, and, of course, young people themselves came forward to offer their positive suggestions on how we can work together to address the problem. These people are ready to fight substance abuse problems today. We owe it to them to provide an effective mechanism to use in their battle against drugs and alcohol on Indian reservations.

The Indian provisions of this bill recognize that the people who are most willing and able to combat these problems on the reservations are not far-removed Federal officials—they are the local Indian people Themselves. Our bill directs the Federal Government to identify, coordinate, and focus its resources toward preventing alcohol and drug abuse among Indian youth, through a memorandum of agreement between the IHS and the BIA. But the success of the program really will depend in large part upon the locally established Tribal Action Plan [TAP].

The legislation calls for a Tribal Coordinating Committee [TCC], which will consist of a tribal government representative, officials from the IHS service unit and the local BIA agency office, and other individuals identified in the Tribal Action Plan. The TCC will be the catalyst which will implement the Tribal Action Plan and will be responsible for ongoing review and evaluation of the Tribal Action Plan. The TCC, for example, will be the entity that will decide which local individuals will receive training in substance abuse prevention and treatment, decide how those persons can use their training most effectively in a culturally relevant program, and later evaluate that same program to assess its effectiveness.

This bill envisions that local citizens will take control of their individualized tribal programs. The TCC may, for example, explore the possibility of setting up summer youth programs at local schools to provide a constructive outlet for youthful energies. The TCC will identify school teachers, counselors, community health representatives [CHR], law enforcement officials, or other local people to receive training in prevention and treatment of alcohol and drug abuse. It will coordinate with State, local, and Federal officials to improve and expand local substance abuse treatment facilities and emergency shelters available for young native Americans.

The TCC will utilize all available State, Federal, and private funding to implement its Tribal Action Plan. The Federal Government should, as much as possible, direct existing resources and expertise toward tribal activities to combat the problem it acknowledges is the most serious health and social problem of the Indian constituency they are mandated to serve.

As the statistics I quoted earlier make clear, nothing is more costly to Indian people, in physical, mental, social, and economic terms, than the consequences of substance abuse. This situation must be addressed now, or we will ultimately have to face the health and social consequences of our neglect again and again in the years to come.

I am honored to have contributed to the Indian section of this well-crafted comprehensive bill. It is a first step, but a critical first step. This bill assumes a certain amount of dedication and cooperation from the administration, and I expect we will have that commitment. I am even more certain that local Indian people will seize this opportunity and enact a comprehensive plan of action to fight alcoholism and drug abuse on the reservations, and, with the help of Federal, State, and local officials and private sources, they will win the battle against drugs and alcohol.

Mr. Chairman, I again thank everyone who contributed to what I think is a very good piece of legislation. I strongly urge passage of the bill.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5484, the omnibus drug enforcement bill which will strengthen the enforcement of drug laws, help stem the flow of illegal drugs into the country, increase penalties for illegal drug activities, expand Federal prison facilities, and increase drug education and treatment to prevent drug abuse.

It's particularly appropriate that as schools reopen this month, we focus our attention on the drug crisis. Drugs are having a devastating effect on every community in the country, in the suburbs and rural communities which I represent, as well as our cities, large and small.

Parents certainly have cause to be concerned about the level of drug abuse in our country. The statistics, and what they bode for the future, are frightening. Last year the Drug Enforcement Administration estimated 75 tons of cocaine were smuggled into the United States. This year the estimate exceeds 150 tons. This is a national crisis, Mr. Chairman, a crisis which demands bold action and the combined efforts of Federal, State, and local officials.

That's why this bill is important, and timely. It addresses the major areas where action is needed.

First, in drug enforcement. We've heard a lot of rhetoric lately about "getting tough" on drug dealers, and drug smugglers. The plain truth is we've not been providing the resources to our enforcement personnel, and political rhetoric alone won't get the job done.

In the coming year it's estimated that as many as 8,000 smuggler aircraft will make illegal flights across our borders. Fully 60 percent of cocaine entering the United States arrives in small, private aircraft.

It's an enormous logistical problem to interdict these small, low-flying airplanes. Currently in our entire Customs Service there are only six aircraft which can intercept and follow planes, and just eight helicopters to carry law enforcement officials to arrest smugglers. And there are fewer employees in the Customs Service today than in 1980. This is in spite of the fact that narcotics trafficking has increased manyfold during the same period.

The Customs Service is obviously undermanned and underequipped and underfunded for its task.

The situation is no better at sea. Hundreds of boatloads of cocaine will arrive in south Florida from the Bahamas this year. The Customs Service and Coast Guard will be lucky to intercept 5 percent of these shipments.

It's clear that there simply has to be more and better enforcement. We've got to get control of our borders back from the drug smugglers.

This bill increases funding for the Coast Guard and Customs Service—reversing the trend of recent years. This money—$150 million in 1987 and 1988—will go directly for purchase and operation of new equipment, and will restore the military strength of the Coast Guard to 39,900, about the level it stood in 1981.

The bill, Mr. Chairman, also makes strides in the area of foreign cooperation. As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, I am pleased to have had a hand in the writing of these new provisions.

Greater efforts must be made to enlist the help of governments in those countries where drugs are grown and processed, and from which illegal shipments originate.

Some countries, unfortunately, have corrupt officials who profit by ignoring illegal drug activity. There are ways to pressure governments to get rid of these officials, and to work with our police and intelligence personnel.

Last year in Paraguay, for example, 49,000 gallons of ether, acetone, and hydrochloric acid—chemicals used in the processing of coca into cocaine—were seized as they were unloaded from Germany. It was obvious the chemicals were destined for use in an illegal drug-processing operation somewhere in South America, and United States officials were concerned that the Paraguayans would release the shipment. As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee I traveled to Paraguay and met personally with President Stroessner, and assured him of our country's grave concern that these chemicals be destroyed or returned to Germany. I subsequently transmitted to him a letter signed by over 60 of my colleagues reaffirming the urgency of this matter. As a result of this pressure, and the efforts of our Ambassador, and State Department narcotics officials, the Paraguayans did cooperate with our enforcement personnel, and the seized materials were returned to Germany.

When countries do not cooperate, we should make clear that any military or economic aid they receive will be terminated.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, as long as there is rising demand for cocaine and other drugs in our country, the supply and smuggling problem will not go away.

We've got to educate our young—before they're corrupted by drugs—of the dangers of drug use and abuse. Parents, teachers, and local police and government officials must ensure that every school child gets the message: "Say no to drugs."

In 1981, $14 million was spent in Federal funding for drug prevention and education. That figure is now $2.5 million a year, an enormous decline. This program must be revived, and reinvigorated, and made a key part of school curriculum.

This bill begins that process. Title VIII of the bill authorizes $350 million in 1987-89 for the development of drug abuse education programs run by State governments and local schools and education agencies. Some of the costs of these programs will be offset by funds seized by the Customs Service and the Justice Department form illegal drug activities.

Mr. Chairman, I look forward to working with local school systems to ensure that adequate funding is available so that each and every school in Bucks County and eastern Montgomery County in Pennsylvania has a drug education program.

H.R. 5484 is an important bill, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the most important the 99th Congress will consider. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5484. This legislation seeks to remedy a problem which has split families, drained our economy, killed innocent citizens, and undermined the credibility and effectiveness of our primary and secondary educational systems. Drugs are tearing asunder the very fabric of our society.

The fact that this bill has moved through the House more quickly than any other piece of omnibus legislation yet this year is testament to the gravity of the problem, and the need to find realistic solutions. And we have already taken the first steps toward accomplishing that.

Last month, WW launched "Operation Alliance," an initiative aimed at combating the drug traffic across the Mexican border. This initiative establishes the organizational framework, and interagency cooperation necessary to wage a war against drugs. Now, it's our turn to stand, as we must, to say that Congress believes this war on drugs must be a priority for spending. I have already made my priority clear, with the vote I cast a few weeks ago for H.R. 5161, the combined Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriation Authorization Act of 1987. Though a strong proponent of limiting spending—and I voted against most of the fiscal year 1987 appropriations bills because they do not hold the line on spending—I voted for increased spending in this bill because the money would go to the war on drugs. This spending should be a priority.

My district lies in southern Arizona, sharing more than 100 miles of border with Mexico. It is no secret that the entire Mexican border area has been a highway for drugs coming into the United States. Some of these substances originate in Mexico. Others originate in Bolivia, Colombia, and other Latin American countries. Some even originate in the Orient, and are brought through extensive networks to our southern border. It's time for us to padlock the door.

Crime—often violent crime—has historically been associated with this trafficking activity. We don't have to look beyond the borders at the tragic death of such people as our DEA officer, Enrique Salazar, to be reminded that a war is going on in our communities and on our streets. Teenagers are stabbed to death in a classroom. A cab driver is shot in the head for a few dollars that will buy one more fix. People in my communities are erecting bars on their doors and windows to protect themselves from the burglar who needs to feed his increasingly expensive habit.

A change in this dismal situation can only come about if we combine the resources of Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies. The problem is simply too massive for any one of these components to handle alone. And the stakes are too high to allow us to fail or to permit a haphazard, hit-or-miss approach to the problem.

But we must also recognize that all the money in the world won't solve this problem. As long as there is a demand for drugs, there will be individuals who are willing to take the risk to supply them. The monetary rewards are simply too great. So how do we slash the demand for drugs?

The answer is not a simple, nor quick, nor politically attractive. But, in the long run, it is our best hope to solve this problem. We must have programs in the schools, on television, in recreation centers for youth which not only alert them to the problems of drugs, but give youngsters the self-confidence to say "no" when their peers encourage them to use and abuse a substance which can only cause them harm.

That won't be easy, but we can do it. We have the experience of drunk driving to know that public attitudes about its seriousness can be changed. We need a national campaign to change attitudes about substance abuse—not for adults, but for young people when they are forming their views and making their judgments about such matters.

The answer, then, to the drug "crisis"—and it is a crisis—which confronts us today is the dual approach suggested by this legislation: On the one hand, better enforcement of tougher laws to reduce the supply of drugs; and on the other hand, greater emphasis on drug prevention, education, and rehabilitation programs that reduce the demand for drugs.

Passage of this legislation won't solve our problems with substance abuse in America. But it will help the time for action is now.

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act of 1986. As an original consponsor of this bill, I believe this is one of the most important bills to be considered by the 99th Congress.

Mr. Chairman, our Nation faces a drug epidemic which is destroying our youth, increasing the rate of violent crime and ripping apart the very fabric of our society. The time has long since passed for the Federal Government to pass a strong, comprehensive bill which will put an end to the drug trade and put drug pushers behind bars.

Drug abuse and drug trafficking in the United States is not a new problem. Thirty years ago I walked a beat as a police officer in New York City. At that time, arrests for narcotics were not uncommon. But in the past three decades, the amount of drugs coming into our country has increased thousands upon thousands of times.

Drugs now permeate every segment of our society, from the financial corridors of Wall Street to elementary schools in our neighborhoods. Cocaine, marijuana, heroin and crack are everywhere and the results are devastating. Our Nation's youth are dying, professional careers are being destroyed, and millions of law abiding citizens are living in fear of drug addicts who rob, steal and kill to satisfy their growing drug habits. We must act forcefully to put an end to this epidemic immediately.

H.R. 5484 is a dramatic step in the right direction. This bill attacks the drug menace on five fronts: eradication, interdiction, enforcement, education and treatment.

This measure toughens narcotics enforcement by increasing penalties for most drug-related offenses. In particular, the bill establishes a minimum 20 year jail sentence—up to life imprisonment—for drug trafficking and manufacturing which results in serious injury or death.

H.R. 5484 permits U.S. agents to accompany foreign police on drug raids, and increases funding levels for the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Coast Guard, and the Customs Service for drug interdiction and eradication programs.

The bill also makes it easier to detect and prosecute money laundering, which is frequently used by drug traffickers to hide their illicit profits.

And finally, H.R. 5484 creates important grant programs for local drug education and treatment programs.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 5484 is strong medicine and will go a long way toward rooting out the drug epidemic. However, I firmly believe we should go even further in the months ahead.

Last year my good friend and colleague from Ohio, Mr. TRAFICANT, and I introduced H.R. 994, the Controlled Substances Penalties Act, which would impose much stronger penalties for those convicted of drug trafficking. H.R. 994 would make certain drug dealers spend a minimum of 15 years in jail for major drug sales and would give Federal judges the authority to impose even harsher sentences for repeat offenders, including the death penalty.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman from Texas, the distinguished majority leader, for his important leadership in this area. I look forward to working with him in making certain this bill is passed expeditiously and sent to the Senate for quick consideration.

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Chairman, it has been said that the deadliest enemies of nations are not their foreign foes but those that dwell within their own borders. Drug abuse is one of our greatest enemies, domestically and internationally. It threatens our international security as we see our personal and economic strength eroded. Domestically, it threatens the health and safety of millions of Americans, as well as our financial productivity and well-being.

The drug trade will drain our economy of some $230 billion this year. A large part of this is due to crime—50 percent of all crime and two-thirds of all violent crime being directly related to addictive drugs. Add to that the cost of hospitalization and rehabilitation and the loss of productivity due to the drugs, and you begin to realize it costs our economy and our society much more not to take action.

We have before us today, a measure which will go far in ending this tragic, consuming situation. I am proud to be a cosponsor and supporter of the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986, our Nation's first comprehensive approach to a national policy for drug eradication. This bill, H.R. 5484, is a major step forward to our efforts to stop the tide of drug production, sale and use.

H.R. 5484 brings much-needed funding and support to our drug enforcement system. Up until now, drug enforcement has combated the growing problem of drug abuse with too little funds and support, much like trying to fight a tank with a slingshot. The bill authorizes a total of $1.5 billion for a wide variety of drug enforcement programs.

These funds will allow us to mobilize our forces to combat the menace on five fronts: eradication of supplies; interdiction of shipments; enforcement of existing laws and strengthening laws on money laundering and designer drugs; education, where we hope the biggest payoff of all will occur; and rehabilitation for those whose lives are so devastated by this cruel addiction.

H.R. 5484 is a tough bill and will increase the penalties for illegal drug activities of all sorts. I believe it signals an important start in our Nation's all-out war against the drug abuse which is in one way or another victimizing us all. However, this bill will not be a cure-all; the drug problem can not be solved with one piece of legislation.

This war that we must embark upon is the most consuming and difficult sort of war to fight; it is a civil war. It is a war that must be fought, not only in Washington, but also in the pulpit, at the work place, in the town hall, in our schools, and in the media. Yet the war is urgent and necessary. What is at stake is the health and safety of millions of Americans, American productivity and potential, and our most important resource—American lives.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, narcotics trafficking and drug abuse have reached epidemic proportions both in our Nation and abroad. The toll in ruined lives, crime and corruption is staggering. Just in the United States alone, narcotics trafficking is estimated to exceed $110 billion. The costs to our society are estimated to exceed $60 billion in mortality, treatment, loss of productivity and crime.

The House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control estimates that 150 tons of cocaine, 12 tons of heroin, between 30,000 and 60,000 tons of marijuana, and 200 tons of hashish will enter the United States this year. An additional 4,000 tons of marijuana will be grown and 100 tons of mind-altering drugs will be illicitly manufactured and abused domestically.

The problem is obvious, but our solution must work in two directions. First, we have to attack the supplyside of the drug trade, that is, efforts aimed at drug producers and sellers.

The second tackles the demand side and is designed to educate or scare people away from drugs. I believe the best national strategy is a stronger emphasis on "comprehensive" drug control, in which supply-reduction efforts are complemented by demand-side programs. This new approach must combine tough new law enforcement with new treatment and education programs.

On the supply side, an effective policy must include a response to the reality that many developing countries are actively involved in the production of illicit narcotics. These nations have become so involved, politically and economically, in the production of drugs that it will take a concerted change in our foreign policy to release them from their economic dependence on illicit narcotics. Simultaneously, new policies must be implemented to strengthen our borders against the deluge of illicit drugs coming across them.

On the demand side, vigorous education and prevention efforts have to be undertaken in the work place, in our schools and in our homes. Presently, only $3 million of the $18 billion Department of Education budget is set aside for drug education. This is simply inadequate. It is crucial that we provide the drug education and prevention resources that will meet the demand problem head on.

Today the House is debating an omnibus drug measure which I support, that would comprehensively combat narcotics trafficking and drug abuse. Only through a sustained effort at destroying the illegal production of drugs at their sources, blocking narcotics trafficking, educating our citizens and treating those individuals who have become dependent upon drugs can we win this war on drugs. This is not a Democratic or Republican issue or a rich versus poor problem but a national emergency which we in Congress must act on now to insure a drug-free society for the children of tomorrow.

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986. I would like to congratulate members and staff of the 12 contributing committees as well as the minority and majority leadership for their hard work in coordinating and drafting this bipartisan effort.

This bill is a revolutionary approach to addressing the drug abuse epidemic facing this country. Not only does H.R. 5484 step up existing Federal efforts to interdict the supply of drugs entering the United States, it also channels resources toward drug education, rehabilitation, treatment, and prevention initiatives designed to stem the rising demand for drugs.

Specifically, the bill provides an additional $180 million to the alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health administration for block grants to States for urgently needed treatment and prevention programs. According to substance abuse centers in the State of Michigan, the waiting list for drug treatment and rehabilitation is long and growing. These agencies currently do not have the resources necessary to adequately deal with the enormous demand for their services. Persons badly in need of treatment must wait weeks before the substance abuse agency can assess his or her drug problem and respond accordingly. Due to our huge Federal deficit, the Federal Government has been forced to reduce its contributions to State drug abuse programs. H.R. 5484 takes a small step toward assisting State efforts to respond to the ravaging effects of drugs.

In addition to Federal assistance for drug treatment and rehabilitation, this bill includes a number of provisions designed to expand and coordinate Federal, State, and local drug education programs. A recent survey conducted by the University of Michigan found that almost two-thirds of high school seniors surveyed had used illicit drugs, that cocaine use among seniors has increased by 17 percent, and that more than 34 percent of the students did not believe that trying cocaine was dangerous. In light of these frightening statistics, it is apparent that a comprehensive and effective drug education effort at all levels is drastically needed. I strongly support provisions in the bill which establish grants for a variety of drug education programs to States, local intermediate educational agencies, and higher education institutions, which require the Departments of Education and Health and Human Services to create a joint national education program on drug abuse, and which require these Departments to study the nature and effectiveness of existing programs.

Mr. Chairman, I also applaud provisions which take a tough stand on reducing the supply of drugs in this country. Nothing short of a declaration of war on drug suppliers and dealers is necessary to dam the flood of drugs pouring into the United States. I strongly support provisions which increase penalties for drug pushers, establish new crimes for money laundering and designer drugs, heighten military participation in the drug surveillance and interdiction effort, use foreign aid as a lever for increasing international cooperation in the drug war, and revise the customs laws to deter drug imports. Through these tough new measures, the United States can reduce the supply of drugs available, increase the expense to drug dealers of producing and importing illicit substances, and apprehend and punish those responsible for this pervasive and serious problem.

In closing, I would just emphasize that although the efforts of State, Federal, and local governments are important contributions to combating this Nation's drug crisis, the success or failure of our fight will depend ultimately on the strength and commitment of the American family.

The first place for drug education and prevention is the family and the home. Parents must educate themselves through local drug abuse prevention programs about the symptoms and effects of drug abuse. This information must be passed on to their children in a family environment where it will have the most impact. Parents also must set an example for their children. How can we expect our children to say no to drugs if the abuse of drugs and alcohol is prevalent in the home. Mr. Chairman, I am talking about a new and strengthened commitment from the foundation of this country: The family. I strongly support efforts in this and future legislation which encourage parents and children to say no to drugs so that one day we can realize the dream of a drug-free America.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, it is with the greatest sense of disappointment that I must oppose final passage of H.R. 5484, the omnibus drug bill, as amended.

As I indicated in my statements earlier in this debate, I strongly supported this bill in its original form. In my 30 years as a prosecutor, city councilman, and congressional representative from New York City, I have continuously fought drug abuse and illegal narcotics trafficking. I have also seen, firsthand, the devasting effect that drugs can have on a community.

So I was delighted to see the leadership of the House, from both sides of the aisle, bring this comprehensive antidrug legislation to the House floor. In particular, I was pleased that this bill includes $350 million annually for the next 3 fiscal years for drug education programs. One of the best ways to solve the drug problem is to stop drug use before it begins. Yet right now, for every Federal dollar spent on drug enforcement efforts, barely one penny is spent on education. Efforts to discourage cigarette smoking through education campaigns have proven enormously effective. A similar campaign waged against illicit narcotics could turn out to be the most cost-effective way to keep drugs off the streets.

I was also pleased to see the inclusion of $180 million for drug treatment and prevention programs for the coming fiscal year. When we condemn the use of illicit drugs, we also oblige ourselves to extend a hand to those who are struggling to follow our exhortations and rid themselves of their additions. Surely it is difficult to expect people to stop using drugs, when there are no affordable treatment programs that allow them to do so. Yet drug treatment programs are expensive, and have been drastically underfunded until now. Title IX of this bill would help correct this problem.

Curtailing the demand for drugs is one part of the solution: stopping the supply is the other part. For this effort, H.R. 5484 contains many important provisions, including additional funds for the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Coast Guard, for the Customs Service, for prison construction, and for grants to local police programs. Sadly, each of these programs have been and will continue to be subject to across-the-board cuts under Gramm-Rudman. Yet all of these areas are part of an absolutely essential effort to stop the horrible destruction of narcotics.

When I rose to speak in favor of this bill yesterday, I warned against the adoption of pernicious amendments that would undermine the many valuable provisions of this bill, and make it impossible to support final passage of an amended bill. I deeply regret to say that with the adoption of amendments to establish a death penalty, to destroy the protections of the exclusionary rule, and to erase the separation of military and civilian forces by involving the Armed Forces in drug enforcement, I will be unable to vote for this measure.

The Gekas amendment to establish a death penalty for drug-related deaths has no place in a bipartisan effort to address the drug problem. The omnibus narcotics bill already increases penalties for drug-related crimes across the board, and requires a prison term of between 20 years and life for drug distribution or production offenses that result in serious death or injury. The taking of human life by the State will do nothing to reduce the availability of drugs, and its inclusion in the current antidrug efforts has been opposed by President Reagan.

The Lungren amendment to the exclusionary rule, which would allow illegally seized evidence to be used in a trial whenever police can argue they acted in "good faith," is not only inappropriate, it is probably unconstitutional. The exclusionary rule is one of the most important protections Americans have aganist unreasonable search and seizure. Under the Lungren amendment, however, police will no longer have to even obtain a warrant before embarking on seizures of admissible evidence. The Lungren amendment wounds one of our country's most cherished constitutional protections against the abuse of power by the State.

Moreover, there is no evidence that it will make any contribution to stopping the drug problem. Recent federally funded studies indicate that less than 1 percent of arrests do not culminate in a conviction because of the exclusionary rule.

Finally, the Hunter amendment, which brings the Armed Forces into the business of law enforcement, would destroy the historic separation of the police and Armed Forces, with potentially calamitous results for the liberties of Americans. Our Armed Forces are not agents of the courts: they are not trained to comply with the law and to protect the constitutional rights of defendants. The Hunter amendment leads the way toward the creation of a national police force, one with little knowledge of the rights and protections of U.S. citizens. To take this grave step on the basis of less than 1 hour's debate on the House floor shows a foolish carelessness about the principles to which we owe over 200 years of liberty. Moreover, these amendments were opposed by Secretary of Defense Casper Weinberger, who undoubtedly recognizes their impropriety.

In adopting these three amendments, the House has unwisely forced Members to choose between fighting the menace of drugs, and upholding the Constitution and our basic moral principles. Even though I was a strong supporter of this bill as introduced, I cannot support a bill that casually and unnecessarily attacks constitutional rights in the process of attacking the drug problem. For these reasons, I must reluctantly oppose the final passage of this bill as amended, in the hopes that its destructive provisions will be removed either by the other body or in conference, to produce a truly effective drug bill that I would happily support.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, yesterday, I spoke in support of H.R. 5484, the omnibus drug bill of 1986. This very important legislation has been developed through a bipartisan effort to fight our Nation's drug problem. The omnibus legislation before us today takes a comprehensive look at the problem of drug abuse which faces our Nation, and offers solutions to deal with all facets of the problem.

All Members and every committee of this House have contributed to this bill, reflecting the national resolve to defeat the problems of drug abuse. I want to commend the superb leadership of Speaker O'NEILL, Majority Leader WRIGHT, Minority Leader MICHEL, Chairman BILL FORD, and my other colleagues who have worked on this blueprint.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a few remarks today about title X of this bill, which authorizes demonstration projects to test the efficacy and cost effectiveness of new drug treatment and rehabilitation programs under the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program [FEHBP]. The bill establishes a 3-year demonstration, beginning January 1, 1988, during which several models for drug and alcohol abuse treatment programs will be tried under the FEHBP.

This legislation directs the Office of Personnel Management [OPM] to work with the FEHBP plans, Federal agencies, and employee organizations to develop innovative rehabilitation programs to be offered in several geographic areas across the country. Under the bill, OPM and the other groups are instructed to include outpatient and inpatient services, as well as various other services, such as child care, to make certain that individuals who need help will have access to it. OPM and the other groups will select which agency or agencies will participate in the demonstration at each site. The demonstration will not interfere with existing employee assistance programs [EAPs]; instead, the legislation directs that the demonstration will coordinate with these EAPs to take advantage of their services and expertise. A separate appropriation is authorized for the demonstration so that insurance costs will not rise for individuals or for the FEHBP Program.

Under H.R. 5484, the evaluators of the demonstration projects are instructed to measure not only the cost and effectiveness of the new health coverage, but the effects of such care on worker productivity. Undoubtedly, we will realize gains in both the well-being of individuals and their job performance by making help available when it is needed. Any responsible employer knows that both the employer and the employee gain when a health problem like substance abuse is acknowledged and dealt with effectively. It is far more humane, and far less costly, to offer assistance than to ignore health problems or respond to them with punishment.

This demonstration is very important. Ever since 1982, when the administration forced extensive cuts in the FEHBP, Federal employees, annuitants, and their families have not had adequate health insurance coverage for drug abuse and alcoholism rehabilitation. In 1982, FEHBP benefits were cut by 13 percent, with the brunt of those reductions falling in the areas of mental health care and drug abuse and alcoholism rehabilitation. Today, when the entire Nation is recognizing the serious implications of substance abuse for our citizens and our work force, we must reexamine our health insurance programs to fill in the gaps where needs are not being met.

Today, we are taking an important step toward restoring the FEHBP to a more comprehensive health care program. We are acting to deal with the problems of substance abuse in a reasonable, responsible, humane fashion. I would like to thank my colleagues again for their participation in this effort, and urge swift approval of this legislation.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, as an original cosponsor, I want to underscore my support for H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986, legislation whose time has finally come. Today, the United States makes up only about 5 percent of the world's population, yet consumes nearly 60 percent of the world's illegal drugs. The real tragedy is that our Nation's future is the victim, because the users of illegal drugs are predominantly among young people.

However, even before this legislation was introduced, we were starting to see a fundamental change in the attitude of the American people toward the problem of drugs. Across the country, individual citizens, private organizations, community groups, and public agencies are all working to reestablish a climate in which drug abuse is not just illegal, but socially and ethically unacceptable.

President Reagan has made fighting drug abuse a major goal of his administration, and recently announced a national strategy consisting of six major goals to eradicate drug abuse. Mrs. Reagan has made it her major goal. With her help, 10,000 "Just Say No" clubs have been established across the country. Five years ago, there were only 900 such groups.

Among other provisions, the omnibus measure incorporates provisions of seven bills reported by the Judiciary Committee to enhance drug enforcement, stiffen penalties for drug-related crimes, provides for treatment of drug- and alcohol-dependent offenders, and fund additional prison construction.

To make this bill more effective, we need the death penalty for people convicted of drug trafficking, we need to spend more money on border patrols and customs services, and we should use our foreign aid to tell foreign countries where drugs are produced that if they want foreign aid, they are going to have to get rid of the drug sources and not be involved in having drugs as a money-making export.

There is no single solution to the drug crisis. The 20 Federal agencies and hundreds of State and local offices which fight drugs must battle on many fronts: the source, interdiction of supply, prevention, treatment and rehabilitation. The ultimate success of that effort, however, depends upon citizen volunteers who, in one community after another, are taking the lead in fighting drug abuse in the workplace, in our schools, and on our streets.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Chairman, the drug epidemic we are facing is affecting all Americans—both those who use illegal drugs as well as non-drug users who, though innocent of wrong doing, are affected by this cancer on our society. This rampant drug use is increasing the danger on our highways, increasing crime in our cities, and destroying families and homes throughout our Nation. More than half of all crimes are now drug-related; and as illicit drug use grows, more crimes are committed. It is an increasing spiral of causes and effects, taking in an ever-widening circle of tragedy.

The price of human lives of this epidemic is incalculable. But, the financial price we are paying as a society can be calculated—and it is staggering. Americans spend $110 billion a year on illicit drugs. The recent appearance of less expensive cocaine, "crack" has taken the drug scene by storm. Alternative forms of use, such as free-basing, have also made this substance more convenient to use. It is now believed, based on recent studies, that one of every six teenagers is trying cocaine before graduating from high school, and one of every three college students is now using cocaine before graduating from college. Current estimates suggest that there are 4 to 5 million regular adult cocaine users in our Nation.

There has been an enormous quantitative jump—an explosive increase—in the amount of cocaine smuggled into this country from South America. While we were shocked by 1984 figures that Federal Drug Enforcement Administration agents were seizing an average of 48 pounds of cocaine per month, current figures have rocketed. The figure jumped to 275 pounds in 1985 and it is even higher for 1986. Earlier this year in Los Angeles, three unrelated seizures in less than 1 week resulted in the seizure of 790 pounds of cocaine. That is in only one city, in only 1 week, in our Nation alone.

The time is long overdue for us to declare war on illicit drugs, to take comprehensive action on all fronts to deal with illicit drugs.

Mr. Chairman, the legislation which we are considering in the House today—H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986—is that long overdue declaration of war, it is the comprehensive program that is required if we are to deal with the drug crisis.

This legislation provides new programs and new legislation in a large number of important areas. Any assault on the drug problem must deal with many areas. This legislation provides important new tools in all areas of drug interdiction, enforcement, education, and rehabilitation, as well as providing increased penalties for violation of our drug laws.

I am delighted that provisions of my bill, H.R. 5247—the Youth Drug Protection Act have been included in this legislation. The Omnibus Drug Act strengthens penalties and clarifies legislation making it a Federal crime to use young people to distribute drugs and to manufacture or distribute drugs in or near schools. It also increases the penalties for cocaine dealers for first and subsequent offenses.

This legislation is our declaration of war against the use of illicit drugs in the United States and against international drug dealers who provide illegal narcotics. As Gen. Douglas MacArthur said, "In war there is no substitute for victory." In this war against drugs, the stakes are high—the lives and futures of our children and our grandchildren. It is a war we can win, it is a war we must win. The legislation the House is considering today is an essential weapon in that war. I urge my colleagues to vote for its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5484) to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops and in halting international drug traffic, to improve enforcement of Federal drug laws and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments, to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 541, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The amendments printed in section 2 of House Resolution 541, agreed to by the House on September 10, 1986, are considered as having been adopted.

Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 392, nays 16, not voting 23, as follows:

□ 2210

Mr. LOWRY of Washington changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous matter, on H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York,

There was no objection.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF MOTION TO CONCUR IN SENATE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 4868, ANTI-APARTHEID ACT OF 1986

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 99-814) on the resolution (H. Res. 548) providing for a motion to take the bill (H.R. 4868) to prohibit loans to, other investment in, and certain other activities with respect to, South Africa, and for other purposes, from the Speaker's table and to agree to the Senate amendment, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REQUEST FOR PERMISSION TO HAVE UNTIL MIDNIGHT TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1986, TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3838, TAX REFORM ACT OF 1985

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight Tuesday, September 16, 1986, to file the conference report on the bill, H.R. 3838, Tax Reform Act of 1985.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FRENZEL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I shall not object. I think that the request is self-explanatory

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, this gives the conferees up until Tuesday at midnight to file. Is there any chance that it would be filed before Tuesday at midnight? I think that most of the Members would prefer to have the full 3 legislative days and not have weekend time in order to examine the report of the committee before we vote.

I just wanted to be assured that we probably would not get it, or we should not get it, before Tuesday at midnight, so that we would have the full 3-day period.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am certainly optimistic. I had hoped that we could get the report filed before then. It is unlikely, however, because it is such a large document, but I certainly would like to see the membership have the necessary legislative days to review the report.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield further to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, all that I am trying to assure is that we do not have a report filed on a Saturday and then end up with Saturday and Sunday being a part of the 3-day period that would be then a shortened time for the Members coming back to town to consider the bill.

I am just trying to assure that the 3 days will run concurrent with time that the Members would actually be in town.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield further to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have no intentions of trying to see that Sunday or Monday would be counted as a legislative day. I think that getting it filed on Monday night is going to be a success story in itself.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LOWRY].

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I was going to reserve the right after the gentleman. I do not think that I have any real problem perhaps with this request for filing the report, but I have a strong problem with the unanimous-consent request made here Tuesday that waived the points of order on being out of the scope of the conference on items such as the sales tax deduction.

That is not a small item. A member of the Committee on Ways and Means came to the floor and received unanimous consent to waive points of order thereby not going to the Committee on Rules on items such as being out of scope such as the House position on the sales tax was 100-percent deduction and the other body's position was 60-percent deduction and just come and waive that, to set it up so that we will have 2 hours of debate on the conference report coming here.

I think there is—is it 3 hours? The gentleman says 3 hours of debate on what is billed as the most major reform of the tax system since 1950. But to come and get a unanimous consent to waive points of order on things like the deduction of the sales tax as a for instance, and there are other for instances, so that we could not go to the Committee on Rules and talk about that, I frankly think on a bill of this magnitude is very bad policy.

When the gentleman is done with his reservation, I am going to bring mine up and then I am going to think about listening to why that makes sense if this is not a railroad.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I was on the floor when the unanimous-consent request was made. I, and other Members who were here present, felt that the bill of this size and scope, even though I objected to the features that went beyond the scope of the conference, to have restricted it to six items, however big they were, and I agree with the gentleman that the one he is talking about is a serious one, and I assure you I am no fan of the bill. I intend to vote against it, but I thought the committee ought to have their chance to bring their bill up as a unit.

Going to one more committee could only delay, cause decisions to be deferred in the economy that ought not to be deferred and, therefore, I did not object.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the economy had a little comment today. I do not know if it had any results on this or anything else. This is a serious question before us.

I would like to know, in my State of Washington, which is constitutionally prohibited against an income tax, in which 60 percent of the revenue to the State of Washington is from the sales tax, it pays for education; it pays for services, why, when we had a position coming out of this House that was 100 percent deductible, than now, and the other body was 60 percent deductible, that now we find it set down, come up with this report after we recessed and came back now and found out the rules of order are waived so that we could not go to the Committee on Rules?

I wanted to talk to the Committee on Rules about why should education in my State subsidize education in the State of Oregon? Why should the cost of paying for services in the State of Washington, in which an income tax is prohibited, and we had two efforts in the last 10 years to change that and got beaten over 2-to-1 both times, should, by a unanimous consent brought by a member of the Committee on Ways and Means on this floor put out of order even going to the Committee on Rules and getting a chance to talk about this?

I would like to know why that makes sense.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, further reserving my right to object, I am not going to defend the substance of the bill because I am not supporting it. I only was trying to defend the procedures.

I think if the gentleman wants to proceed, he probably ought to do it under his own reservation.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who has worked very hard on this bill, why an item of that importance should be dropped as not in order of being brought up and going to the Committee on Rules to talk about?

It was 100-percent deduction coming out of this House with 60 percent from the other body.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, a conference to negotiate both the House and Senate positions is exactly what it is. It is a conference.

In the negotiations, the other body was very adamant about their position. In the negotiations, this is one of those areas where the House yielded.

As far as the gentleman's opportunity to debate, I am sure that the gentleman is going to have an opportunity on the floor of the House of Representatives to raise his points. But the procedures of the House were accepted, the unanimous-consent request was made and no one objected.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, what happened in the procedures of the House, the unanimous consent request went around the Committee on Rules so that this can be talked to. That is true.

A member of the Committee on Ways and Means stood up and got unanimous consent to waive the points of order. That is true.

It was not the other body's position that prevailed. The other body's position was for a 60-percent deduction. The House position was 100-percent deduction, and we got zero.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I am informed that before the unanimous consent request was made, it was cleared by members of the Committee on Ways and Means that made the unanimous consent request and by the chairman of the Committee on Rules as well.

So the procedures of the House were conformed with.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman mind telling me why education in my State should subsidize education in the gentleman's State of Illinois, where, in my State, the only thing that pays 60 percent of the revenues for education in my State is the sales tax? We cannot get out of that. We are locked by constitutional amendment. Why should we now subsidize education in the State of Illinois.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I am not going to debate the merits of the bill this evening. Those questions can be answered when the debate is taking place on the floor of the House some time next week or the following week.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, since this is one of the first opportunities I have had since this procedure to debate that, I debated.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

HOUR OF MEETING ON TOMORROW

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tonight, it adjourn to meet at 9 a.m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO MAKE CORRECTIONS IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 5484, OMNIBUS DRUG ENFORCEMENT, EDUCATION, AND CONTROL ACT OF 1986

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill, H.R. 5484, the enrolling clerk be authorized to make such technical and conforming amendments to the table of contents as may be necessary to reflect amendments adopted to the bill and to make corrections in capitalization and punctuation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

THE RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE INSOLVENCY AND BENEFIT INCREASE ACT OF 1986

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COATS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COATS. Mr. Speaker, today, I am joining my colleague Chairman FLORIO in introducing the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Insolvency and Benefit Act of 1986. This legislation, in the form of a subcommittee print, was favorably approved in June 1986, by the Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation, and Tourism for consideration by the Committee on Energy and Commerce. I believe that this legislation is a step in the right direction toward addressing the financial problems that face the Railroad Unemployment Insurance [RUI] system.

The future of the RUI system is crucial to the approximately 30,000 unemployed rail workers who are currently receiving benefits. Further, since the RUI system has often been able to pay benefits only by borrowing money from the Railroad Retirement Pension Fund, the financial health of the RUI system has a direct impact on the financial security of railroad retirees.

The financial problems facing the RUI system are nothing new. The system has had to borrow from the Railroad Retirement account in 19 of the last 24 years. I have been working throughout this Congress to ensure that those problems are addressed. Congress cannot afford to delay addressing these problems any longer. The indebtedness of the RUI system to the Railroad Retirement Pension Fund now exceeds $800 million. Additionally, despite this huge debt, RUI daily benefits are lower than those paid by many States. The maximum daily benefit under RUI is $25 per day, compared to $40 per day, which is the weighted average of maximum daily benefit paid to other unemployed workers in the six States where there are 20,000 rail workers.

The legislation we are introducing today is a step toward establishing a financially viable railroad unemployment insurance system that is fair to railroad workers and pensioners, the railroad carriers and the American taxpayer. Although the legislation retains the independent nature of the RUI system it makes important changes in that system.

First, it requires rail carriers to pay unemployment taxes based on their unemployment experience, instead of the flat tax they currently pay. This will encourage rail carriers to attempt to keep their unemployment rates low.

Second, this bill provides a surcharge which will be triggered when the funds in the RUI account fall below certain designated levels. Presently, when the funds in the RUI account are not sufficient to pay unemployment benefits the RUI system borrows funds from the Railroad Retirement System. The RUI system's record of repaying those loans is dismal. Providing a mechanism to raise additional funds will contribute to the financial solvency of both the RUI system and the Railroad Retirement System.

Finally, the bill increases the maximum daily benefit afforded unemployed rail workers from its current, unrealistically low level of $25 to $27. I do not, however, believe that this increase is sufficient. Therefore, at the Subcommittee markup I offered an amendment to increase the daily benefit level to $30. Although that amendment was defeated at subcommittee, both rail labor and management have recently endorsed the amendment. I am heartened that management and labor have finally agreed that reform is needed in this area. RUI benefits are currently too low, and management's recognition of this is a real step forward. I plan to offer my amendment again when the full committee considers this legislation. I am confident that with the support of management and labor my amendment will pass.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent for rollcall 364, on Friday afternoon, August 15, 1986. This vote was a motion to adjourn until Monday, September 8, 1986. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this morning I was attending the funeral service of the husband of my executive assistant, who was a close, personal friend, and therefore was unable to be present for rollcall vote No. 367. Had I been present, I would have voted "yes" on the Hunter and Robinson amendment to the Bennett amendment to H.R. 5484, The Omnibus Drug Act of 1986.

NATIONAL CHILDREN'S TELEVISION AWARENESS WEEK

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WIRTH. I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 710, legislation which designates the week beginning October 12 as "National Children's Television Awareness Week."

The purpose of "National Children's Television Awareness Week" is to highlight the positive uses of television and to help parents and children maximize television's great potential as an educational tool. During the commemorative week, families, broadcasters, schools, libraries, and religious institutions will all be focusing national attention on the positive role that television can play in child development through various activities on the National, State, and local levels.

Television teaches a wide variety of skills and behavior. Programs such as "Sesame Street," for example, have been instrumental in increasing the reading and mathematical proficiency of children. Research indicates that TV can teach values ranging from kindness toward others to cooperation with friends and neighbors. It can also motivate children to learn about the world around them.

Thus, television can play a pivotal role in education if its potential is fully realized and used properly by children, parents and other institutions. Unfortunately, all too often we take television for granted and do little to maximize the tremendous educational, cultural, and social potential that television holds for children.

"National Children's Television Awareness Week" will encourage such positive uses of television through a variety of activities scheduled to focus national attention on how best to utilize the medium. Here are just a few examples of the various activities which will be taking place to promote the special commemorative week:

Seven States have already passed proclamations inaugurating complementary children's television awareness compaigns;

Several cable channels will be scheduling special showings of past quality children's programing and promotional PSAs to highlight the week;

Action for Children's Television is kicking off a yearlong campaign to heighten family awareness of television viewing with a series of publications and the release of a special "TV Smart" book;

Religious groups and the regional PTA groups will be holding children/parent workshops to promote the educational uses of TV; and

The American Academy of Pediatrics will be distributing special leaflets to pediatricians and patients highlighting the positive uses of television.

This resolution is strongly supported by the National Education Association, Action for Children's Television, Consumer Federation of America, International Reading Association, National PTA, American Academy of Child Psychiatry and a host of other organizations. I urge my colleagues to join me in joining this resolution.

THE PRESIDENT'S VOLUNTARY RESTRAINT AGREEMENT ON STEEL IS NOT WORKING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, the recently reported trade figures on steel imports for the month of July of 27.3 percent import penetration of the American market is a shocker and it makes a mockery of the President's voluntary restraint agreement on steel which was to keep import penetration at 18.5 percent of domestic market.

Two years into the agreement, total year-to-date imports are at 23.3 percent, so we are still 5 points above the agreed amount. And, the Trade Representative, Mr. Yeutter, in this poor atmosphere, has just ceded another 200,000 tons of semifinished steel to the European Community.

In negotiations, Dr. Yeutter promised to come up with a "nifty" citrus agreement in exchange for the 200,000 tons of steel. However, it was all promises. He came back from the EEC without the citrus agreement; but, he announced he had given away the steel, anyway.

This raises several questions in my mind. How can anyone seriously equate the dollar value of steel with the dollar value of grapefruit? How can anyone seriously equate the strategic value of having a domestic steel industry in place and having a domestic citrus industry in place? I have heard that apples and oranges can't be mixed.

Well, I say that steel and grapefruit are not interchangeable either in monetary value or in intrinsic value to the American economy, or to the defense. No one ever won a war hurling grapefruit at an enemy. The state of our industrial base raises the question of whether we can even produce old fashioned grape shot inside this country.

This Government and the Trade Representatives better get national priorities in order.

The capacity of our steel industry is in a drastic decline. It seemingly has little to do with the competitiveness of the industry, it has to do with the attitude of our Government toward the necessity of having a steel industry, viable and profitable, inside this country.

When the EEC demanded—as their right—the entry of a million tons of European steel into our markets, they were awarded 600,000 tons with two extra fillips the 200,000 more tons of semifinished product—and no grapefruit sales in return—and an escalator clause which allows even more sales into our markets over the next few years.

There are few United States steel exports into the EC and other nations such as Japan are severely limited on what they can export to Europe. Inside the European market, there are no restraints from country to country. However, European steel is more expensive for internal use, than for export, because the Value Added Tax, common to all EC countries is collected internally, but backed off at the time of export.

This industry is also heavily subsidized by the European Community by several billions of dollars over the last few years of heavy export to the United States. Not only should these countries be delighted with our marshmallow defense of our own industry, they should be absolutely ecstatic over our projected new tax bill which will totally discourage any new investments in our smoke stack industries.

European steel makers, therefore, effectively, cut their prices for export by backing off or rebating the VRA tax. It is purely and simply a legalistic manuever to get around a free trade no-no—products sold more cheaply internally than in export are considered outside of the pale in free trade parlance.

Mr. Speaker, when we criticize our own steel industry, saying that they are not competitive, somehow we always forget to point out that our steel industry is private enterprise; it is free enterprise; and we are putting each of our steel companies up against a government, because the Government of Korea, the Government of Japan, the governments in the European Countries all subsidize their steel industries. We forget that.

Pogo convinces me. "We have seen the enemy and it is us!"

Ambassador Yeutter was even quoted in the newspapers, while in negotiations on EC steel, that it was questionable as to whether we needed smokestack industries. How's that for flashing your hold card while in a high stakes game?

Over the last 6 years, time and time again our steel companies had cases prepared against many foreign companies and countries on illegal trade practices inside the American market—on each and every occasion the U.S. companies were pursuaded by the White House that charges should not be filed. That the White House would take care of them with the voluntary restraint agreement; "not to worry."

Everybody makes mistakes, Mr. Speaker. For example, for the first 7 months of the second year of the President's voluntary restraint agreements with import penetration at 23.3 percent of market. We can surely say that we have indeed made a mistake in listening, and that the industry has made a mistake in not going ahead and filing charges for damage done to them by imports.

Other nations have watched the behavior of the EC and are beginning to push up shipments. Canada is on a roll taking 3.2 percent of our market, refusing to cut back on the basis that we have no national boundries between us, that we share a common market—inside the United States.

That's an interesting viewpoint since there are tariffs all over the place on American products flowing into Canada—and some of those tariffs are very steep.

American truck drivers would also be interested to know that we are boundary-less with Canada. The Eastern Provinces of Canada demand that every load going into Canada be offloaded at the border and loaded onto Canadian rigs. American drivers who have gone into Canada—with special dispensation—cite instances of harrassment by Canadian Mounted Police.

The boundary to the north seems to exist only against American products and American businesses. For Canadian products and transport coming south it obviously disappears. What a magical boundary we've allowed to grow up along our Northern States—a one-way turnstile, always operating against us.

Sweden has been refusing to negotiate with us on steel. Again a nationally subsidized steel industry which competes unfairly with ours and gets away with it.

Both Korea and Taiwan observing the success of the western nations battering at our steel markets are beginning to ship increasing amounts—and why not? Once they have pushed up the percentages—when we begin to negotiate seriously with them—sometimes in the next few years—the level of negotiations we start at will be theirs.

It happened with the EC negotiations and Uncle Sam doesn't seem to know how to say, "First let's look at what level is good for our country—our industry!"

If I sound annoyed, exercised by what is happening in the steel industry—then I make my point well. However, what is happening in steel is only a part of a greater, more frightening picture.

Another set of figures came out over the Labor Day weekend. These projected a $170 billion trade deficit for 1986. Steel imports are only a part of that picture, automotive parts and automobiles, machine tools and ball bearings, TV and radios, shoes and clothing—many, many other products contribute to this astronomical sum.

Let us take some of those one by one, some of the stories that we have been hearing about that. Let us take the automotive parts, the automobiles which consumed at one time, when they were made in this country, a substantial portion of the steel that was manufactured here. When we are talking about the voluntary restraint agreement on steel coming in, we are not talking about manufactured goods made out of steel which actually raises the amount of steel coming into this country as 50 percent of the market. That goes to the automobiles and it goes to the automotive parts and the machine tools and the ball bearings. But on the automotive parts we are hearing a lot of after-market repair parts. Now, what are after-market repair parts? Why are they called that?

Our research shows that they are inferior products being sent in here and that the insurance ccmpanies when they are making the estimates for repairs on American cars or other cars, I guess, are using these cheap figures, the lowest cost figures, the after-market figures, and they are not even letting the customer know in many instances that he or she is being given an inferior part, and inferior repairs.

Something needs to be done about that.

Ball bearings, you might say we are almost at a crisis stage on that. They are very important to all production. Here we are with more than 80 percent coming in from overseas today. Machine tools, another industry that is on the decline in this country, another very vital industry to our national defense. When you look at the empty steel plants, the buildings where there were once pipe mills, rod mills, and you see how empty they are, the equipment has even been taken out of them and sold somewhere overseas, you think how are we ever going to rev up if we get into an emergency situation again because we do not have the machine tool industry to prepare us for it?

I am worried, yes. I worry a great deal about this. We have a lot of questions that must be answered.

I remember the days not too long ago when the trade deficit was around $100 billion. We were told the reason was the vast amount of oil imported into this country. At that time oil was nearly $35 to $40 a barrel. Here we are with oil down to $8, $10, $12 a barrel and the balance of trade deficit is going up and up and up. And nobody has ever wanted to admit that it is the increasing amounts of manufactured goods coming from overseas that is creating this deficit as well as creating a deficit in jobs in this country.

For the future economic independence of the country, this $170 billion should raise grave concern. Those dollars will eventually return to be spent in this country and from past records, it is obvious that they will not be spent to purchase our goods, but to purchase our assets. It is capital we are not shipping offshore which will return to us as economic bullets.

Our economy has degenerated into a Ponzi scheme—money flowing out on imports, foreign money flowing back in to buy Treasury bills, and U.S. assets and fewer and fewer American products being sold. We are caught in a rip. As we import more foreign goods, more and more American businesses are destroyed creating the urge to buy yet more and more foreign products.

To add insult to injury, which is what I think it is, in our tax bill which we are going to be considering on this floor next week, there is a $100 million tax break for Toyota of Japan to come in and build a new assembly plant in the State of Kentucky. Do you know what? All of the components that will be assembled in that plant will be manufactured overseas in Japan and will be brought over here. That steel does not count in the voluntary restraint agreement. But that is going to be brought in here and assembled. And do you know something more? That plant is not even going to be built by American workers. Somehow they are going to be bring in 500 Japanese to construct the plant. Our reports are that they are even going to bring in Japanese to work in the plant.

Now, that is really giving it to the Americans good.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that we are inviting many of the problems that are being heaped upon us in the loss of our manufacturing base, our industrial base, and I think it is time that we in this House show the necessary leadership to stop this, to stop this bleeding of a very, very very necessary industrial base.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAYDOS. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I was very hesitant to interrupt my colleague on the Steel Caucus because her presentation was so logical, so informative and so expertly done. I think the entire House, the American people, the citizens of this country owe the gentlewoman a deep sincere debt of gratitude.

Mrs. BENTLEY. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. GAYDOS. The gentlewoman has taken the time not only for the special order but to get down and in detail present in such a practical manner the argument, the explanation of what has been going on for the last 15 to 18 years in this country.

I want to particularly commend the gentlewoman for being so practical in making the logical comparison, though it may seem illogical, between grapefruit and the agriculture industry and steel.

I think that makes it very easy to understand for those of our citizenry who have not had the privilege or maybe some even lack the ability to be able to analyze some of these complicated international situations in trade and all the exponents of trade and the machinations of Mr. Yeutter, who has appeared so many times before our committee and has told us so many conflicting things. I think the explanation of the gentlewoman and her very clear explanation in particular instances goes a long way to making this very delicate, yet most important subject matter understandable for our citizens.

That is why I hesitated to interrupt because I thought it was so good, I was impressed sitting here listening to it.

I think everything the gentlewoman has said is proven by facts. The presentation was very clear. I know it is going to be very effective. I would like to ask my colleague who serves with me on the steel caucus executive committee if she does not agree with me that both of us, if we have not already lost it, should lose patience with Ambassador Yeutter. He has told us many, many things before the caucus committee where he has understandably, and so kindly presented himself. He does not have to come before us. But when he did bring the message on numerous occasions it appears that everything he said could be discounted because everything he said could almost be put into one bag that could be marked "non-attainable." Every time he comes back to the caucus, he has to explain why what he said before was going to happen did not happen. I was particularly impressed by my colleague when she emphasized that aspect of the Yeutter diplomacy, the international trade diplomacy where he has repeatedly come back with explanations saying, "Well, I gave it away because of this or that."

So I would like to have a comment on record, and I think our citizens listening to this very, very clear explanation would benefit from further explanation on why a trade ambassador has to come back to us repeatedly and tell the Nation and tell us that he cannot do this and he has not done this, was unable to do this, and trade away the very life blood of this country as far as trade is concerned.

Mrs. BENTLEY. I appreciate the kind remarks of my colleague from Pennsylvania, and I am delighted that the gentleman has entered into this colloquy with me.

I get very disturbed by the conflicting reports that we have been getting from our special Trade Representative's office. In fact, I believe it was as recent as July that we were assured that the figures were going to decrease and that finally everything was going to get in line, and that the ceiling that the President had set 2 years ago, nearly 2 years ago, was finally going to be achieved. And here we are, the next report we get, it has skyrocketed instead.

Stepping away from the steel industry momentarily, we were in negotiations with the Far Eastern countries on textiles very recently. We got one or two or three which were supposed to be good. I have not studied them sufficiently or heard from the textile industry whether they were good or bad. I have heard some, and they were not impressed with them.

But I felt that it was particularly significant that the Japanese stock negotiations, the minute that we failed to override the President's veto on that textile bill.

My point of bringing that out is that the only way you can deal with these is with strength. And if we do not hold clubs over their heads, they are sure going to run away with us.

We cannot go to the European market with hat in hand and beg from them. I think we really have to say it is either going to be this way or forget it. I do not think we have to bow and kowtow to these countries. That is one of the biggest mistakes we made, and our State Department is famous for doing that. They do not consider the United States' position; they consider only what the reaction is going to be abroad. I think it is time we start worrying about what is happening here.

What I am concerned about in saying it is either going to be a quid for a quo or a quo for a quid is that our manufacturing base is eroded so severely that we may not have the merchandise, the materials, to export anymore when we are demanding that they open their doors the same way we open ours. That is where we made the mistake. Our doors are wide open: free trade roll in; free trade takes our jobs. But their doors have remained closed, and I say all around the world practically. It is a rare door that is open to us or to many other countries. But we have given it away.

Only, and only with demanding that our goods have equal treatment, equal openings, can we ever make any gains, I am afraid.

Mr. GAYDOS. I believe my colleague will agree with me because she has been exposed to the same information during our colloquys and also during our interrogation of the Trade Representatives and other representatives of the administration, when I say that Mr. Nakasone from Japan has repeatedly refused to open markets, have done just a little, just a little, to placate us as far as publicity is concerned. I think the gentlewoman so wisely cite the incident. As soon as we failed to override that incident, it went back again, the veto, he went back again to his old games and delay after delay after delay. The Japanese market today is still a closed market. If anybody says otherwise, they do not understand or they do not know or they are lying. That is a fact, an unadulterated fact. I think my colleague agrees with me.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Very much. I mean their doors are not open even that much. Interestingly, one of our weaknesses is when we go into negotiations with the Japanese or with these other countries, I am afraid that their people are much better prepared than are our people, and that may be one of the reasons why we get beat on the head all of the time.

I will give you a specific example. Automotive repair parts, the components for repairs. Our Department of Commerce went over there in August to do some negotiations. We had developed some material in my office on the after-market parts. So we had some discussions, my administrative assistant had some discussions over there with the Department of Commerce. We find out that those people who were going to these negotiations did not have as much material or as much knowledge on some of this as we did. I am not saying that we had very much. That was a shock and a surprise and a disappointment. We are not as well prepared, and we do not have the hard-nose negotiators going over there.

Mr. GAYDOS. I agree with my colleague, because the gentlewoman and I both have experienced in the past a chance of international Trade Ambassadors, whether it was Mr. Strauss, or Mr. Brock who is not there, or Mr. Baldrige who was there before he became Secretary, and now Yeutter and a couple of others in between. I would say they probably average around 2 years at the most. They just learn the job and, before you know it, they are replaced.

I think it is so evident that because they repeatedly come back that it just cannot be done.

For instance Sweden thumbing their noses at us, taking advantage of some of the voluntary restraint agreements that are in place, and flooding this country, particularly in speciality steel, steel tubing, which is so important for medical instrumentation and things like that, and just absolutely ignoring us like we did not exist.

I jump to another subject very fast. I know my colleague agrees with me because we discussed this personally on many occasions. We talked about the rubber industry. They wonder why in Akron, OH, and other places who were well renowned for years as a manufacturer of rubber tires, way before Michelin came in and invaded our market. They are not there anymore. They are closed.

Why? Because when you have 25 percent of your automobiles in this country being imported, there are four and sometimes five tires on an automobile coming in, well, that is where the rubber industry went. We do not have it anymore.

This has repeated itself and repeated itself and has enlarged itself.

I agree with the gentlewoman when she says, and I think she says it scholarly and I think she says it based upon the facts, that this country is in trouble, serious trouble.

I remember when a $10 billion deficit was so outstanding. We are talking about $200 billion and people are accepting it. We should have an actual national emergency when a $200 billion trade deficit presents itself.

H.R. 1309, THE HIGH RISK OCCUPATIONAL DISEASE NOTIFICATION AND PREVENTION ACT OF 1986

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAYDOS] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I apologize to my colleague, the gentlewoman from Maryland, because I did take some of her time.

I just wanted to emphasize, if I may at this time, that I deeply respect and appreciate all of the dedicated hours that the gentlewoman from Maryland has given to the Steel Caucus. The gentlewoman has done more than a yeoman's task and has been in the forefront. I want to say on this floor and for the offficial record that without the gentlewoman, I can say I think with authority and experience on the Steel Caucus, it would be in very dire straits. The gentlewoman has always been there to our hearings, always has been there to help us accumulate evidence, and has always been there to the presentation and the argumentation on the floor of this House. I for one appreciate it. I know that I speak on behalf of our colleagues on the Executive Committee and also the general membership of the Steel Caucus. I want to thank the gentlewoman as a matter of record.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. BENTLEY. I just want to say I appreciate those very kind remarks. I am very honored by them.

I had said most of what I wanted to say, and I do appreciate the fact the gentleman had engaged in a colloquy with me so we could bring out more of the points. I am interested in what the gentleman has to say tonight. I am sure the gentleman is going to be talking on something similar that I am equally interested in.

Mr. GAYDOS. Unfortunately, I have another subject matter. But I do want to say this: I think this short discussion between the two of us, and based upon authentic and acceptable facts as so adequately and intelligently presented by my colleagues is going to go a long way toward helping the general public and our citizens understand what is at stake in this very serious international trade problem that we now experience.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think that what we might consider, and I think we are reaching that crisis stage on this, is that we may have to consider legislating the voluntary restraint agreements into effect because they are not working. I think we may have to legislate, not the agreements, I meant the percentages on those and make sure that they are adhered to because that is the only way our industry is going to survive.

Mr. GAYDOS. I think the gentlewoman makes a very viable point and I agree with her 1,000 percent.

Mr. Speaker, when I got back to Washington this week, I found on my desk a letter from three Cabinet officers expressing their strong opposition to H.R. 1309, the High Risk Occupational Disease Notification-Prevention Act of 1986 that I introduced last year. The three Cabinet officers, Secretaries Bowen of Health and Human Services, Brock of Labor, and Attorney General Meese have conveniently outlined the particular points of disagreement they have with this bill which I introduced.

Normally, I would not respond in this way, but because I believe that they have expressed some misconceptions about H.R. 1309, I feel it is essential that I must answer them.

To begin with, though, I would like to recap some of the history of this bill. I introduced H.R. 1309 in February 1985. In the time that has passed, the bill has been the subject of six hearings by the Subcommittee on Health and Safety and on Labor standards. The two subcommittees conducted and markup session this past May and the full Committee on Education and Labor ordered the bill reported after a markup session this past June.

Throughout the process I and my staff have expressed our willingness to meet with interested parties to consider their suggestions for improving this bill and to answer any of their questions. The bill has been amended since it was introduced and I firmly believe vastly improved. It is an important piece of legislation; it complements some of the other actions taken by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration and others in the area of occupational disease notification.

Thus, while I can recognize this administration's right to oppose the bill H.R. 1309, I cannot understand the continued misunderstanding of the bill and its components. In order to respond fully, I intend to address each of the specific objections raised in the letter from Messrs. Bowen, Brock, and Meese.

First, while the Department of Health and Human Services does have a committee to coordinate the environmental health and related programs, I seriously doubt, based upon the record, that it has the same functions as a risk assessment board as created in H.R. 1309. The committee, according to the letter given to me, is chartered to develop a balanced, objective consensus on all risk assessments and risk management procedures. The committee's function is applied generally to the population at large and is not geared to focus on the specific risks attendant to the work place and specific worker populations.

The risk assessment board created in H.R. 1309, in the bill I sponsored, is composed of nine members. Five of those members are career or commissioned public health service officers with particular specialties such as toxicology, epidemiology, medicine, to mention three, and three other members are nongovernment physicians and at least two are expected to have a background in occupational hygiene and medicine.

The final member of the board is to be the Assistant Secretary for Health. The risk assessment board is charged with reviewing existing and forthcoming studies with the intent of identifying those worker populations and subpopulations that are at specific risk of disease because of their jobs and the substances to which they are exposed.

Let me divert just for a minute and state for the record that I have been chairman of the committee for now it is going onto, well, since 1975 or 1974. During that time, after we passed the OSHA Act some 12 years ago, when we were the only major industrial country in the world whereby we had no major piece of legislation governing the workplace and we had people working in all types of industries, no regulations, dealing with dangerous substances, and it took this country almost 200 years to pass comparable legislation. Only in the last 12 or 15 years, with other industrialized nations like West Germany, Sweden, Finland, France, who had this type of legislation in being for years, 30 and 40 years before we had it.

Not only did we get it recently, we also have a reluctant administration. The record is replete with all types of facts indicating a reluctance on the part of the administration to ask for substantially more money to make this act work. To ask for more inspectors. To illustrate the sensitivity to the working people, men and women, who are taxpayers that your Government is concerned with you. None of that has occurred. It has been a very shabby operation; it has been done with reluctance. The record speaks for itself.

The number of inspections, the type of fines that are levied, and the massive accidents that still occur today. The exposures that we have been having. For instance, the American Cancer Society has already, as a matter of public record, indicated after spending hundreds of millions if not billions of dollars that the only cure for cancer as of today is preventative medicine or preventative procedures or preventative rules.

A lot of people just pass it off if they do not have cancer, but if you or any member of your family has it or is exposed to it or is suffering from it, then you understand the sensitivity to any early diagnosis of cancer, as the Cancer Society has said. That is the only way to fight it; you have got to diagnose it early. They give as an example the cervical cancer suffered by many women. If found in the early stages, $500 will cure it. If left alone and discovered later, $30,000 to $40,000 is what it costs, and that figure is escalating without limitation. So within a few years it will probably be $50,000 and $100,000.

So until there is a cure for cancer, one accepted by the medical profession, it remains as a fact, an unadulterated fact, that the only way and the only attack on cancer as one of the many diseases in this country, that the only way you can fight it, the only way to conquer it now is early diagnosis. That is the nature of this bill.

This bill that I introduced is a good bill. It says that OSHA is not doing their job, or if it is doing its job or doing it in another manner, that we as a Nation have a duty to set up a risk assessment board made up of these individuals, let them meet, let them decide, looking at all the things that are manufactured in this country and let that board of intelligent individuals decide what is dangerous to that breadwinner when he goes to work; he is dealing with some radium, dealing with some isotopes, dealing with anything that is dangerous, chemical, all types of mixtures, toluene, whatever you have, dyes, any of those things that he has a right to be notified that he is working with and handling a dangerous material.

Then give him an opportunity, nothing mandatory, but give him an opportunity to go see a doctor or to get information about it, to have himself examined early. If there is any kind of disease that he has been exposed to or if he has contracted it, early treatment, which has been proven to be less costly. Let him transfer jobs if he has to.

That is the nature of this legislation which I have put together with the committee and on which we had hearings and which I am talking about.

Second in that letter that I received, according to these three Cabinet officers, the bill that I have introduced will result in substantial litigation that would impose significant costs on consumers and workers and will create a burden of tort liability and the workers compensation systems.

Insofar as these claims are concerned, H.R. 1309 in and of itself has absolutely no impact on either the tort liability structure nor the Workman's Compensation System. The bill neither makes it easier nor more difficult for a worker or anyone else to file a claim.

There may well be claims filed, either upon receipt of the notification letter or after the medical testing, but there is nothing that would prevent any worker from filing a claim even if that worker was not one of those notified under the terms of the bill.

The concerns raised probably stem from the pilot notification program in Augusta, GA, run by the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health. In that pilot project, more than 800 chemical workers were notified that they were at risk of bladder disease.

Of those notified, fewer than 170 filed claims totaling $330 million. In all, 119 claims were settled, with the average settlement of about $2,500. There were four or five settlements for as much as $25,000 and one for about $80,000.

That is a matter of course and would have occurred and probably ended up with more cost involved if they had not been notified at that time. This bill does not institute, instigate, nor encourage suits as such. If the man has a disease at the time he is notified, he would have the disease eventually later. He is going to sue one time or another. The bill does not manufacture lawsuits.

The third item raised by the letter from these three Government officials said that the bill may expose the Federal Government and Federal employees to immense liability, either for failure to warn or for inadequate warnings.

The Justice Department raised this issue when one of its attorney's testified before the Subcommittee on Health and Safety last November. Based on the comments, we adopted an amendment providing that the Secretary and agents of the Secretary—this includes both Federal employees as well as private employers who choose to cooperate—would not be liable for monetary damages under Federal or State law with respect to any omission or act in connection with notification.

Our attorneys on the committee assures us that this language resolves the problems of concern to the Attorney General.

The fourth item, the technical feasibility of notifying individuals in populations at risk is questionable, according to these three Government officials, especially if workers other than those involved in the study are to be notified.

Further, the costs of such notification would be considerable, they go on to claim.

I find it hard to believe that opposition to notifying workers of their risks still exists in this country. NIOSH has already proven that notification can be achieved individually. The Augusta, GA, program is not the only one that NIOSH has dealt with successfully. Another notification program has been conducted in Port Allegheny, PA, with respect to an asbestos program there.

Beyond that, let me quote from a September 8, 1986, letter from Arthur C. Upton, M.D., professor and chairman of environmental medical at the New York University Medical Center and president of the Association of University Environmental Health Sciences Centers.

Dr. Upton writes:

What has been disputed is the feasibility of notifying these workers populations at risk. As the former director of the National Cancer Institute [NCI], I can attest to the fact that such a program can be implemented in an efficient and cost effective manner.

During my tenure at NCI, at the cost of pennies per worker, we sent millions of recipients of Social Security checks a simple printed notification recommending that they seek medical counseling if they had been exposed to asbestos during the course of their working life.

H.R. 1309 also provides for this kind of mass notice, where and when necessary.

Insofar as the costs of notificaiton, NIOSH itself has estimated that the average cost of notification per individual is between $40 and $55.

It should also be noted here that while none of the authors of the letter were in their respective positions in the first term of the current administration. I am talking about Mr. Meese and others. Mr. Meese, though, was a senior advisor to the President, when NIOSH submitted a budget request to follow its Augusta notification program with a broader one. That request was rejected by this administration, unqualifiedly.

Another item raised in the letter was that the criteria for identifying workers for notification are not justifiable and could lead to notifying many workers who are not at increased risk of disease.

The real issue here is whether or not the 30-percent trigger, which triggers this notification, is a valid one. Those most strongly opposed to the 30-percent trigger, obviously, say that it cannot be justified.

On the other hand, epidemiologists such as Irving Selikoff and William J. Nicholson of the Mount Sinai Medical Center feel that the 30-percent trigger is a conservative one.

The 30-percent trigger is in an individual population group if the investigation shows that they suffer 30 percent more disease than the general public and that triggers off the notification, meaning that 30 percent more would indicate they should be notified.

Even if the trigger were at a higher level, say 40 or 50 percent, there would be workers who might be notified who would not necessarily be at risk. That does happen.

But the converse is also true. Even at the 30-percent trigger level, there will be workers who will not be notified, but who should be. And, if the trigger is raised to a more conservative figure, there would be many more at-risk workers who might not be notified.

The real question is whether it is more important to notify some of their possibility of risk or to leave them in the dark with no warning and no effort to put them into a medical monitoring program; as provided under the bill.

Based on testimony presented to the subcommittee during its hearings, general warnings as to the risk of one's job is less likely to generate the kinds of attention to personal safety and medical testing than an individual notification would.

Further, while there may be a reaction of fear by some workers, too many workers are not going to react at all, even with the individual notification in their hands.

Beyond that, as the letter from the three Cabinet officers notes, we have included a provision covering rare diseases that would give the Risk Assessment Board more leeway.

In that same context, the committee report on H.R. 1309 speaks to the necessity of having either a member of the Board or available staff with a special background in biostatistics to assist in determining the biological plausibility of the identification process.

Another item raised by the three Cabinet officers was to the extent that current workers would be notified, OSHA's hazard communication standard already provides more efficient broader, and more effective means of communication to those workers who are at risk.

This statement would be truer if it applied to any of the 22 permanent health standards promulgated by OSHA, but it is not true with respect to the hazard communication standard, even for current employees.

The hazard communication standard is a generic labeling standard. It is aimed at warning workers that they are handling a hazardous material, be it sulfur, acid, benzine, toluene, or what have you. The material safety data sheet, which is an explanation of that item they are handling, the core element of the existing standard, is to provide such information as the chemical compound involved, the hazardous elements, if it is a compound, the various warnings with respect to flammability, explosives, and similar reactions. That is the purpose of it. The material safety data sheet also provides warnings with respect to acute and chronic health problems and provides information on personal protective equipment.

But, as I said, the hazard communication standard is a generic one. It does not say what the permissible exposure limits are to a particular substance, as the 22 permanent health standards do. The hazard communication standard does not require or recommend periodic medical monitoring, as the permanent health standards do.

The material safety data sheet is to be available in the workplace, with access available to workers; but, there is no guarantee that it will be easily accessible.

There are shortcomings with the material safety data sheets today.

At a meeting of the American Chemical Society earlier this year, several speakers raised questions about the accuracy of the material safety data sheets. Some sheets on the same substance from different companies showed extreme variations. In one case, a known carcinogenic was so recorded on one material safety data sheet, but was not recorded as being hazardous insofar as chronic sense on a material safety data sheet by another firm.

California OSHA, 2 years ago, reviewed some 20,000 material safety data sheets and found about 80 percent failed to provide full information for the workers. The information most often missing—chronic health concerns.

How well is industry in compliance with the hazard communication standard? It is hard to say. OSHA says that in 3,520 inspections of manufacturing facilities between May 25, 1986, when the standard became fully effective, and August 13, 1986, about 700 showed evidence of alleged violations of the standard. That is roughly 20 percent of the facilities.

What we really do not know is whether or not the material safety data sheets in each plant for each of the hazardous substances is accurate. OSHA inspectors are not toxicologists and to assume that they will be able to determine more than just the most visible errors or omissions is erroneous. In fact, OSHA really does not have the skilled staff to review every material safety data sheet or even a sizable sample of them to determine whether they are accurate and complete.

In addition, the hazard communication standard applies only to workers in the manufacturing sector. OSHA has issued an advance notice of proposed rulemaking to expand the scope of the standard to all workers, but it is hard to say how long it will be before it is in place.

It must be remembered that OSHA only covers certain workers and workers working for the counties, the municipalities, the States, and, yes, the Federal Government are not presently covered by the OSHA Act.

When you consider that the courts ordered the coverage to all workers in a ruling issued in June 1985, it seems that OSHA is moving at an inordinately slow pace—just like it has on so many other standards designed to protect the health of American workers.

Another item raised in the letter from the three Cabinet officers was that OSHA regulations require employers to inform workers of their medical and exposure records and of their right of access to those records.

That regulation, as the letter stated, went into effect in 1980. That's all well and good. But if you retired in 1979, it is too bad. You were not notified.

Also, we have some complaints from union officials that some employers haven't exactly made access to those records very easy.

Another complaint was that medical surveillance is available for those workers exposed to such substances as those covered by OSHA's 22 health standards.

As I mentioned earlier, those standards, just like the one providing access to medical and exposure records, are well and good if you were working at the time the standards went into effect or started working thereafter.

But, and I stress this point, these standards are not retroactive. If you retired, if your employer went out of business, or if you changed employers so that you were no longer in a hazardous environment, you would not get the benefit of those standards or notification.

You would still be at risk of the disease, but under current standards, you would have no way of knowing that you had handled a toxic substance or been exposed to unsafe levels.

In fact, let us assume that the exposure level for a toxic substance already covered in 1 of the 22 health standards were to be changed tomorrow. If you retired today, the chances are you would not be notified of the change, even though your risk of disease is as great or greater than the worker who had been exposed for only a short time.

So much for the points of opposition by the three Cabinet secretaries.

We have been told by the agencies that as many as 100,000 workers die each year from workplace caused cancers and other diseases and that another 400,000 are newly disabled each year by those same workplace caused diseases.

If you do not suffer from a disease, you are not going to be concerned, but if your father or a relative or your children or a relation of some sort suffers, you are going to be concerned.

□ 2330

How can we stand by in this country and watch more American men and women suffer and eventually die from diseases that we know could have been prevented?

H.R. 1309 simply seeks to prevent those deaths and disablements by eliminating the causes of those diseases. With an authorization of $25 million for each of the first 2 years, H.R. 1309 is a cost-effective, workable notification program.

It clearly fills an important gap in the occupational health and safety sector and will complement the OSHA Act of 1970 and OSHA's activities since.

The savings to American business in preventing and reducing production losses, trimming high health insurance premiums and other medical and health program costs as well as the savings to the public health system of Social Security and Medicare more than justify the modest costs of the program.

Let me close by saying this about this bill. This bill is a very simple bill. It says that under the existing OSHA Act a lot of people are handling some very dangerous material and they are not being notified, and they are not getting available health advice, are not being sent to doctors, are not being exposed to x rays and other technical changes that we have now in detecting diseases.

This bill is aimed at saving the employer tons of money, unlimited sums of money. Workmen's compensation cases, as indicated by the statistics and the facts, are increasing so fast that the workmen's comp insurance is becoming almost prohibitive, almost confiscatory. So something has to be done along the lines so that these workmen's compensation insurance costs do not put everybody out of business.

Entrepreneurs and business people are going to refrain from going into business because paying simply for the insurance to provide the law provision of providing for the workmen's comp is going to keep them out of business.

If we want to stimulate business and activate business and ask our younger people to give us some new ideas and new concepts, we are going to have to make it economically plausible and feasible for them, and one area is workmen's compensation insurance costs.

As I mentioned before earlier, when you take a look at what it costs to cure cancer after it has progressed to the almost death stage, you are talking about thousands of dollars. An average cancer bill after a person is in the hospital, regardless of what cancer—liver, colon, what have you—runs $40,000, $50,000, $80,000, $100,000, particularly with the new type of treatments that are out. Those are great costs. That is why it costs you today $400 and $500 for a hospital room, and Medicare and Social Security is now in trouble, the medical portion, because the costs have escalated so rapidly that it is almost impossible to keep up with it, and it seems to be the bellwether or seems to be the oncoming concept of socialized medicine in this country, because costs are becoming confiscatory.

If we could save that cost, we could maybe preserve after a fashion our existing mode of living, the way we do business, the entrepreneur, the laissez-faire type of business enterprise that we have in this country, our fundamental democratic concept of business, to try to make a good living for as many people as are willing to work for it. That is what we are trying to do with this bill.

We are also trying to save the misery. Again, if you do not have a cancer victim in your family, if no relative of yours has ever had the disease, you do not care, or some other disease; it does not have to be cancer. If you do not experience it, you are not going to be concerned, but our obligation here in the committee, and as a nation, and particularly this subcommittee, is that we are supposed to worry about those things, and in worrying about those things we are concerned that there are going to be families and there are going to be orphans left, and there are going to be families that are going to be ripped asunder because the breadwinner was exposed to a disease and early death, and left orphans, and did not have the advice, did not have the advantage of a college education because of financial difficulties at home.

All these things come into play. We have said repeatedly that the least that this Nation owes, through the Government that we have and the committee that we serve on, is reasonable notification.

The bill works this way. If you are determined through this risk-assessment board to be working with and handling a chemical substance, and the incidence in that population work group—say putting radium on the dials of a clock—leads the risk assessment board to say, "Look, there are 30 percent more incidents of cancer"—or some other disease—"in this radium field," then they conclude that that is an area where the workers that work with this substance throughout the whole country should be notified.

That is what the bill does. It actually notifies the worker, "You're working with a dangerous substance." It goes on to tell him, since you are notified, you do not have to do anything if you do not want to. If you accept that notification, you like your job, and you are self-analytical and you do not care, or you do not want to follow it up, you do not do anything more. That is it.

But if you want to do something, they tell you. You can go to a certain center and have yourself examined. Maybe there is nothing wrong with you. Or you can go to your physician, family physician, and your family physician after he examines you, if he wants to find out the ramifications of the exposure, if any, whether you could develop a disease, whether you have developed a disease, what the timeframes are, if that is the case, then the physician even can call certain centers and get some information and some instructions, and he can talk with them.

Maybe after you go to your physician and the physician says, "Hey, you don't have a disease. You can check back with me in a year," that is the preventive aspect. That is the least that we can do.

Not every worker working in every plant. Maybe the ones handling the pickle plant over here maybe are not going to be notified. They are not going to be notified, I do not think, because they have no evidence that I have heard of in our hearings whereby pickle packers are exposed to any particular danger. He is not going to be notified.

But on the other hand some of these people who are cleaning instruments in the dental shops and working with various chemicals are being exposed, and the incidence rate is passing that 30-percentile mark that I talked about. That group would be notified, and they would be told, "Look, you're working with a dangerous substance. If you want, you don't have to, you can go to your doctor and have him examine you."

Maybe you should change jobs, or so the doctor may tell you. Maybe the doctor will say, "Hey, you're not suffering from any disease." Maybe it is in its beginning stages. The doctor will say, "Look, there's a treatment here." The treatment may cost $100. It costs $100, you change jobs, or maybe within that company you move him from that job away from that dangerous chemical that he is handling and put him in another job. That is going to save him from developing a serious disease which in turn is going to be the basis of a workmen's compensation case, going to be very expensive, going to add to the cost of insurance.

That is what we are talking about, an identification, to identify where these dangers are, and notification if your work group does come in that 30 percentile that a lot of people are suffering from some type of disease from the material which you are handling. That is notification and the overall prevention.

That is the whole concept—there are some other elements to it—but that is the whole concept of the bill, what it tries to do. I think that it is necessary. OSHA is not doing that. Other countries are doing that, and I think that if we are going to, No. 1, preserve the entrepreneur way of doing business in this country, meaning free enterprise, we are going to have to make workmen's compensation a reasonable type of production expense so that the company can get into business and can carry the insurance. We are going to do away with an awful lot of human misery.

Again I emphasize, if it does not happen to you or yours, or anybody that you know, you do not give a damn. That is human nature. But if it does, then you are very concerned.

Just to cite that, let me tell you this. Our committee some 15 years ago passed ERISA. ERISA is Employer Retirement Income Security Act. It guarantees pensions.

Today in my district and throughout this whole country companies are going out of business. They are being bought up. United States Steel, in my district I had 33,000 steelworkers 4 years ago; I now have 3,000 from United States Steel, 3,000, and the 3,000 are on strike. That is how it has changed. But yet, all those workers that I have lost, a lot of them are on pension, ERISA protects them, protects their retirement. In case United States Steel goes bankrupt, those retirees are going to receive their pension check.

Why do I bring it up? I bring it up to illustrate and to emphasize what I have said repeatedly: If it is affecting you and your pocketbook, you are going to be concerned, just like those pensioners today are so grateful for that legislation.

□ 2330

That is why we say on this act here that I am proposing that if it cures one disease before it destroys a family and before it becomes a basis of a great workmen's compensation case, it is well worth it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

PRESERVING HOME HEALTH CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I recall a conversation about 30 years ago with the late Dan Blodgett, former judge of Mississippi County, AR, my home county.

"Judge," I asked, "what happens to people when they get too old to work and have no one to take care of things?"

"Bill," he said, "they stay home and crawl into a corner, where they shrivel up and die."

Largely because of the efforts of the Federal Government, we've made a lot of progress since then. I've always supported home health care and other programs that allow seniors to live productive, constructive, dignified lives.

Last March, I visited the home of Mrs. Hattie Graham in Marion, AR. Mrs. Graham, who is 92 years old, told me she is able to live at home and have at least one well-balanced meal a day because of help from Federal programs.

According to the East Arkansas Area Agency on Aging, the cost of services Mrs. Graham receives under the Older Americans Act and other programs is about $10.50 a day. If she stayed in a nursing home she would cost the Government about $30 a day. But because of programs that help her live in her own home, she is happier and the Government saves money. The human argument and the fiscal argument are on the same side.

Mrs. Graham said she was worried about possible cuts in Older Americans Act programs, which make it possible for someone from the senior citizens center near her house to deliver a hot meal every day and help her in a number of ways.

In response to Mrs. Graham's needs and those of millions like her, the House included an increase in funding for programs conducted by the Administration on Aging in H.R. 5223, the Labor-HHS-Education appropriations bill for fiscal year 1987. I was proud to support this bill when it passed the House July 31.

But, senior citizens living at home often need more than Older Americans Act programs. These folks have their own particular medical needs, which often include sophisticated, expensive medical equipment. Because we in Government realize the value of enabling the elderly to live at home, we have allowed part B of Medicare to pay for home health services and equipment.

Medical equipment suppliers were hurt earlier this year by a misguided Health Care Financing Administration [HCFA] decision to effectively delay Medicare reimbursement by several weeks in order to cope with Gramm-Rudman cuts and build interest in the Medicare trust funds. After expressions of outrage from Congress, HCFA backed down. However, new legislative and regulatory developments may threaten the ability of older Americans to receive proper health care at home.

Provisions of the 1987 budget reconciliation bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee would reimburse home health providers only for the amount of oxygen prescribed by a patient's doctor and not for the oxygen actually used. Additionally, reimbursement for oxygen equipment would be eliminated, passing the cost for this technical and costly hardware directly to the patient—who may not be able to afford it.

When energy prices are higher there was a lot of talk around here about elderly Americans having to choose between heating and eating. I'm concerned that these proposals will make some have to choose between eating and breathing.

I am also concerned about new HCFA proposed rules that would give that agency almost limitless power to determine the rate of reimbursement for home health equipment.

At present, Medicare reimbursement for this equipment is based on regional data. Charges is a region are arrayed from lowest to highest, and reimbursement for a given piece of equipment is set at the 75th percentile of charges for that equipment in that region. HCFA has unilaterally proposed a rule that would lower that reimbursement to the 25th percentile.

Additionally, in a separate rulemaking, HCFA has proposed to give itself authority to set national reimbursement levels for home health equipment when it considers that amount yielded under the formula I just mentioned to be too high.

In other words, the bureaucrats at HCFA want to cut home health reimbursement levels to figures lower than what 75 percent of suppliers are charging, and if they don't like that figure they want to cut reimbursement even further until they find a figure they do like.

While the effect of these proposals is not yet clear, they may send the out-of-pocket costs to home health beneficiaries through the roof. What's more, the proposals completely ignore the long-standing congressional interest in Medicare reimbursement levels.

These proposals are not constructive. They do not fit in with the ongoing effort to get Medicare patients out of the hospital or the nursing home and into their own house or apartment, when practical. And they do nothing to enhance the ability of older Americans to live with dignity.

I'm opposed to any proposal that limits the ability of senior citizens to live a fulfilling life in their own homes. This Nation owes respect to the people who helped build it. I believe part of that respect is support of home health programs. I urge Members to look hard at the reconciliation proposals on oxygen reimbursement and I urge HCFA to forget about its proposal to dictate how much elderly Americans will pay out of their own pockets for health care.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

477. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Enrique J.A. Candioti, Ambassador, Argentine Republic, relative to foreign intervention in South America; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

478. Also, petition of the Secretary, American Bar Association, Redmond, WA, relative to individuals in prison in South Africa; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

479. Also, petition of the Shasta County Board of Supervisors, CA, relative to diseases contracted by former prisoners of war; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 1309.

By Mr. PENNY:

—Page 6, strike out lines 3 through 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(4) the term "population at risk" means an employee population exposed to hazardous occupational exposures which are associated with a rate of disease, as contrasted to comparable populations not exposed to the hazardous occupational exposure, that is (A) increased by a significant amount, and (B) not less than 30 percent greater than in such comparable population;

Page 9, after line 4, insert the following new paragraph (and redesignate the succeeding paragraph accordingly):

(3) In identifying such populations, the Institute shall consider medical and epidemiological principles, including the following: consistency of the association, specificity of the association, strength of the association, dose-response relationship, biologic plausibility, temporal relationship, and statistical significance. The Institute shall also take into account the extent and seriousness of the risk and the consequences of notifying or failing to notify (including the implications of erroneous notification).

—Page 6, strike out lines 8 through 16 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(5) the term "hazardous occupational exposure" means—

(A) a history of hazardous exposure for sufficient duration or sufficient intensity, or both, as to be associated with a risk for occupational disease; and

(B) a history of actual use of potentially hazardous chemical, physical, or biological agents found in the workplace; or

(C) any hazardous industrial or commercial process or activity found in the workplace which is associated with the risk of disease;

—Page 6, line 23, strike out "and", strike out lines 24 and 25, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(8) the term "Institute" means the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health; and

(9) the term "Board" means the Science Advisory Board established by the Secretary pursuant to section 4(d).

Page 7, strike out line 1 and all that follows through 26 and line 5 on page 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 4. FUNCTION OF THE INSTITUTE.

(a) FUNCTIONS.—The Institute shall—

Page 9, lines 10 and 21, redesignate subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (b) and (c), respectively.

At each of the following locations strike out "Board" and insert in lieu thereof "Institute": page 8, line 16; page 9, lines 5, 10, 15, and 21; page 10, lines 11, 14, and 24; and page 11, line 4.

Page 10, after line 19 insert the following new subsection:

(d) ESTABLISHMENT OF SCIENCE ADVISORY BOARD.—The Secretary shall establish a Science Advisory Board to review the findings and recommendations of the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health pursuant to this section and to advise the Secretary concerning such findings and recommendatons. The Board shall be composed of 10 members and shall include an epidemiologist, a toxicologist, an industrial hygientist, a physician specializing in occupational medicine, and an occupational health nurse.

—Page 9, line 3, insert "and intensities" after "durations".

—Page 20, line 20, after the period insert the following: "In the event of a disagreement between the employee's personal physician and the medical representative of the employer, an independent medical consultant shall be retained at the employer's expense to make a final determination with respect to the necessity for such a temporary or permanent transfer.".

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

ON THE SUBJECT OF JAPANESE AMERICAN REDRESS

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of NORMAN Y. MINETA and myself I am pleased to submit for the RECORD a speech delivered before the Japanese American Citizens League by our colleague from California, MEL LEVINE.

The internment of U.S. citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry is a blot on the history of our great Nation. In his speech MEL LEVINE addressed this issue and the bill H.R. 442, the legislative effort to redress this injustice.

Mr. Speaker, all of the Members of the House of Representatives are encouraged to read this speech. It sensitively describes the internment, and makes strong arguments for redress.

REMARKS OF CONGRESSMAN MEL LEVINE BEFORE THE JAPANESE AMERICAN CITIZENS LEAGUE, LOS ANGELES, CA, AUGUST 24, 1986

Good afternoon, I am very pleased to be with you today and to have the opportunity to speak with you. I am honored to have been invited to speak with you by a marvelous public servant, City Councilman George Nakano of Torrance. And I am honored to serve in Congress with two of your Members who are known to be two of the finest Congressmen not just from California but from the entire Nation, Bob Matsui and Norm Mineta.

Having grown up in California, I have long been familiar with the work of the Japanese American Citizens League, and with your many contributions in the areas of education and civil and human rights. I have a great deal of respect for the work of the JACL, so I am especially happy to be here.

As I stand here today, I cannot imagine a United States without Japanese Americans, any more than I can imagine a United States without Italian Americans, Polish Americans, or—well, you fill in the name. Ours is a diverse culture. This very diversity lends to its stunning complexity, and is part and parcel of the richness and uniqueness of our country. And no matter what our diverse heritages, we all share the same common bond: we are all Americans.

Japanese Americans have made contributions to virtually every profession in every region of the United States. Their contributions to business, architecture, science, medicine, education—are well-documented.

I would like to think things have always been well for Americans of Japanese ancestry. But such is not the case. In truth, there is a dark blot upon this country with respect to them. That dark blot is the internment of 120,000 citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry during World War II.

The decision to intern Japanese Americans followed a long and ugly history of west coast anti-Japanese agitation and legislation. From 1907 through 1948 anti-Japanese bills were introduced in every session of the California Legislature. In 1907 an agreement between the United States and Japan halted immigration of male laborers. In 1913 a California law banned purchase of land by aliens "ineligible for citizenship." As Asians, the Japanese were barred from U.S. citizenship. This was perhaps the single most important factor affecting the issei (pronounced E-say)—first generation Japanese immigrants—because it kept them out of the American political process and left them virtually defenseless against discriminatory legislation.

In 1920 aliens were prevented from leasing land. In 1924 a new U.S. immigration law completely slammed the door on Japanese immigration.

It was in that context that the Japanese American Citizens League was founded in 1929.

The anti-Japanese hostility stemmed in part from feared economic competition, and in part from outright racism. It was a time of what was so disparagingly called the "yellow peril"—fear of an unknown Asian culture.

The Japanese, small in number and with no political voice, became a convenient target for political demagogues.

In the first months of World War II, Japanese armies in the Pacific won a frightening string of victories against the United States. In January and February 1942, the military position of the United States in the Pacific was perilous. There was fear the Japanese would attack the west coast.

As one individual in the Government at the time recently explained, "frightened people do frightening things." And it was within that context that, on February 19, 1942, 10 weeks after Pearl Harbor, President Roosevelt signed Executive Order 9066. This order gave to the Secretary of War and the military commanders the power to exclude any and all persons, citizens and aliens, from designated areas in order to provide security against sabotage, espionage and fifth column activities.

President Roosevelt called December 7, 1941, "a day that will live in infamy." One historian has written that February 19, 1942 was a day that "should live in infamy," for shortly thereafter all American citizens of Japanese descent were prohibited from living, working or traveling on the west coast of the United States. The same prohibition applied to the generation of Japanese immigrants who, pursuant to Federal law and despite long residence in the United States, were not permitted to become American citizens.

So began one of the most shameful chapters in the history of the United States.

With no charges filed, with no hearings or trials, and with little notice, Japanese American citizens and aliens were given numbers and herded to "assembly centers." Allowed to bring only what they could carry, they were transported for the duration of World War II to 10 "relocation centers"—barely habitable camps of tar-paper shacks, surrounded by barbed wire fences.

The justification given for this action was military necessity. But the historical causes which shaped the decision to intern Japanese Americans were racism, war hysteria and a failure of political leadership. In fact, not a single documented act of espionage, sabotage or fifth column activity was committed by an American citizen of Japanese ancestry or by a resident Japanese alien on the west coast.

The internment experience was, to say the least, a traumatic one. Those interned suffered many losses: tremendous financial and personal losses—lost friends, lost education, lost opportunity, lost standing in their communities—and loss of nearly three precious years of their lives.

There were bitter ironies in the wake of Executive Order 9066. In early 1942 a newspaper ran a photograph of a little Japanese boy on a train headed for an internment camp. He was leaning out the window waving an American flag.

And in its attempt to "Americanize" the already American children in the camps, they had to salute the flag and sing "My country, 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty." In this context these words ring hollow and exceedingly cruel.

Fourth of July celebrations were bravely held behind barbed wire in the camps, and in the shadow of sentry towers.

Departure from the camps was permitted only after a loyalty review. Many were allowed to leave to go to college outside the west coast or to private employment, or to join the Army. Some 33,000 Japanese Americans served during the war, some drafted right out of the camps. Parents in tar-paper shacks displayed starred banners indicating that their sons were American soldiers.

The irony of Japanese Americans fighting for a nation that confined their people is sharpened by the valor they displayed on the battlefield. For its size and length of service, no other American unit was more decorated than the 442nd Regimental Combat Team. The 442nd has been called the most highly decorated unit in the history of American fighting forces. Made up primarily of Japanese Americans, the unit earned more than 18,000 individual citations for bravery, including a medal of honor, 52 Distinguished Service Crosses, 560 Silver Stars, and no fewer than 9,486 Purple Hearts.

But after serving, one member of the 442nd returned home to California to find, as he said, "every store on Main Street had a 'No Japs Wanted' sign out front."

Hawaii's Senator Daniel Inouye, who lost an arm in combat and earned the Distinguished Service Cross, has said, "We were fighting two wars—one against the Axis overseas and another against racism at home."

And one detainee wrote: "The thoroughly American" internees "realized that Americanism had somehow skipped the Japanese Americans."

It was not until December 1944 that Japanese Americans were freed to return to their homes on the west coast. But many had lost everything. They were the victims of an indignity of tremendous proportions, and they lived with a tremendous stigma.

Although some remedial measures were implemented to redress the war's injustices, it was not until 1980 that Congress began in earnest the process of national reconciliation with the creation of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians. The Commission heard the testimony of some 750 witnesses, many speaking about their painful experience for the first time. The Commission's lengthy and detailed report is an excellent historical study and a powerful indictment of a shameful wartime policy.

The Commission recommended appropriate remedies for the injustices of the internment. Its recommendations are the basis of a bill—H.R 442—the "Civil Liberties Act of 1985"—now pending in Congress with 140 consponsors, of which I am one. This number—442—honors the 442nd Regimental Combat Team.

There are 12 findings in this important legislation, but I want to mention just five.

One, the evacuation, relocation and internment of individuals of Japanese ancestry was carried out without any documented acts of espionage and sabotage, or other acts of disloyalty by any citizen or permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry on the west coast.

Two, there was no military or security reason for the evacuation, relocation or internment.

Three, the evacuation, relocation and internment of individuals of Japanese ancestry were caused by racial prejudice, war hysteria and a failure of political leadership.

Four, the excluded individuals suffered enormous damages and losses, both material and intangible, all of which resulted in significant human suffering for which full and appropriate compensation has not been made.

Five, the basic civil liberties and constitutional rights of those individuals interned were fundamentally violated by the evacuation and internment.

H.R. 442 seeks to redress the internment in several ways. First, the bill contains a provision which I would like to quote in total. It is titled "Recognition of Injustice and an Apology on Behalf of the Nation." It reads, "The Congress recognizes that a grave injustice was done to both citizens and resident aliens of Japanese ancestry by the evacuation, relocation, and internment of civilians during World War II. On behalf of the Nation, the Congress apologizes."

The bill also directs the United States Attorney General to review all cases in which U.S. citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry were convicted of violations of laws of the United States, and to recommend to the President for pardon consideration those convictions which the Attorney General deems appropriate. The President is requested to offer pardons to those individuals recommended by the Attorney General.

The bill directs executive agencies, to which Japanese Americans may apply, to review with liberality applications for the restitution of positions, status or entitlements lost because of acts or events during the internment period.

The bill establishes a $1.5 billion "civil liberties public education fund." This fund would be used in part to sponsor research and public educational activities so that events surrounding the evacuation, relocation and internment of U.S. citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry will be remembered and understood.

Lastly, the bill requires the Attorney General to indentify and locate individuals excluded from their places of residence pursuant to Executive Order 9066 and to provide a one-time per capita compensatory payment of $20,000 to each of these surviving 60,000 people.

Hearings were held in Congress on this bill in both 1984 and this year. H.R. 442 is pending in the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations, where members are hopeful that consideration can be completed this session.

There is no question in my mind about the appropriateness of monetary compensation to Americans of Japanese ancestry. During my days in the State legislature I coauthored a bill, which became law in 1982, to permit those Japanese Americans in the civil service, who were dismissed or who resigned during the war because of their Japanese ethnicity, to claim $5,000 as reparation.

The United States Congress supported the policy of removal and detention, and enacted a Federal statute which made criminal the violation of orders issued pursuant to Executive Order 9066. The Government of the United States was responsible for the catastrophic damages, and the Government therefore has a legal and moral responsibility to compensate the internees for those losses.

Desirable and appropriate as is the intent of H.R. 442, Americans of Japanese ancestry can and will never be adequately redressed for their loss and suffering. But this bill is a very important symbolic expression of the recognized responsibility of the United States Government in this shameful chapter in the history of our country.

Japanese Americans have had other successes in rectifying the wrongs against them. In February of this year a Federal judge overturned the conviction of Mr. Gordon Hirabayashi, who refused to be evacuated to a wartime internment camp in 1942, was found guilty, and had fought the conviction ever since.

In June the Washington, D.C. U.S. Court of Appeals upheld the reinstatement of a lawsuit brought on behalf of the 120,000 interned Japanese Americans. The decision upheld a January decision that overruled a 1981 ruling that a six-year statute of limitation on suits against the Government barred the lawsuit.

Still, Asian Americans of all backgrounds have felt the brunt of racism over the years, and it has been reported that there has been a rise in both racial tension and violence since the early 1980s. The current discrimination is motivated in part by fears among some Americans that Asians are "taking over" businesses and jobs. The inability of certain U.S. industries to compete effectively against Asian—particularly Japanese—imports has been a factor.

The most gruesome example of this is the 1982 murder of Vincent Chin in Detroit. Two former automobile workers thought Mr. Chin was Japanese, and they blamed Japan for unemployment in the American auto industry. Mr. Chin was beaten to death with a baseball bat the night before his wedding.

Incidents of anti-Asian behavior reportedly increased 40 percent from 1983 to 1984 in the Los Angeles area, the home of the U.S.' largest group of Asians.

As you can see, anti-Asian sentiment continues to exist in this country. This latent tendency rears its ugly head in times of economic stress, providing an excuse to abandon moral and legal principles.

Every one of us has a responsibility to do all we can to ensure that what happened to Americans of Japanese ancestry during World War II never again happens to them or to any other group. Those of us who so dearly cherish the best that America stands for, and who so deeply revere the principles and rights enumerated in our constitution, must be ever-vigilant to make sure our democratic system and due process is not stampeded again.

The internment experience was a fundamental personal and social tragedy, not only for Americans of Japanese ancestry, but for all of us. For when even one person's rights are tread upon, the rights of all of us are tread upon, and society as a whole is dimished.

I might add that, as a Jewish American, I believe I have a somewhat heightened sensitivity to the curse of racial or religious discrimination. And I believe the historical frame of reference in which I was raised has heightened my interest in fighting against discrimination wherever it might rear its ugly head.

To help ensure that the events of World War II are never repeated, I urge you to be politically involved, for with that involvement comes power. The first Asian American is now serving on the Los Angeles City Council. Others serve in other cities and towns across this country, but not enough. Don't forget that being excluded from the American political process left Americans of Japanese ancestry virtually defenseless against the horrible discriminatory actions of World War II.

Lastly, be vigilant in protecting your rights, because when you do, you help protect the rights of us all and of all citizens of our great Nation.

Thank you.

MINORITY ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT WEEK IN HARRISBURG

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, September 14, 1986 marks the official beginning of "Minority Enterprise Development Week" in Harrisburg, PA. This week, September 14–20, will focus on the minority business community and its contribution to Pennsylvania and Harrisburg in particular. A banquet will be held on Monday evening to honor all minority businesses with special recognition going to Philadelphia Design Collaborative and Leonardo Herrada Public Accountant Firm.

Philadelphia Design Collaborative, headed by Alfred M. Brown, with locations in Philadelphia and Harrisburg, is a consulting engineering firm specializing in building design and analysis, feasibility studies, electrical engineering, plumbing, and energy management and conservation.

Leonardo Herrada, PA, headed by Leonardo Herrada and located in Lewisberry, PA, is known for its prestigious clientele and outstanding professional service.

I would like to lend my support to this important event and extend my congratulations to those members of the minority business community for their contributions to the Harrisburg area and Pennsylvania.

THE NEED FOR NATO TO STEP UP ITS PUBLIC INFORMATION EFFORT

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, my friend and colleague from the North Atlantic Assembly, Mr. Peter Corterier, a member of the West German Bundestag, wrote an excellent article for the April edition of the NATO Review on a new approach to NATO's information policy.

Since NATO has come under fire from all points on the political spectrum of late, it must begin to improve its information policy in order to dispel any misconceptions that may have arisen as a result of that recent criticism. I, therefore, commend Peter Corterier's article to my colleagues so that they may have a better idea of how NATO can better get its message across.

THE ATA AND A NEW APPROACH TO NATO INFORMATION

(By Peter Corterier)

The major task of the Atlantic Treaty Association and of its national member organizations is to inform the publics of all member countries about the Alliance and to help win their continued support for its policies. As a consequence, the ATA closely follows the public debate on the Alliance and is anxious that NATO, in view of the way this debate is evolving, should adopt the right information policy.

The widespread and deeply held misconceptions that are so often found, can damage a democratic alliance such as NATO. All too frequently in recent years, a misinterpretation of Alliance policy and goals has generated a poorly informed public debate—a phenomenon which may eventually erode the credibility of NATO's deterrence and even of the West's ability to negotiate effectively in Geneva. Indeed, deterrence largely depends on the adversary's perception of our publics' determination to defend themselves in the face of aggression. Preserving this perception becomes extraordinarily difficult when the foreign policy strategic debate, so necessary to a democratically-administered alliance, is marred by the propagation of half truths, misconceptions or even outright propaganda.

The dynamics of ill-informed debate do not merely end with a confused public. The resultant unfocused national or transatlantic dialogue ultimately creates an image of NATO as an alliance beset by inescapable strategic contradictions, grown irrelevant in a changing world and caving in on itself as the waves of domestic debate loom ever larger and crash down with greater frequency. As this image becomes more accepted, the notion of ascendant American neo-isolationism and European neutralism gains currency, although neither movement is anything like as pervasive as is popularly believed. Misunderstanding Alliance policies and over-estimating its difficulties could beget a crisis of confidence in Alliance ability to deter and defend; this would be unacceptable because public confidence is a prerequisite to effective deterrence.

An article published in Janes Defense Weekly identified three elements of NATO's strategy which have contributed to greater disaffection among its publics. First of all, the strategy of flexible response, which underlines the important role of nuclear weapons for Western deterrence, has come under increasing attack from many citizen groups who have come to associate nuclear strategy with global holocaust rather than with its prevention. They maintain that no rational Western leader would ever employ nuclear weapons to "defend" national territory. If this belief takes root, public faith in NATO's ability to counter a Soviet attack naturally declines.

Secondly, a public perception has arisen that NATO is divorced from national defense. For many Europeans, the Alliance remains an abstract organization closely linked with the United States and somehow not a central actor in the defense of the national way of life. American prominence as a global power tends to reinforce this impression, particularly when certain American and European interests seem to diverge or even fully conflict.

A third important development is the change in the international system itself. One example is that since 1973, Western Europe has recognized its dependence upon imported raw materials and the concurrent strategic vulnerability which such dependence entails. As a result of NATO being confined to the Treaty Area, there is no common approach to secure the flow of strategic resources.

Finally, the Strategic Defense Initiative presents new problems with obviously important political side effects.

CONFUSING PORTRAIT

Despite such problems, NATO obviously remains a vital force in the preservation of peace. If the Alliance is genuinely in difficulty, it is in the public relations arena, not in its lack of military capabilities. To a certain extent, member governments have not seized the initiative in the struggle to inform their publics. In the West, the debate tends to be led by the radio and television media, special interest groups, newspapers, and even Soviet arms negotiators, who have effectively employed the negotiating table as a pulpit from which their country's "pacific intentions" can be preached. They all play a role in shaping how Westerners perceive today's compelling strategic issues and, collectively, they paint a confusing portrait of a complex international situation.

An urgent need exists for a higher degree of synthesis of defense-related information in the West. Arms control, generational change, SDI, Western missile deployments and conventional force modernisation are not issues locked in distinct vacuums; they are in fact highly interrelated. However, there is a tendency to treat these questions in isolation. Public perceptions of today's pressing military problems are somehow distorted or rendered even more remote when the Geneva talks are treated on page one of the local newspaper, SDI is placed in the science pages, youth attitudes towards defense are conveyed through television images of mass demonstrations, and conventional force modernisation efforts are given no mention at all or are only referred to by such slogans as FOFA or Airland Battle. One cannot deny the important role a free Press plays in the West, but at the same time, it cannot be relied upon as the principal means for coherently elucidating NATO's policies. The Alliance and its member governments must actively provide the larger meaning of seemingly unrelated developments, problems and concerns, and relate these to the notion of national defence. Only in this way can those national defence policies which are inextricably linked to NATO, achieve higher levels of public support.

In future, the Alliance will also have to stress those positive developments which so often escape public attention because of their unspectacular nature. Thus the role of the Alliance as a consultative forum on issues ranging from arms control to the monitoring of human rights must be stressed among the Western publics. NATO's recent unilateral decision to reduce considerably the nuclear stockpiles in Europe generated, for instance, very little media attention. But if the Alliance cannot adequately publicise its role as a peacemaker, and peacekeeper, then those who have cast it in the role of an aggressive militarist organisation could eventually win a devasting public relations victory. Consequently, the Alliance and its member governments must exploit such positive developments, particularly as the international press tends to ignore the more mundane but nonetheless highly relevant aspects of the West's politico-military policies. Unfortunately, the Alliance does not sufficiently support its own machinery for doing this.

There are a number of political barriers and structural features which have always operated against a more active role for the Alliance in the dissemination of information. Undoubtedly, the most important of these is that it is a collective organisation of sovereign nations and not a supranational body. Information remains a national prerogative—one which member governments are naturally keen on preserving. Governments and not the Alliance are ultimately responsible to national electorates and it is quite proper that elected officials should strive to shape the national dialogue in the most relevant terms as they see them. Obviously, no reform of the NATO information structure should be contemplated that would allow the Alliance to override an elected government's express wishes regarding how it portrays its policies to its own people. NATO's information policy therefore finds itself in a kind of limbo between supranationalism and national sovereignty. It might consequently be best to seek improvements through decentralising even further the task of getting NATO's message across.

A second problem is that NATO's public relations structure was formed in a period when the threat to the member countries was extremely well defined and fully recognized by a vast majority of the public. In a certain sense, an unambiguously bipolar world made it easier to identify national defence priorities and generate public support for them. (The obvious exception being those countries which had large anti-system parties. In these cases, national political divisions tended to reflect the greater East-West conflict and consensus remained elusive). The present public relations challenge is far more formidable simply because the international system has grown much more complex and the external "threat" is no longer so easily perceived.

ORGANISATIONAL CHANGES NECESSARY

In 1984, the North Atlantic Assembly's Civilian Affairs Committee produced a General Report on "The Public and the Alliance." The Committee brought to light the unsettling fact that despite growing public relations problems in the Alliance, NATO's Information Service has continued to operate on a shoestring budget. Clearly, the objective changes in popular attitudes and concerns have not been matched by an appropriate budgetary adjustment in the NATO information system. As a result, the North Atlantic Assembly recommended a "sharp increase" in NATO's information budget as a first step in improving Alliance communication with its citizens.

In deference to the full sovereignty of member countries, the NATO Council and its supporting committees take decisions by consensus. In practice, this means that the Information Service is prevented from producing publications, except for a particular national public relations campaign or purpose, without at least the tacit approval of all the member countries. Even when consensus is achieved, as is the case with NATO communiques, these are addressed to both Western publics and Warsaw Pact governments and they often reflect the bargaining which preceded their release. It is thus apparent that an effective public relations policy and the need for political consensus do not necessarily go hand in hand.

As well as funds for a truly effective information system, it therefore seems that some organizational measures may also be necessary. At the moment, it is not very easy for NATO to tailor information precisely for a particular country or a specific national group. One reason for this is that close contacts with national media and social interest groups are more difficult to maintain for NATO Information Service officials working mainly in Brussels; at any rate, this is the case for countries at a considerable distance from NATO Headquarters. It would be a significant advance if other officials specialising in NATO information were normally to operate in the home countries and in close contact with local politicians, media, citizen groups and the Atlantic Committees. Aware of this problem, the North Atlantic Assembly has also recommended that the North Atlantic Council, or at least individual member countries, establish information bureaux in Alliance countries willing to participate in such a programme. These offices could provide local representation by NATO Information Service officials or they could be governmental offices without a hierarchical link to NATO Headquarters. National bureaux would both diversify the content of NATO information and make it specifically relevant to national concerns.

This decentralization of NATO's information process carries a step farther the notion of national control over Alliance public relations. The creation of nationally based bureaux could extend and broaden NATO's message while directly communicating with those groupings in society which are indifferent to, or actively opposed to, Alliance policy.

Staffing these bureaux with individuals who reflect a country's particular approach would afford a new means to adapt information to the terminology and concerns of each society. Union officials, young people, lawyers and diplomats could formulate information concerning national, European and Western defence issues in such a way that NATO's message would truly be "brought home".

A commonly cited example provides a telling illustration of the way information can be made understandable and more accessible. NATO is presently involved in an important programme to improve conventional defence—a costly project certainly, but one with important and beneficial strategic consequences. Western publics do not fully appreciate or understand this effort. In contrast, the financial resources that are required to fund such a programme are readily understood and, more often than not, resented. Would not the national dialogue on the issue be more sophisticated and less emotional, if all those who are critical of NATO's present nuclear posture understood that improved conventional capability lowers the likelihood of nuclear weapons ever being used in Europe? Clearly, creating such diversely staffed bureaux could contribute to a more balanced national assessment of this and other important issues.

Such bureaux could also publicise NATO's lesser known functions such as monitoring Warsaw Pact compliance with the Helsinki Final Act—an agreement which, if fully complied with, would certainly contribute to improved East-West relations. The proper message in this case is that NATO is committed to the balanced implementation of all parts of the Final Act, including, in particular, the protection of human rights. The preservation of basic human liberties, in fact, must be popularly recognized as an essential justification for the Alliance.

ROLE OF ATLANTIC COMMITTEES

I would now like to discuss more specifically the efforts that the Atlantic Treaty Association and its national member organisations are making to help improve NATO's information effort.

One such national organization, the Atlantic Council of the United States, with the aid of the NATO Information Service, recently launched a highly successful public relations campaign in that country. Probably of even greater long-term significance is the establishment at the Atlantic Council's Headquarters in Washington of a NATO Information Office, which is partly staffed with State Department personnel, and is dedicated to explaining the purposes of the Alliance to the US public. Although it receives some funds from the NATO Information Service, the major part comes from the US private sector. This could be a first step towards achieving the ultimate North Atlantic Assembly goal of a diversely staffed organization communicating with a broader strata of the general public. And it presents a third option—essentially privately realized—for achieving the goal of setting up local NATO Information Offices.

It will, of course, be up to Atlantic Committees in other countries, and each national government, to design their own specific strategy for conveying the NATO message. In most cases, diversely staffed committees operating in each country would represent an important improvement in the present structure. France may be a special case. It has engendered a great deal of public support for defence by stressing national autonomy. This concept alone has generated a high level of public enthusiasm for national defence and support for the special ties with the Alliance. In this instance, changing the formula along the lines of the Assembly's recommendations might not prove helpful. However, it is important to remember that the French situation is quite unique in the Alliance.

The efforts of the existing Atlantic Committees could be significantly improved by greater emphasis on the Atlantic Treaty Association. The ATA is an umbrella organisation with its headquarters in Paris whose purpose is to coordinate and stimulate the work of the voluntary, nongovernmental Atlantic Committees in each of the NATO member countries. Twice yearly, these national organisations meet to report on their activities and benefit from each other's experience. Both delegates and ATA staff are briefed at the highest possible level at NATO Headquarters and SHAPE so as to remain informed about current developments.

The Secretary General of NATO, the Supreme Allied Commander Europe, and political leaders from all the member countries regularly attend the yearly plenary meetings of ATA. Two ATA programmes deserve special mention: the Atlantic Education Committee and the Atlantic Association of Young Political Leaders. The former, for example, has been concerned with the way NATO is treated in school textbooks in the member countries. The latter has grown to become an autonomous organisation and, as the name suggests, has been successful in forming transatlantic ties among the next generation of leaders.

In regard to the challenges posed by the Successor Generation, an important study sponsored by the ATA jointly with the Atlantic Institute in Paris should also be mentioned. In "The Public and Atlantic Defense" (edited by Gregory Flynn and Hans Rattinger and supported by the NATO Information Service), the increased polarisation of popular opinion about defence policy and NATO is explored on a country by country basis by a number of well-known authors.

However, the main function of the ATA remains one of coordination. Thus, a closer look at the individual Atlantic Committees is necessary to get a better understanding of the kind of information work that is being carried out.

Informing the public through the written word has been an important part of the work of the Norwegian Atlantic Committee. Approximately 20 to 25 studies on topics such as "Soviet Sea Power" and "NATO's Defence Strategy" are printed yearly. In cooperation with the Institute of International and Strategic Studies (IISS) in London, a special Norwegian version of "The Military Balance" is also published annually. The Norwegian Atlantic Committee takes particular pride in its Press service, which is responsible for drafting 60 to 80 original articles every year. Some twenty-six newspapers subscribe to this service. An important reason for the success of the Atlantic Committees is the fact that they are bi-partisan. The Norwegian organisation is a case in point. All the major political parties are represented on its Executive Board.

Almost all the Atlantic Committees host seminars and conferences, frequently with financial support from the NATO Information Service. The Netherlands Atlantic Commission, for example, held a very successful symposium on The Future of the Defence of Europe at the Hague in May 1985 with a number of high-ranking speakers from the US and Europe. They managed not only to attract most of the leading Dutch politicians to that symposium but also such personalities as NATO Secretary General Lord Carrington, and Zbigniew Brzezinski and Henry Kissinger from the United States and Horst Ehmke from Germany.

The Dutch Atlantic Commission also held a major conference on Negotiating with the Soviet Union last October, followed by a special and wisely publicised session with General Rogers in December. In the first week of September, the Netherlands Atlantic Commission organised its eighth journalists visit to Washington, the participants representing all sides of the Dutch political spectrum. Perhaps the most important feature of the Dutch Commission is that their activities are very well covered by the Dutch media.

The Atlantic Committees devote a great deal of their attention to educational institutions. The Dutch Commission cooperates closely with the two national teachers organisations, resulting in joint conferences and projects. The total output of Dutch educational publications is well over 100,000 copies annually.

The British Atlantic Committee has formed two sub-committees for its work in this area. The first deals with pupils aged 11 to 19 and concentrates on briefings at NATO in Brussels or at military headquarters in the UK for headmasters or heads of school departments. After such briefings, these teachers are asked if they can arrange a discussion at their schools thus extending the information process. This sub-committee is also preparing data sheets and posters for use by the 11 to 16 year olds in schools.

The second sub-committee concentrates on briefing academic staff of universities and polytechnics as well as interested members of the student body through departments and non-political unions and societies.

While the British Atlantic Committee presents its material in a nonpartisan manner, a sister organisation called Peace Through NATO, an all-party organisation, carries out responsible campaigning in favour of the Alliance and its policies. PTN has an excellent speakers service and provides a steady flow of speakers to churches, schools, colleges, voluntary organisations, trade unions and to so-called unilateralist groups. The success of PTN's policy of engaging groups like the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament in public debates and discussions may serve as a model to other NATO countries. In the best British tradition of political debate, PTN even has arrangements with some anti-Nuclear and pacifist organisations for PTN to provide pro-NATO speakers for some of their meetings.

As far as educational work is concerned, some valuable lessons could also be learned from the German Atlantic Committee. In the Federal Republic of Germany school presentations about NATO are made in cooperation with specially trained young officers ("Jugendoffiziere") of the Bundeswehr. These informed "citizens in uniform" do much to dissipate the distorted image of the military that is often prevalent among the young. The fact that the "generation gap" between these officers and their audience is small helps to give these officers added credibility and no doubt makes their audiences more receptive to information about the Atlantic Alliance.

These are just a few examples of the kind of work being carried out by the Atlantic Committees. If I have singled out some of our national committees and their work here it is not because the others do not work as well, but because I cannot talk about them all; I believe that the work of those I have mentioned illustrates what is done by the others.

The Atlantic Treaty Association could do much more to facilitate and support the efforts of these national organisations. An ATA bulletin, for example, has been proposed to inform the sixteen member organisations on a regular basis about each other's activities, on problems relevant to public opinion in the NATO countries, and on NATO's information policy.

In line with increased concern about the Successor Generation, a pilot seminar for teachers of history is being considered by ATA to contrast the values of the West with those of the Soviet Union. In addition, an essay contest is being planned for the eleventh grade level on the definition of a free society. However, none of these and other proposals can be translated into reality without more money. Currently, the ATA is undertaking a fund-raising drive to supplement the small membership fees from the Atlantic Committees and the relatively modest allowances from NATO. Without these additional funds, the Atlantic Treaty Association will become increasingly unable to fulfill its original purpose—namely "to counteract the recurring temptation of peaceful peoples to forget the urgency of defence".

If the NATO information structure is to be modernised, clearly the Atlantic Treaty Association and the Atlantic Committees will play an indispensable role in the process. Yet the Atlantic Committees in each country cannot alone stem the tide of public disaffection. Concerted efforts are required by member governments and by NATO itself. The Alliance will find it increasingly difficult to implement the necessary defence policies without garnering sufficient and sustained public support. Although a revised information policy cannot by itself guarantee consensus, it would represent an important acknowledgement of the crucially important role public support plays in Western defence.

A SILVER ANNIVERSARY TRIBUTE TO REV. CANON LEWIS P. BOHLER, JR.

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, the Episcopal Church of the Advent will commemorate Rev. Canon Lewis P. Bohler, Jr.'s, 25 years of distinguished service and spiritual guidance at a celebration luncheon on Saturday, October 11, 1986, at the Los Angeles Airport Hilton and Towers.

As a member of the Church of the Advent, I have witnessed the monumental impact Father Bohler's dedication, devotion, and wisdom has had on thousands of lives through his work as rector; member of the California State Board of Education; president of the Los Angeles Unified School District's Executive Council, School Volunteers; board member of the Los Angeles Brotherhood Crusade and the Los Angeles Council of Churches; and member of the Police-Community Advisory Council, the NAACP, the Urban League, and the board of directors for the USO.

Ordained to the priesthood in Trinity Cathedral in Cleveland, OH, Father Bohler holds bachelor of divinity degrees from Oberlin College and Kenyon College, as well as a bachelor of arts degree in psychology from West Virginia State College. He became rector of St. Augustine's Episcopal Church in Youngstown, OH, in July 1955 and has been rector of the Episcopal Church of the Advent since October 1, 1961.

Father Bohler, who as a member of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference marched from Selma to Montgomery during the historic civil rights crisis in 1965, has been a tireless activist for education, civil rights, and community relations. For his unflagging efforts and valuable insights, Father Bohler is the recipient of numerous honors including the first Human Relations Service Award presented by the city of Los Angeles in 1970, resolutions from the California State Assembly and Senate, and citations from the Los Angeles Urban League, the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors, and various civic, education, and business groups. Father Bohler was also named the National Association of Media Women's Newsmaker of the Year in Education for 1979, and is an honorary canon at Cathedral Church of St. Paul in Los Angeles.

Father Bohler is deeply committed to civic programs that encourage and facilitate drug addiction rehabilitation and prevention, suicide prevention, crime prevention, prison reform, and criminal rehabilitation. He is also an avid "hi-fi bug" and phonographic record collector, which is augmented by an enduring passion for music, the theater, and writing.

For the past 25 years, Father Bohler has been a vibrant, forceful, and effective leader for the parishioners of the Episcopal Church of the Advent and the citizens of Los Angeles and California. I share with them my deepest appreciation for his devoted service and my personal gratitude for his wise counsel over the years. I am deeply honored to join Father Bohler's wife, Gloria, his children, Carmen and Craig, coworkers, and many friends and well-wishers in paying this much-deserved tribute to a truly remarkable and outstanding humanitarian.

THE NATIONAL FORUM

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues an initiative which is a most important endeavor being undertaken by the students of Milton Academy, Milton, MA.

On April 30, 1986, Dr. Helen Caldicott, the founder of Physicians for Social Responsibility, addressed the student body at Milton Academy, Milton, MA. Her clear and dramatic depiction of the consequences of nuclear confrontation elicited an electric and passionate response from the Milton students. For several days after her speech, classrooms and assembly halls were filled with churning and controversial discussion. Regardless of their own positions, students soon came to understand that they were insufficiently informed about the complexities of the nuclear issue to have a reasoned response to Dr. Caldicott's presentation. They could argue with vehemence, but they were arguing out of ignorance. As one student said, "How can I have an opinion? I don't know anything."

This frustration led to a student-initiated movement on campus. Open meetings during the next week brought together about 120 students and 30 faculty members. Students sustained this level of interest during the remainder of the school year as the project began to take shape. By early June, merely a month after the address of Dr. Caldicott, the National Forum was established, a summer organization was put into place, and the task of making the project a reality began.

The National Forum is a grassroots, educational effort, designed to bring all the high school students of America together in a cooperative movement. It has two parts. The National Forum is one, a petition drive to get the 15.6 million high school students of America to request, two, a nationally televised forum on the nuclear arms issue.

First, the petition drive will start from Milton Academy and fan out across America. We are sending a letter to every high school principal and student council president in the 20,000 high schools of the United States, urging their students to sign a petition between election day 1986 and the last day of classes in January 1987.

Second, the petition itself will call for a nationally televised forum on the nuclear arms issue. It should be educational in nature, nonpartisan. It should present an array of opinions, a spectrum of the diversity of viewpoints that exist on the nuclear arms issue. President Reagan should be one of the participants, and high school students should have an opportunity to question the experts who make the presentations. As one student from Nebraska commented, "The National Forum attempts to show students how to think, not what to think."

We hope that the National Forum can become a regular program of the national media, focusing each year on an important national or international issue.

The National Forum fulfills several student needs:

It emphasizes the value of impartiality, of free and open discussion, a hallmark of American democracy;

It demonstrates that students of vastly differing views can come together over a common issue;

It involves future voters in a process of public discussion and decisionmaking, preparing them for the difficult task of citizenship;

It educates students about a crucial issue of our times;

It helps develop in students a consciousness beyond their own individual circumstances; and

It shows students that they can make a difference.

The National Forum is coming from high school students; it is being directed to high school students; and it will be participated in by high school students.

The National Forum is a project endorsed by the executive board of the National Association of Student Councils.

NUNQUAM FIDELIS

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, this week's Village Voice has a good story on an interesting Korean war episode.

The story follows:

PAT ROBERTSON'S KOREAN COP-OUT: WITH DAD ON HIS SIDE

(By Joe Canason, Jack Newyfield, and James Ridgeway)

"My single distinct memory," wrote former Congressman Pete McCloskey, "is of Pat with a big grin on his face, standing on the dock at Kobe after his second phone call, saying something like, 'So long you guys—good luck,' and telling us that his father had gotten him out of combat duty."

There is nothing covered up
That will not be uncovered,
Nothing hidden
That will not be made known.
What I say to you in the dark
You must repeat in broad daylight;
What you hear whispered
You must shout from the housetops.—Matthew 10:26,27 (cited as the epigraph in Pat Robertson's 1971 autobiography, Shout It From the Housetops.

By January 1951, American and United Nations troops had suffered severe casualties against the Chinese and North Korean armies in the bloody conflict on the Korean peninsula. The First Marine Division had several weeks earlier completed a disastrous retreat with great loss of life—one of the worst defeats in the history of the corps.

As the Americans reeled from the deadly winter cold and the human wave assaults of the Chinese, A. Willis Robertson, the conservative democrat from Virginia, rose on the floor of the United States Senate, 5000 miles from the scene of combat. He wanted to share with his colleagues a message one of his consitutents had just received from a son on the front lines: "I don't see how they expect us to operate an army over here with what little they gave us," the young soldier wrote home. "Most of our Division is about half strength from the lack of equipment and replacements. I think they should either do the job or move out. They are letting the Chinese make fools of us." After reading this bitter letter, Robertson said, "I urge you to use your influence to right this deplorable situation. This is certainly not upholding the democratic way of life for which our men in Korea are fighting and dying."

This was not the first time Robertson had spoken up for more manpower and firepower in Korea and for a keener appreciation by all Americans of the terrible toll the war was taking on soldiers who fought there. In August 1950, he listened to an emotional speech by a colleague who had just seen off a National Guard unit, and now was calling for total mobilization. The Virginian, a veteran of World War I, rose and declared, "The senator has delivered a very wonderful speech. I listened to it with great interest and with keen approval of its appeal to the nation to mobilize our spiritual powers, and our physical powers, and to spread evenly the burden of defending our manner of life."

Shortly after Willis Robertson's January Senate speech, his own son, Marion G. "Pat" Robertson, shipped out from San Diego aboard the USS Breckinridge with the Fifth Replacement draft—a battalion of fresh Marines headed for battle in Korea. Proud members of the First Marine Division, nearly all the men on the Breckinridge would soon be facing Chinese shellfire and bayonets. Many would die. But young Robertson would not face those dangers—and now a former Marine buddy, war hero, and U.S. congressman has come forward to say that Robertson used his father's influence to avoid combat.

In a six-page August 4 letter to Indiana representative Andrew Jacobs Jr.—who is also a decorated Korea veteran—former California Republican congressman Paul N. "Pete" McCloskey, reconstructed the events of winter 1951 aboard the Breckinridge. He and Robertson were both second lieutenants, and during the two-week trip to Japan they became well acquainted. "Pat was affable, barrulous, and candid; he spoke frankly of his desire to avoid combat and to have his father . . . intervene on his behalf," recalled McCloskey.

According to McCloskey's recollection, aided by diaries and conversations with Marine comrades, Robertson went ashore at a Navy base in Japan. "I believe most of us thought he was joking when he told us he was going to call his father and request transfer off the ship," said McCloskey. Apparently Robertson did make such a call: the ship proceeded to Kobe, but when it left Kobe for Korea, Robertson was not aboard.

"My single distinct memory," wrote McCloskey, "is of Pat with a big grin on his face, standing on the dock at Kobe after his second phone call, saying something like, "So long you guys—good luck," and telling us that his father had gotten him out of combat duty." Months later, when McCloskey and other battle-weary platoon leaders were rotated back to the rear, he met up with Second Lieutenant John Gearhart, a former shipmate, who told him more about what happened to Robertson.

"Gearhart told us he had been one of three other second lieutenants who had been pulled off the ship with Robertson at Kobe, in Gearhart's mind solely to disguise the political nature of Robertson's case," McCloskey wrote. Gearhart was unhappy that they had been assigned to a rehabilitation camp in Japan, far from the front lines, and informed superiors that he and the three other junior officers had never seen combat. Within a day, all four were sent to Korea. But according to McCloskey, only Gearhart and the other two officers ended up in rifle companies. Robertson became an assistant adjutant, the so-called "liquor officer," quite safe at division headquarters. "Robertson's major duty was apparently to fly to Japan once a week and bring back booze for the officers' mess. On occasion I believe it was possible that those at Division HQ could hear the distant firing of our own artillery batteries. . . .

"I did not see Pat again," McCloskey continued, "until turning on a television set in Southern California one morning in 1981 or 1982 and seeing his smiling face on [The 700 Club]. . . . He was blasting Congress for being 'soft on Communism." I couldn't help laughing over the incongruity of Pat's new views. . . . There are several others [Marine vets] whom I see from time to time and share a laugh with occasionally over the reborn Pat Robertson who would now lead us against the dreaded communist menace."

Most journalistic accounts of the life of Pat Robertson, TV messiah and soon-to-be-announced Republican presidential candidate, describe him, as Time did last February, as "a combat officer in Korea." Time's notion of Robertson under fire probably came from the biographical handout of his Freedom Council political operation, which claimed until quite recently that its leader had served in combat. According to Michael Kramer, who profiled the minister for New York last month, an aide to Robertson suddenly called the combat reference "a mistake" when Kramer innocently asked about it, and added. "We'll have to change that." But Robertson's 1971 autobiography, Shout It From the Housetops, makes the same supposed "error" on page 14, in a blustering list of his own accomplishments. However, Robertson's military service is strangely absent from his Who's Who entries.

Of course, the warrior image comports well with Robertson's belligerent religiosity and apocalyptic militarism. He is not just an electronic ayatollah who talks to God and redirects hurricanes; he is an Armageddon theologist who believes that Jesus will literally lead a host of believers in a horrible war against Satan. All Christians will be required to serve in this holy war (and the only liquor officers are likely to be in the devil's tent). In the meantime, Robertson has been an ardent apologist for former Guatemalan president Rios Mont, an evangelical dictator who carried out a little Armageddon against the defenseless Indians of his own country, supposedly at God's command. Robertson, who cites Isaiah to prove that "Pacifism is not Biblical," also predicts war with the Soviet Union. On a more personal level, he has tried to bully critics such as television producer Norman Lear. "Though I am a former Golden Gloves boxer," he warned Lear in a 1981 letter, "I dislike fights. I seldom fight but when I do I seldom lose."

A spokesman for Robertson has denied that Willis Robertson helped his son avoid combat duty. McCloskey was first quoted about Robertson's avoidance of combat duty in a newspaper article in which he said Robertson "had wanted no part of the communists in Korea when he had had the chance. Pat saw the article and sent me a letter mildly objecting, but making no objections as to its veracity." McCloskey was on a backpacking trip in the High Sierra and thus unreachable last week.

Robertson's political ambitions may depend on whether Americans believe him or McCloskey. Robertson is a faith healer who soothes his contributors' hemorrhoids, claims to have turned Hurricane Gloria away from the Virginia shore (and toward New York City), and has referred to non-Christians as "termites."

McCloskey is widely respected for his candor and courage, both in politics and as a genuine war hero. A platoon leader in Korea, he was wounded while leading a bayonet charge up Hill 566 and was awarded the Navy Cross, the Silver Star, and the Purple Heart. But he came to strongly oppose the war in Vietnam, and his 1972 campaign against Richard Nixon in the snows of New Hampshire proved he would fight for his beliefs even in the face of certain defeat by a president of his own party. Andy Jacobs Jr. went to Korea while his father was a member of Congress from the district he now represents. Nobody pulled strings for him.

Wounded by shrapnel, former Marine private Jacobs is entitled to a 10 per cent disability, but he refused to collect it after his election in 1964. He has strong feelings about proxy patriots like Robertson. "I doubt there are more than 20 of us in Congress who have ever faced a man with a rifle who was actually trying to kill you," he once said. "When I hear these men who have never been in such a circumstance casually contemplate sending teenagers off to Lebanon and other troubled places, my nerves go cold."

UNITED STATES LOSING TROPICAL FORESTS

HON. JOHN F. SEIBERLING

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, in June, the House passed legislation, authored by our distinguished colleague GUS YATRON, to provide aid to other countries to help in preserving the world's tropical forests. The bill is now under consideration in the Senate.

Tropical rain forests are believed to provide over 20 percent of the renewal of the Earth's oxygen supply. They are also major factors in moderating the climate as well as preserving soil and water quality. As scientists begin to understand the potentially catastrophic consequences of the "greenhouse effect" and the resultant overheating of the world's climate because of the increase in concentration of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, the preservation of tropical forests is becoming crucial. They also constitute the major reserve of biological species, whose potential for medicinal and agricultural purposes have yet to be fully understood and utilized.

For all these reasons, the Yatron bill, modest as it is, constitutes an extremely important step in raising national and global recognition of the urgency of protecting the tropical forests. Ironically, it now appears that thousands of acres of tropical forests in the United States itself are in danger. A recent article by Erik Van Lennep, printed in the September 3 issue of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, presented some details of our own domestic tropical forest crisis.

According to the article, the U.S. Virgin Islands loss of forest cover has caused streams to dry up and water must be imported from Puerto Rico or distilled from seawater.

In Puerto Rico, some 200,000 acres of the island have been deemed suitable for commerical forestry, including the 28,000-acre Caribbean National Forest. This national forest, which contains three-fourths of Puerto Rico's virgin timber, according to the article, is home to over 225 native tree species and at least three endangered animal species, including the Puerto Rican parrot, whose population has dwindled to about 16.

The Plain Dealer article states that in Hawaii the situation is just as grim. Of the 57 species of birds once found in the island's forests, 23 are now extinct and 23 more are endangered. Eight hundred of Hawaii's native plant species are endangered and 270 are already extinct. The principal cause is deforestation, according to the article. The deforestation is continuing at an accelerated pace, encouraged by Federal and State policies that provide tax advantages for conversion of rain forests to cattle pastures.

The Campbell estate last year converted into pasture 1,000 acres of what has been described as the best lowland rain forest left in Hawaii and is now planning a 9,000-acre geothermal energy complex in a rain forest preserve on the slopes of Kilauea Volcano. Environmentalists say the project could wipe out the home of several endangered species. Ironically, since the project would produce more power than is needed on the Big Island, the State and Federal governments are funding a $27 million study on the feasibility of laying a power cable from Hawaii to Oahu.

In short, Mr. Speaker, it is becoming increasingly clear that further action is needed to protect rain forests located within our own borders. Such action would not only be in our own long-term interest but would be a further demonstration of our commitment to the global conservation goals developed at the Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference on Environment held at Nairobi, Kenya, in 1984. Among other things, the conference recommended that national legislators should urge their governments to give priority to conservation of the biosphere and its component ecosystems and, in particular, "To control the use of certain essentially nonrenewable forest types, particularly in the humid tropics and boreal regions of the world, so as to retain sufficient areas of the existing forests to maintain ecological balance."

By the extensive designation of wilderness areas and national parks by the Congress over the years and the continuing addition of protected areas, the Congress has demonstrated a national commitment to the preservation of boreal forests in the United States. However, clearly the time has come for us to take additional action with respect to the tropical forests located in our island territories. Leadership by the United States in these fields is essential if we expect other countries, particularly those with very large tropical forests, to adopt the conservation disciplines that are essential to preserving the global environment on which all life depends.

The complete text of the Plain Dealer article follows these remarks:

U.S. LOSES TROPICAL FORESTS

(By Erik Van Lennep)

In June the U.S. House of Representatives passed $10 million in aid to help preserve the world's tropical forests. With over 100 acres of rain forest disappearing every minute around the globe, the measure, now under Senate consideration, is badly needed.

Unfortunately, what politicians seem not to have recognized is that thousands of acres of tropical forest on the United States' own soil are in mortal danger as well.

In the U.S. Virgin Islands loss of forest cover has caused streams to dry up, and water must now be either imported from Puerto Rico, or distilled from sea water.

In Puerto Rico some 200,000 acres of the island have been deemed suitable for commercial forestry, including the 28,000-acre Caribbean National Forest, which contains three-fourths of Puerto Rico's virgin timber. This tropical rain forest is home to over 225 native trees species and at least three endangered animal species: the Arctic peregrine falcon, Puerto Rican parrot, and the Puerto Rican boa. The Puerto Rican parrot, whose population since the 1950s has dwindled from 200 to about 16, is found nowhere else on Earth.

A number of international bodies, including the United Nations, have recommended that most of the Caribbean National Forest be declared an "international biosphere preserve," and clearly as such the park offers Puerto Rico and the world far more than the meager revenue expected from timber sales. The National Forest Service's own socioeconomic impact assessments indicate that local employment would not be boosted significantly by new logging.

Meanwhile new roads will be built, increasing access to previously undistrubed areas, and what were once forest habitats will come to be regarded as crops. In an attempt to regulate tree growth, NFS has proposed an integrated pest management system that would bring an arsenal of toxic chemicals to a relatively pristine area.

In Hawaii, the situation is just as grim.

The Hawaiian archipelago is one of the most isolated island systems in the world. After millions of years of evolution, more than 95% of its flowering plants and 90% of its animals are unique to Hawaii. Yet of the 57 species of birds once found in the islands' forests, 23 are now extinct; 23 more are endangered. Eight hundred of Hawaii's estimated 3,000 native plant species are endangered, and 270 are already extinct.

The cause is deforestation, which began when the Polynesians arrived 1,500 years ago, but increased dramatically with the coming of Europeans and Americans in the 18th century.

Now local environmental groups are fighting what they term "a new boom in deforestation." Most of the destruction takes place on private land, encouraged by federal and state policies that provide tax advantages for conversion of rain forests to cattle pasture. Typically, the trees are chipped and sold to Hawaii Electric Light Co. to fuel its power plant.

Last year the Campbell Estate, a large landholder near Hilo, converted 1,000 acres of what University of Hawaii botanist Dieter Mueller-Dombios described as "the best lowland rain forest left in Hawaii" into pasture and wood chips.

The Campbell Estate is also the site of Hawaii's most controversial development, a 9,000-acre geothermal energy complex located in the Wao Kele O Puna rain forest preserve. The facility is to be developed upon the slopes of Kilauea Volcano.

Environmentalists say the project could wipe out the home of several endangered species. For native Hawaiians, the development would be like drilling for oil in the Vatican's Sistine Chapel.

The big island does not even need the estimated 100 megawatts of new power, so the state and federal governments are funding a $27 million study on the feasibility of laying the world's longest deep-sea power cable, to send electricity to Oahu. The project is estimated at $400 million.

Why, one may well ask, are federal and state governments, and by proxy all of us, willing to fund the same destruction on U.S. soils that we discourage overseas?

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO LA COOPERATIVA CAMPESINA DE CALIFORNIA

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and honor to call your attention and that of my colleagues to a special anniversary celebration of the founding of La Cooperativa Campesina De California, a Sacramento-based statewide association of migrant and seasonal farmworker organizations.

On August 20, 1986, La Cooperativa will celebrate its ninth year of providing effective, critically needed programs in job training, employment, housing, migrant education, child care, elderly nutrition, vocational rehabilitation, and energy conservation programs and services for farmworkers and other rural poor.

An umbrella group of four private, nonprofit organizations, it includes the Santa Rosa-based California Human Development Corp.; the Center for Employment Training in San Jose; the Central Valley Occupational Center in Merced and Visalia-based Proteus Employment and Training, Inc. Its two public agencies are the Employers' Training Resource of Bakersfield, and representation from the Employment Development Department's Office of the Monitor Advocate. Together, they provide a variety of human and social services for refugees, handicapped, frail elderly, minority women, veterans, ex-offenders, and out-of-school youth.

La Cooperativa's member agencies are awarded grants and contracts to provide programs and services from six Federal agencies and three State agencies. The association operates 64 service and training centers with 900 professional and technical staff. Since its inception in 1977, La Cooperativa has helped more than 1 million people and has placed 62,537 individuals in unsubsidized private industry jobs through its skills training programs. Another 26,800 families have received housing assistance, weatherization, and related energy services.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the U.S. House of Representatives, I would like to offer my personal congratulations and best wishes to the officers, management, and staff of the association members for their fine organizations, outstanding accomplishments, and enduring commitment to those in our society who are less fortunate and who must rely on our Nation's social and economic safety net.

GOOD WORKS BY THE BROTHERS OF CHOSEN FRIENDS

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time to commend a fine group of men from my district who have consistently given of themselves to help others in our community. The Brothers of Chosen Friends, have given their time to a number of programs which benefit the underprivileged of the Harrisburg area including running a yearly Toys for Tots and Christmas Basket Program at Christmastime.

This past year the Toys and Tots Program put smiles on the faces of over 75 children while the Christmas Basket Program provided over 60 families with a Christmas feast. Other worthy projects have included the Knights of Pythagoras Youth Program serving young men ages 13 to 18 to curb juvenile delinquency, and strengthen moral character. Another program, the College Bound School Program, has helped students defray the cost of books.

The goodness of this group of men is not limited to our younger generation. The senior citizens of the hill area of Harrisburg were the guests at an open house hosted by the Chosen Friends this past Christmas.

I would like to thank each member of this group for their interest in improving the Harrisburg community.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE INDIAN AMERICAN FORUM FOR POLITICAL EDUCATION

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert in the RECORD a copy of a speech made by Mrs. Achamma Chandersekaran, president of the Indian American Forum for Political Education. The speech was delivered at the National Federation of Asian Indian Organizations' fourth National Biennial Convention held in Anaheim, CA this past August.

It is my pleasure to better acquaint my colleagues with the fine work being done by the forum, and I hope they will take a moment to read Mrs. Chandersekaran's fine speech.

I would also like to mention that next Wednesday, September 17, the forum will be hosting a congressional luncheon in honor of "Citizen's Day" in the Mike Mansfield room in the Capitol from 11:30 to 1:30. I have been told that we are all cordially invited.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE INDIAN AMERICAN FORUM FOR POLITICAL EDUCATION

The Indian American Forum for Political Education was established solely for promoting political awareness and civic consciousness among Indian Americans, and as such, it complements the sociocultural activities of the Asian Indian organizations. We do not lobby nor do we work for one particular political party. Our goal is to get every Indian American to realize the need to get involved politically.

About five years ago we realized that whether we are involved or not, state and federal laws that affect our lives will be passed and we have no choice but to obey them. If we are politically involved, we can have some say in what form the laws are passed. We can have some influence on the lawmakers at the local, state and national levels.

It is this realization that made the Forum members testify before the Senate Committee on Immigration. The surprising results of that testimony encouraged everyone.

Indian Americans all over the country realized the impact a politically oriented organization can have and State Chapters of the Forum sprung up in many parts of the country.

The history of Asian Indians in many countries should teach us that unity and political involvement are necessary for the long-term well-being of our community. The history of countries like Guayana and Kenya may not be repeated here because this is a country of immigrants. But we must realize that problems take different forms. Consider the legislative initiatives regarding the medical profession. Professional medical organizations have enough clout and money to persuade the U.S. Congress that there is going to be a surplus of doctors in this country and, therefore, we don't need any more foreign medical graduates here. Bills that had been shelved are now expected back on the floor of the Congress next year. A bill is being introduced in the California legislature requiring foreign dental graduates to drop the DDS after their names. Already, there are laws in several states requiring nurses to take additional exams before they can take the exam to be a Registered Nurse.

Do we wait and see what will come next? For instance, will the Indian American motel owners become the target like the Korean grocery store owners in the Washington, D.C., area? The time to take preventive measures is now. Now is the time to use our votes and other resources to elect candidates who will be sensitive to our needs. Find out what your candidates have to say on matters that will affect our lives here.

Reportedly, this year more Indian Americans have taken fund raising initiatives for candidates of both parties and more Indian Americans are contributing to campaign funds. But contributions alone will not help us. We need to meet especially with the candidates for state and local offices before primaries and find out about their views on matters of our concern. Since we go to the dining table with more than just an appetite, make sure what we take with us will benefit us and our children. Let us show the candidates that we take the civic responsibilities of citizenship seriously and we are concerned about our future and our children's future. It may be too late for this year. But let us start now to get organized so that working with the other Asian Americans under the umbrella of Asian American Voters Coalition, we can have a decisive impact in 1988, when the next president also will be elected.

If you study the history of immigration to this country, you will find that, compared to many other national groups that came before us, such as the Irish and the Italians, we are doing very well as first generation because of our education and knowledge of the English language. We have not been called as many names as they have been, or treated as badly because of the changes in the laws of this country. We should be careful not to turn this advantage into a curse. The fact that we did not go through the hardships that others went through does not mean we can just sit back and enjoy the good life. As intelligent beings we need to learn from the experiences of others, we need to have the foresight to see the need for political involvement and take steps to prevent similar things from ever happening to us or our children. Otherwise, we are not as smart as we think and our education is not yet complete.

If we accept the combination of two American ideas, we will be able to do many things. The first one: it is not economic well being, but political involvement that is the ultimate power in this country. President Reagan, the Kennedys and the Rockefellers are all examples. And the second one: team playing is considered a requirement for success in this country. If you are not a teamplayer, you do not get very far. Therefore, out of our diversity we need to find the basis for unity, and get involved politically. As a unified community we can accomplish great things and reach new heights.

Let us begin to promote political awareness among our own. Let us work together to protect our rights. Then, I am sure, history will record that the unique community of Asian Indians in America used their education and wealth with wisdom and foresight.

A TRIBUTE TO JAMES GARITO

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, on Friday evening, September 19, 1986, at the Villa Nova on 19th Street and Avenue E, Bayonne, NJ, a testimonial dinner will be held in honor of James Garito, president of the Bayonne Board of Education.

James Garito is the oldest son of the late Michael and Catherine Garito of San Vito S'Iono, Italy. Mr. Garito is a life-long resident of Bayonne. He attended local elementary schools and graduated from Bayonne Technical High School in 1940. After graduation, he entered the U.S. Marine Corps and served during World War II as a demolitions expert and section leader. He fought in the Pacific theater and was with the Marines who invaded Iwo Jima. For his service in the Pacific, he was awarded the Bronze Star for Meritorious Service. After his discharge from the service, he married the former Dorothy Stanek. They have been married for 39 years and have three children, Michael, Kathleen, and Christine, and six grandchildren.

In 1946, Mr. Garito began a career with Hunt Wesson Foods. He worked for the company in a supervisory position for more than 30 years and just recently retired in 1985.

In 1963, Mr. Garito was appointed executive director of the Bayonne Parking Authority, and he continues to serve in this position. In 1980, Mayor Dennis Collins appointed him a trustee of the Bayonne Board of Education. This past May, he was elected president of the board.

Mr. Garito has been active in many community activities. He is a parishioner of Our Lady of the Assumption Parish where he has served as past president of the Holy Name Society and was a founding member of the parish council. He has also served in a number of other capacities at the parish including chairman of the annual carnival for 5 years.

Mr. Garito is also a member of the Assumption Catholic War Veterans Post 1612. He is a past commander of this post. He is also past president of the Bayonne Chapter of UNITO and a founding trustee of the Dominic J. DelMonte Lodge of the Sons of Italy. He has also been active with the Bayonne Detachment of the United States Marine Corps League, the Sicilian Citizens Club, the New Frontier Democrats and the Elks Club.

Mr. Garito has informed the testimonial dinner committee that he would like all proceeds from the affair to go to the Social Concerns Committee of Our Lady of the Assumption Church to help them continue the good work they are doing for the entire city of Bayonne.

I am certain that my colleagues here in the House of Representatives wish to join me today in this well-deserved tribute to James Garito, servant of God, servant of mankind.

Jim Garito is a perfect example of the spirit of the 14th District I represent wherein people silently, steadily and unselfishly continue to support their community and programs of good will.

Jim Garito has already been blessed by his God. I join with the people of Bayonne and all his friends here this evening assuring him of our thanks and further blessings which we just know will be forthcoming.

IN HONOR OF THE LATE ADMIRAL FRANK D. HIGBEE

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week, the Los Angeles Harbor area lost one of its most respected residents, Adm. Frank D. Higbee.

Admiral Higbee, whom my wife, Lee, and I counted as one of our closest friends, was recognized as an expert in marine and port-related matters. On many occasions, I would call on Admiral Higbee to ask his opinion on various issues affecting the Ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach. And I was always amazed with his depth of knowledge and ability to comprehend the subject matter. I shall miss his guidance and counsel.

An excellent summary of Admiral Higbee's accomplishments, as it appeared in yesterday's Los Angeles Times, follows:

FRANK HIGBEE, FORMER L.A. PORT WARDEN

(By Jerry Belcher)

Retired Coast Guard Rear Adm. Frank D. Higbee, who went to sea on everything from square-rigger sailing ships to nuclear-powered vessels, has died in San Pedro at the age of 92.

Higbee, a decorated veteran of World Wars I and II, served as warden of the Port of Los Angeles for nearly 20 years.

Vigorous and alert to the end, he collapsed during his regular daily workout at the local YMCA, was rushed to San Pedro Peninsula Hospital and pronounced dead of cardiac arrest at 8:02 a.m. Monday.

"I'll really miss him," his daughter, Anne Higbee-Glace, said Tuesday, "but when a man dies at 92 while doing push-ups—that's the way to go." Although he has long since stopped going to sea, he maintained his first-class pilot's license, renewing it only last July. "Allowing it to lapse," he told a reporter, "is to sink into the past."

A native of Albany, N.Y., orphaned as a child, Higbee enlisted in the Navy in 1913, serving on the cruiser Galveston in the Pacific, and on the Bainbridge, the first destroyer in the American fleet. By 1917, he has risen to the rank of warrant officer, and with the outbreak of World War I he was promoted to ensign.

He served throughout the war on transports, crossing and recrossing the U-boat-infested North Atlantic.

After the war he took his discharge to try farming in Oregon but went back to sea within a few months as an officer in the Merchant Marine.

He was commissioned a lieutenant in the Coast Guard in 1926. His first tour of duty as a Coast Guardsman was aboard the barkentine Bear, on which he spent two years in Arctic waters.

He served as Coast Guard captain of the port for Long Beach and Los Angeles just before World War II.

In 1942, Higbee took command of the troop ship General Scott, later transferring to the Pacific Theater to command a flotilla of 32 landing ships.

Among his most treasured possessions was a portrait of Gen. Douglas MacArthur inscribed "to Capt. Higbee, a Comrade in Arms."

"I was serving as beach master at Taclaban, in Leyte, and met the general when he waded ashore on his historic 'I have returned' landing [in the Philippines]," Higbee recalled in a 1980 interview. "I saluted and said, 'Good morning, general,' and he responded with only four words, 'See me in Tokyo.'"

Higbee did indeed see MacArthur in Japan at the end of the war, when the veteran seaman was named to the temporary post of captain of the Port of Yokohama.

Higbee retired from the Coast Guard in 1946 as a rear admiral and in 1947 was appointed port warden, the port's chief technical administrator. Higbee was legendary for his strictness in enforcing safety regulations in the port and in 1954—long before the ecology movement became popular—had the master of a vessel jailed for spilling gasoline in the harbor. Some labor union leaders and shipping executives demanded his ouster because of his tough stance on safety.

After retiring from that post, he later became maritime adviser to the State Lands Commission.

His daughter Anne, of Bolton, Mass., is a veteran of Coast Guard duty during World War II. He also is survived by daughters Joan Mercer of Toronto, Canada, a World War II veteran of the Women's Army Corps, and attorney Joyce Denny of Monrovia.

A memorial service will be held Sept. 23 at the Navy chapel on Terminal Island.

TRIBUTE TO MR. JAMES ARNHART

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, on September 1, 1986, Mr. James Arnhart, president and chief executive officer of Middle Tennessee Medical Center in Murfreesboro, retired after 33 years of service to this hospital. I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join Mr. Arnhart's family, friends, associates, and the entire community in paying a special tribute to him.

As the longest tenured hospital administrator in Tennessee, Mr. Arnhart has unselfishly given his time and compassion to the hospital to ensure top quality health care for all of us in the middle Tennessee community. Reflecting this dedication, he was honored recently for meritorious service in hospital administration by the Tennessee Hospital Association.

In 1953, James Arnhart began leadership of Rutherford Hospital which had been seriously threatened by organizational and financial problems. The hospital had made no real progress in 23 years and its future prognosis was no better.

Within the next 33 years, the small, general care hospital underwent a complete about-face into a progresssive medical center offering a variety of services with Arnhart at the helm. He eliminated an enormous debt, increased the capacity by over 200 beds, and added a long list of services including a critical care pavillion housing laser surgery, a radiology suite and a nuclear medicine facility. Also nearing completion are a physicians' office building and a substance abuse center.

The influence that James Arnhart has had on Middle Tennessee Medical Center is obvious to everyone in the area who has brought a new life into the world, broken an arm or leg, required emergency surgery, or needed many other types of medical attention. We are all very grateful to him.

I would like to share a portion of a letter that I received from one of James Arnhart's associates, Ms. Rebecca Climer, who quite eloquently described his accomplishments:

I am most anxious to see Mr. Arnhart recognized for his outstanding service to the people of Rutherford and the seven surrounding counties which make up MTMC's service area.

A community hospital touches the lives of everyone near and Mr. Arnhart has imbued Middle Tennessee Medical Center with a spirit of pride in achievement that has resulted in excellent medical care for the area. Since his arrival at Middle Tennessee Medical Center in 1953, Mr. Arnhart has been responsible for the literal metamorphosis of this facility. He came to a smallish, troubled hospital and, by determination and foresight, has transformed it into a vital, multiservice medical center.

Mr. Arnhart means a great deal to the employees of this Medical Center and the citizens of this commuity.

I believe Ms. Climer's feelings are shared by everyone in the entire community.

James Arnhart is truly a humanitarian, a man dedicated to his profession and to his community. I extend to him a hearty congratulations and with him an enjoyable and fruitful retirement.

MAKING THE CASE FOR THE SELF-EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY ACT

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, last year DICK GEPHARDT and I introduced legislation to permit carefully screened unemployment insurance recipients to use their earned benefits to start up small businesses. Such use is now prohibited by Federal law. Our legislation, cosponsored by Representatives SCHUMER, LUNGREN, and others, would build on successful models in France and Great Britain. Over the past 7 years, these European programs have assisted in the creation of more than 250,000 small business ventures.

Since our Self-Employment Opportunity Act was introduced, we have often been asked, "Could it really help dislocated workers and the structually unemployed here in the United States?" Enormously compelling evidence that it could is found in a September 8 Wall Street Journal article by Bill Richards: "Starting Up: Blue-Collar Laborers, Laid Off In Rust Belt, Try to Run Own Firms."

This eye-opening piece highlights the rapid growth of blue-collar entrepreneurs, who are proving an unexpected boon to depressed Rust Belt State economies. This fascinating new trend upends the conventional notion that the past decade's sharp increase in small business start-ups have been strictly white collar and service sector. Ten percent of the displaced workers who have returned to work have done so by starting their own businesses, according to a Federal estimate cited in the Journal.

The employment boom in certain depressed industrial States is attributed to displaced workers' entrepreneurship; Ohio, for example, has gained an impressive 286,000 jobs over the past 2 years. Potential new entrepreneurs like these are precisely the people the Self-Employment Opportunity Act is designed to foster.

Our legislation would set up pilot projects administered locally in 5 to 10 different States. Clearly the concept would not work for every unemployed person. It would, however, give those who do have the ideas, drive, and access to other working capital a leg up. And, of course, if their ventures were successful, they would eventually create jobs for the pool of workers not assisted directly by our proposal.

Mr. GEPHARDT and I are pleased to share this significant and engaging article:

STARTING UP: BLUE-COLLAR LABORERS, LAID OFF IN RUST BELT, TRY TO RUN OWN FIRMS

THE ADMIRAL TRIO IN ILLINOIS

EAST MOLINE, ILL.—The newly minted business card says "Admiral Improvement Inc." and sports a whirling atom in the corner. Richard Meers, Admiral's president, looks a bit abashed as he offers it to a visitor.

Mr. Meers confesses that the name doesn't really stand for anything. "Admiral gets you to the head of the line in the Yellow Pages," he says. As for the atom, Admiral's president says that when he went to choose checks for his new company, a bank official offered him a list of corporate symbols. "It was that," he says, "or a road grader."

In truth, there isn't much to Admiral Improvement at this stage of the game: three empty desks, a cavernous building in this economically stricken Mississippi River town, a handful of secondhand machinery and the dreams of Mr. Meers, James Goodwin and Robert Schoemaker. The three beefy factory hands formed Admiral Improvement after they lost their jobs in January when International Harvester Co.

closed its Farmall tractor plant in nearby Rock Island, Ill.

AN UNEXPECTED BOOST

Short on cash and business experience but long on blue-collar skills and enthusiasm, the three partners belong to a growing group of garage-shop entrepreneurs springing up in some of the nation's most devastated industrial areas. Many of these newcomers are striking out on their own rather than choose low-paying service employment or no work at all. Little noticed at first, the blue-collar entrepreneurs now are giving several recession-weary states an unexpected economic boost.

"There's a striking growth in new jobs in some of these states that have really been clobbered," says John D. Kasarda, the chairman of the sociology department at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. In a recent study, Mr. Kasarda found that Rust Bowl states hit hard during the most recent recession, such as Ohio, Michigan and Pennsylvania, are generating some of the biggest gains in new jobs.

Nationwide, small-business start-ups have more than doubled in the past decade, to 700,000 annually. That explosive growth has been widely noted, but what is surprising many experts now is the extent of blue-collar participation.

THE LOW-TECH FACTOR

"Most of these new jobs are low-tech or are applications of technology," says David Birch, the head of Massachusetts Institute of Technology's program on neighborhood and regional change. "And blue-collar workers are filling those jobs." Nearly 10% of the nation's displaced blue-collar workers who have returned to work are operating their own businesses, federal researchers say.

Some of the new start-ups have been masked by traditional job classifications. Messrs. Meers, Schoemaker and Goodwin, for example, are performing essentially the same work at Admiral Improvement that they did for Farmall—welding, salvaging and renovating machinery. When their Farmall jobs ended, the government listed the loss in the manufacturing sector. Admiral's new owners now are lumped in the service sector, a more amorphous classification that includes everything from television repairmen to fast-food purveyors.

MIT's Mr. Birch says that when he first tried to point out the impact that small low-tech entrepreneurs are having on regional economies "people just didn't believe our numbers.

But that attitude is changing fast. The surge in blue-collar entrepreneurship has sparked new hope in some struggling Rust Bowl states. For other states, the phenomenon is raising hard questions over the wisdom of their frantic and expensive promotions to land big business, such as last year's scramble to snag General Motors Corp.'s Saturn auto plant, now building in Tennessee.

Illinois, which finished near the bottom of Mr. Kasarda's tally of job-gainers, recently stepped up its small-business program and set aside $8 million for loans and other assistance for small start-ups. "The big-company, Saturn approach has been the traditional way of reviving business here," says Scott Hodge, a researcher at the Chicago-based Heartland Institute. "Perhaps we're starting to get a different message."

Blue collar start-ups are already fueling one of the nation's hottest economic recoveries in California. Officials there say 70% of the state's new employment involves small-scale entrepreneurs. "A lot of that activity has come from displaced workers who went into business for themselves," say Lance Barnett, the chief economist for California's Governor's Office of Planning and Research. "The Fortune 500," adds Mr. Barnett, "just isn't generating the jobs."

One of the hottest spots is Ohio. Written off as an economic disaster area in the early 1980s, Ohio gained 286,000 new jobs in the past two years, and the rate of startups is climbing.

One evening in Youngstown, in the heart of depressed steelmaking country, a dozen men and women sip coffee out of Burger King cups during an entrepreneurship class at Youngstown State University. The group—nearly all blue-collar workers who lost their jobs during the slump—listens intently as a local businessman, George McClay, explains how to fill out an application for a Small Business Administration loan.

Mr. McClay isn't all that encouraging: "You're putting your neck on the line out there," he says, "You may not make money in the first three months. In fact, you may not make anything for six months."

VARIETY OF VENTURES

But the warnings don't seem to faze the class. Enthusiasm runs high as members of the group discuss plans for ventures ranging from rib restaurants to home-repair outfits. One student, 46-year-old Eugene Caleris, has already opened a van-customizing shop in nearby Warren, Ohio, after his steel-mill job went sour. To drum up business, Mr. Caleris says, he handed out fliers that said: "You dream it—we'll build it."

"After the last layoff" at the steel mill, Mr. Caleris says, "I told my wife I've been a foreman and I know how to get a job done. I'm not going to work for anyone anymore."

Since January, 111 displaced workers have gone through the 10-week entrepreneurship program at Youngstown State. Dozens of similar programs are operating in other states. The Labor Department's Employment and Training Administration, which originates most of the financing for the programs, says it doesn't keep count of the exact number.

A program in Jackson, Mich., with mostly former auto workers as students, has spawned more than 30 new small businesses, from a hay-brokerage firm to a company that prints personal messages on coffee mugs. "A lot of these people see this as a chance for a new start," says Joseph Rahn, who heads the Jackson program.

Here in East Moline, Mr. Meers and his partners are relying mainly on the skills they picked up during a total of 65 years working for Farmall. Mr. Meers, 43, was a general foreman, while Mr. Schoemaker, 41, and Mr. Goodwin, 39, were welders. Each put up $15,000 to start the company after three local banks rejected their request for a loan of up to $50,000 and the Small Business Administration said it wasn't interested in advancing them less than $150,000.

"We decided to stick with what we knew," says Mr. Goodwin, a bushy-bearded man whose colleagues boast he is so skilled with a welding torch he "can weld tinfoil." The three entrepreneurs bid on their first job in April, a contract to clean and renovate production machinery for Tenneco Inc.'s Case IH unit, a farm-equipment manufacturer. They drew up the bid on Mr. Schoemaker's kitchen table, working through several nights until dawn. When they marched into the bidders' conference at Case, carefully dressed in jackets and ties, the three men were greeted with curious stares from seven competitors. "It seemed like everybody knew everybody but us," Mr. Meers recalls.

Nonetheless, they won the contract. Mr. Meers says they toasted each other that night with beer.

Of course, not every entrepreneur up from the assembly line gets such a fast start. Federal figures indicate that about 85% of the business failures each year fall into the small-business category. And blue-collar entrepreneurs are on the shakiest ground of all, since most lack basic business skills.

THE LENDER'S VIEWPOINT

Ron Moliterno, a lending officer at Bank One in Youngstown, says he has headed off aspiring entrepreneurs looking for cash to start everything from spaghetti-submarine sandwich shops to barbell factories. Most aren't prepared for the rough-and-tumble world of small business, he says. "Sometimes, you have to stop these people so they won't lose everything they have left."

But lenders also say that many industrial-area banks, while wary, are especially eager to find qualified borrowers these days. "There's an excess of money to lend, and everybody's pounding on doors looking for good borrowers," says Richard Sumner, a loan officer at Second National Bank in Warren, Ohio.

As a result, bankers claim that an unemployed blue-collar craftsman can find start-up financing if he has a good idea and a solid business plan. "You can't walk in waving two scrawny pieces of paper and say, 'Here's my plan,'" says Franz Burnier, senior business adviser at Mainstream, an entrepreneurship program established last year by Inland Steel Co. and the steelworkers' union. Mr. Burnier says two of his clients, both former steelworkers, had no trouble getting cash recently to start a business renovating Volkswagens after they handed their banker a 60-page business plan.

Blue-collar entrepreneurs are likely to get an additional boost as big manufacturers, trying to cut costs, step up the amount of work they farm out to independent contractors. Such "outsourcing," predicts David Cole, a University of Michigan transportation analyst, "is going to happen at a very rapid pace, especially in the auto industry." Mr. Cole estimates that General Motors Corp., for example, will farm out huge amounts of work formerly done inhouse as it pares half its work force over the next 10 years. (General Motors officials decline to comment on their outsourcing plans.)

BASIC BUSINESS

Much of that work is fairly basic, requiring little elaborate or expensive machinery. Those workers with previous experience should have an edge in picking up the business, experts say. That would be good news for low-budget entrepreneurs like Mr. Meers and his partners. Most of their equipment either is homemade or was picked up at a bargain when Harvester auctioned off the remains of the Rock Island Farmall plant.

Still, Admiral Improvement's owners have precious little room to coast. The Case contract will help, and they have since received smaller contracts to repair taxi and dump-truck bodies. They now have 18 employees, including several former co-workers at Farmall.

But the recession has been stubborn here. New layoffs are a regular occurrence at plants up and down this industrial stretch of the Mississippi, leaving the pickings very lean for newcomers.

To survive, Mr. Meers and his partners have assigned themselves annual salaries of under $20,000—much less than they made at Farmall. And they are working harder and longer than before, handling machinery by day and working into the night calling and writing to potential customers to drum up new business.

None of this seems to bother the fledging entrepreneurs, however. "All of us used to dream about starting our own business," says Mr. Goodwin, propping a pair of scuffed cowboy boots on his desk. Farmall's steady paycheck damped their enthusiasm. "Sometimes," he says, "I think Farmall did us a favor kicking us out the door."

CONGRESSIONAL TRIBUTE TO SACRAMENTO CIVIC AND BUSINESS LEADER R.M. "WOODY" WOODWARD

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize any pay tribute to Mr. R.M. "Woody" Woodward, one of Sacramento's most outstanding civic and community leaders, who is retiring this month after more than 40 years of exemplary service to the Bank of America. A retirement party was planned by friends, family members, and business associates on August 28, 1986, for this very special and close personal friend of mine.

A native of Ames, IA, Mr. Woodward is retiring as one of the most highly respected and competent Bank of America officials in the history of the company. Since 1983; he has served as senior vice president and area manager for the Sacramento main office, which has responsibility for 15 bank branches. Prior to launching his highly successful career in the business world, Mr. Woodward completed his education with banking degrees from the University of Wisconsin and University of Iowa and served as a Marine Corps captain in World War II and as a major during the Korean conflict.

Active in Sacramento civic and cultural affairs, Mr. Woodward has held a variety of positions of responsibility and importance, including past president of the Sacramento Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce and as a member of the board of the directors of the Sacramento Private Industry Council, KVIE channel 6, Eskaton Development Council. He currently serves as a director of the United Way, Camellia Festival Association, Sacramento Safety Council, Golden Empire Boy Scouts and Sacramento County Taxpayers' League.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of Sacramento I would like to congratulate Mr. Woodward on his outstanding accomplishments and dedicated service to this community and offer my sincere best wishes to him, his wife, Marie, and their family as they enter a very well deserved time of rest and relaxation in retirement.

A TRIBUTE TO GLADYS AND GEORGE BROOKS

HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, Gladys and George Brooks of New Windsor, NY, have dedicated their lives to the accounting of all our missing American heros in Southeast Asia. They have dedicated their lives to making certain that those brave Americans are not forgotten.

This Sunday, the National Human Rights for Our Prisoners of War and Missing in Action in Southeast Asia are honoring the Brooks. The group is recognizing them because this couple has done more for this cause then anyone else involved in the MIA/POW issue.

George and Gladys Brooks became involved with the MIA/POW issue in the 1970's, while the Vietnam war was still raging. They founded the National League of Families and kept the issue alive during the Nixon administration. Through their efforts, the majority of American prisonsers of war were freed in January 1973.

During the administrations of Presidents Ford and Carter, the Brooks continually traveled to Washington at their own expense to keep Congress and the administration reminded of the need for a full accounting. They went to Southeast Asia, following every lead. Not every trip was fruitful, but the determination of George and Gladys Brooks inspired everyone to have faith and to keep trying to locate the MIA's and POW's.

The Brooks' own son, Nicholas, was missing in action in Southeast Asia. But it was not their own tragedy that prompted their involvement in the MIA/POW movement. They became involved because another young man, Joe Mobley, a friend and classmate of their son's, was reported missing. Joe Mobley eventually came home. The Brooks' son did not.

In March 1982, George and Gladys Brooks learned their son had been killed. Their long wait ended when the remains of their son were returned home. Their commitment to the MIA/POW cause did not end there, however.

George still served as chairman of the National League of Families. They both continued to devote themselves to the MIA/POW cause.

President Reagan's current commitment to locating all MIA's and POW's is in part because of the Brooks' leadership and insistence that the issue remain a top priority.

The entire country, expecially the families of MIA's and POW's, owe George and Gladys Brooks a debt of thanks. Their efforts are heroic. I salute them. Last year, I had the privilege of presenting them a special congressional medal for their great sacrifice. Now, I ask that my colleagues join me in paying tribute to these fine Americans—George and Gladys Brooks.

JEFFESON COUNTY SHERIFF'S COMPLEX

HON. DAN SCHAEFER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. SCHAEFER. Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleagues:

What new facility saves the taxpayers money, operates efficiently and economically, exceeds all building and safety codes, and is hailed as a great success by everyone from civil rights leaders to law enforcement officers? As incredible as it may sound, this in not a riddle without a solution.

The answer, I am excited to tell you, is the new Jefferson County Sheriff's Complex, located in Golden, CO.

Jefferson County is Colorado's second most populated county, encompassing 11 municipalities with a total population of nearly 431,000 people. Rapid growth in the number of residents, businesses and industry has been accomplished by an increase in the amount of crime and the need for effective law enforcement. A new sheriff's facility became a priority when, in 1980, a Federal court order instructed the county to build a new jail to alleviate overcrowding.

The Jefferson County Sheriff's Complex houses an administration and a detention center, both located in an attractive, modern building. The administration building has space to accommodate all aspects of law enforcement training and support services, including those which are frequently used by the public.

The detention center is an impressive facility. The Jefferson County sheriff, Harold Bray, and his staff worked closely with architects in its design and construction. They took the best from facilities around the Nation, then incorporated many new ideas. The result is a modern efficient, secure center for the care, custody and control of inmates.

The center can comfortably and safely house up to 384 inmates with only 170 total personnel, or approximately 50 per shift. This is, in part, due to the circular design of the building and its division into semicircular modules. From a computerized control point in the center, one deputy can visually see and monitor 48 cells.

The 192 cells average 80.5 square feet in size, exceeding Federal standards. Each has a sink, toilet, bed, table and window. Outside of each cell is a shared dayroom where meals are served. The philosophy that "essential services should be provided at one central location" is apparent in the design. A 24-hour staffed infirmary and dental unit, a law library, multipurpose meeting rooms, and indoor-outdoor exercise facilities can be accessed without the inmate ever leaving the main facility.

In short, I was very impressed by this detention center. Its clean, bright cells assured me that inmates will be comfortable and safe, and that the deputies and public will be secure. It exceeds all standards set by recent civil rights litigation.

I commend the Jefferson County Sheriff's Office, Sheriff Harold Bray, and the Jefferson County commissioners, Marjorie "Bunny" Clement, Rich Ferdinandsen and Don Stanbro, for the successful completion of this important project.

Mr. Speaker, I bring this facility to the attention of my colleagues because it is not only impressive, but it is unique. Although it cost over $34 million to build, its efficient design and innovative operation will make it one of the most cost-effective jails ever constructed. I am sure that it will be a model for other Federal, State and local detention facilities.

A TRIBUTE TO COMDR. BILL KAISER

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, since the Wright Brothers' first flight at Kitty Hawk, Americans have been the leading pioneers in the field of air and space technology. A constituent of mine from Merrick, NY, Comdr. Bill Kaiser, had a dream of building an air and space museum on Long Island. His desire was not only to exhibit various air and space craft, but in so doing, to enrich the public's knowledge and appreciation of our Nation's great aviation history.

That dream is becoming a reality with the creation of the Cradle of Aviation Museum, now underway at historic Mitchel Field in Garden City, NY. As curator, Bill Kaiser organized the first phase of that effort: the assembly and restoration of a major air and space collection. This exciting exhibition features Glenn Curtiss' Golden Flyer biplane, and a silver sistership of Charles Lindbergh's Spirit of St. Louis. Visitors can imagine landing on the Moon in an original lunar module, constructed by Long Island's Own Grumman Corp. Bill Kaiser compiled the museum's aviation library and research collection, one of the finest in the country. The Nassau Country Division of Recreation and Parks expects final renovation of the airplane hangars housing the exhibit to be completed by 1989. However, daily visitors are already enjoying preview tours.

Over the years, Comdr. Bill Kaiser has received numerous awards for his dedicated work in aviation history and education, including the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics Award for Accomplishments in Aviation History. Certainly, the Cradle of Aviation Museum is the highlight of Commander Kaiser's remarkable and distinguished career.

The New York State Air Force Association has presented Commander Kaiser with the Sperry Award in recognition of his significant contributions to preserving aviation history. In addition, the Aerospace Education Foundation will invest him as an Ira C. Eaker historical fellow at a luncheon on September 15.

I'd like to extend my personal thanks and appreciation to Commander Kaiser for his dedicated efforts in the establishment of the Cradle of Aviation Museum and in preserving this important part of America's history for future generations.

TRIBUTE TO DR. FRANK ALDERETE

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise to draw the attention of my colleagues to the recent appointment of Dr. Frank Alderete as vice president of administration at East Los Angeles Commuinty College. He brings a potent portfolio of skills to his new job—including wide experience in government, community service, and higher education. Dr. Alderete, who holds a bachelor's degree from the University of California at San Diego, a master's degree from the University of Southern California, and a Ph.D. from Union Graduate School, has worked in each of these sectors to improve educational opportunities for all Americans. He has received many honors including a Ford Foundation Fellowship, and an "Outstanding Educator" award from the University of Southern California.

Dr. Alderete's knowledge of the ways of government will serve him well in his new post. He has served as Special Assistant to the U.S. Commissioner of Education, where he was responsible for legislative analysis and for the direction or coordination of many studies on how to make our education programs more effective. As a senior program officer for programs to assist disadvantaged studies, he provided expert assistance and advice on legislative and policy issues. He developed national guidelines for Teacher Corps Community-Based Education.

Firm knowledge of East Los Angeles Community College—where he has served for nearly a decade in a wide variety of vital posts—will also serve him well. Dr. Alderete's previous posts at the college include service as the acting vice president for academic affairs, and as dean of the college. He has also served as the director of governmental affairs for the Los Angeles Community College District. In these roles, he has worked closely with students, faculty, community service groups, business, and others to ensure that students get the highest quality education, helping to ensure that students gain the knowledge they will need to contribute fully as members of the community.

With this knowledge of the realities of higher education and its role in the American community, Dr. Alderete can guide East Los Angeles Community College and the larger education system in helping students gain the skills they need to wield opportunities effectively to prosper and contribute to our country. Dr. Alderete's special concern for helping those most in need is particularly vital in helping meet the challenges that face America. I take this opportunity to congratulate Dr. Adlerete on his new post. I wish him all the best as he works to ensure that quality education geared to meeting our country's needs is available to all our citizens.

KILDEE HONORS DR. JOSEPH HENRY BOWER

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues and the Nation a ceremony that was held Saturday, August 30, in Lapeer, MI, honoring Dr. Joseph Henry Bower. Dr. Bower is concluding 46 years of outstanding pastoral ministry, 16 of which were spent at the First Baptist Church in Lapeer.

Dr. Bower began his ministry at the age of 20, after being left an orphan at the age of 14. During World War II, he ministered to and shared his strength with those who had lost loved ones in the war. This has been true for every conflict since. During his career, he inspired many with his unselfish manner and unusual compassion and wisdom. He is an incredibly giving man who always thinks of others. In his 46 years of pastoral ministry, Dr. Bower has grown from a young man delivering his trial sermon into an eloquent and articulate messenger for the Lord. We in the Seventh Congressional District are better off because of his guidance and I am pleased to bring him to the attention of my colleagues. We would all be better if we were to emulate his devotion and concern.

IN RECOGNITION OF LOU BONACCI

HON. DEAN A. GALLO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, there are times in our careers that we are fortunate enough to know of someone who embodies the spirit and commitment to excellence that we all strive for. These people are role models—for us and for the people we represent.

Nello, or "Lou," Bonacci is just such a person.

Fifty-five years ago, Lou and his brothers Harry, Marius, Albert, and Samuel founded the Bonacci Express Co., the forerunner of the AAA Trucking Corp.

Founding a venture of this sort is not easy, even in the best of times. When Lou helped to found Bonacci Express, our Nation was in the throws of the depression. Founding the express forced Lou to leave high school in the 10th grade.

In spite of the adverse times and conditions, Lou persevered, and he succeded. In fact, the AAA Trucking Co. has had a record of 51 years of profitable operation.

Lou Bonacci is now the chairman of the board and the chief executive officer of the AAA Trucking Co. Even after more than a half century of involvement, Lou remains committed to the operation and success of AAA.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it is important to recognize Lou Bonacci, not only for his professional accomplishments, but also for his personal and civic successes.

Lou Bonacci is a member of countless civic organizations and professional associations. You and I both know that memberships of this sort are a clear indication that a person is genuinely interested in making this world a better place, not only for ourselves but, more importantly, for our families and neighbors.

Later this month, the New Jersey Motor Truck Association will honor Lou Bonacci as its "Man of the Year." This is an annual award, presented by the organization in recognition of the efforts of one of its members. This award is an award presented to a deserving individual, based on the judgment of the person's professional peers. There are no tougher judges, anywhere.

Mr. Speaker, I have taken this opportunity to let my fellow Members of Congress know of Lou Bonacci's legacy. I have done so in the hope that we will all learn by his example.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you to join with me in recognizing Nello A. Bonacci.

TRIBUTE TO THE RIGHT REVERENT MONSIGNOR SYLVESTER HLADKY

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today to extend by best wishes and hearty congratulations to the Right Reverend Monsignor Sylvester Hladky, a resident of my 17th District, who will be celebrating his 50th jubilee on October 11 and 12, 1986. Monsignor Hladky has served in the Byzantine Catholic Church for 50 years, with 40 of those years having been spent at Saints Peter and Paul Byzantine Catholic Parish in Warren, OH.

Monsignor Hladky certainly has led an admirable career and has gained respect as an inspiring leader. A native of Brooklyn, NY, he was ordained into the priesthood in 1936 after serving 3 years in the U.S. Navy. Soon after, he was appointed to work among the missions at Fisher Branch, Manitoba, and later in the Niagara peninsula. After serving as pastor of Saints Peter and Paul Church in Struthers, OH, from 1939 to 1945, Monsignor Hladky became pastor of Saints Peter and Paul Byzantine Catholic Church which he continues to serve today.

As well as being known and respected as a spiritual leader, Monsignor Hladky, who was given the papal title of monsignor in 1965, has also been credited for the growth of Warren's Saints Peter and Paul Parish. Soon after Monsignor Hladky became pastor of the parish, the parish quickly grew from 100 to 300 families. This rapid growth made the monsignor realize the need for a new church which could accommodate the growing number of parish members. In 1947, Monsignor Hladky played a lead role in the building fund campaign which was used in 1950 to build the new church as well as purchase land for a school. Today, as a result of Monsignor Hladky's efforts, Saints Peter and Paul Parish consists of over 1,100 families, a large beautiful church, a church auditorium, a rectory for the priests, a convent for the sisters, 26 classrooms for the elementary and junior high school, multipurpose school auditorium, and a bus garage.

Monsignor Hladky is certainly an outstanding resident of the 17th District of Ohio and, again, I take great pleasure in recognizing and congratulating him today. It is only appropriate to thank the monsignor for the guidance he has lent over the years to the members of his parish as well as to all others who have come in contact with him. On behalf of the residents of the Mahoning Valley, I would like to commend the monsignor on an outstanding career. His efforts, both past and present, are very much appreciated. Because of his lasting dedication to the people of our area and to the church, all who know the monsignor consider him as one who is truly blessed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, earlier today, I was recorded as voting no on the Rangel amendment to H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Bill.

I should have been recorded as voting yes on this amendment. I am a cosponsor of H.R. 526, and I support efforts to improve the ability of State and local law enforcement officials to apprehend, convict, and punish drug offenders.

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA FIGHT DRUG ABUSE

HON. RON PACKARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the Boy Scouts of America for their active involvement in the fight against drug abuse.

On September 3, the 2,200 Boy Scout Explorer units which specialize in law enforcement career education launched a continuing program of drug abuse prevention. With help from the Drug Enforcement Administration and ACTION, 42,000 teenagers between the ages of 14 and 20 will be trained to present drug abuse education programs to school and community groups.

Everyone knows that drug use is rampant among our Nation's youth. A recent survey found that 63 percent of our high school students have tried an illegal drug. The pain that results in individual families as a result of drug abuse is the force that is driving the Boy Scout drug education campaign. Since much drug use is a result of peer pressure, what better method of prevention is there than to train thousands of teenagers to become a source of peer pressure to refuse rather than use drugs?

My colleagues and I wish the Boy Scouts and their leaders the best in this most worthwhile endeavor.

H.R. 4756, TORTURE VICTIM'S PROTECTION ACT OF 1986

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, today I am cosponsoring H.R. 4756, the Torture Victim's Protection Act of 1986. I do so because the bill asserts a strong U.S. posture against unacceptable human rights abuses overseas, but I also add the caveat that the bill needs to be improved before being passed.

H.R. 4756 allows any victim of torture, or the descendents of victims of extrajudicial killing, to sue individuals for damages in the United States. This provision is a stern warning for would-be torturers anywhere that the United States will not tolerate inhuman practices. Because of the fundamental strength of that position, and because I believe we need to assert a greater emphasis in human rights as a component of our foreign policy, I am sponsoring this bill.

However, I believe that the bill should not be passed until it receives comment from the administration, which it has not. I also am concerned that the bill needs refinement, particularly in the section defining who has standing to file suit (which I feel now is unclear). A section further defining respondents covered by the law also may be helpful. Also, there ought be some prospect of actually receiving payments.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4756 is a strong start toward an improved U.S. position against torture. It is worthy of support and further refinement. While it may not advance in the few remaining days of this Congress, I hope that it will gain some impetus and receive serious attention next year.

TRIBUTE TO MRS. RICHARD (FRINNY) STORRS

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, it gives me particular pleasure to rise today in recognition of a special member of the town of Oyster Bay in the Third Congressional District.

Next month, the Oyster Bay Chamber of Commerce will hold a dinner dance in honor of Mrs. Richard (Frinny) Storrs. More than 50 years ago, Frinny Storrs moved to Oyster Bay with her parents, John and May Rousmaniere.

In the ensuing years, Frinny has left her impact on the town both through her infectious good cheer, and her work with community and civic organizations.

Perhaps among her greatest contributions has been her attention to the community's youth through unflagging support for the Oyster Bay Youth Council. She has been a champion of the youth council, offering financial and personal commitment to the future leaders of the town.

Frinny and her husband Dick also have opened their home to host fundraisers for a variety of community organizations. Their philanthropy has proven to be a godsend for these organizations.

Mr. Speaker, those who can look beyond their own lives to the greater common good deserve our admiration and respect. It is clear that Frinny Storrs meets this criterion, and I would bring her good works to the attention of my colleagues today.

EGYPT AND ISRAEL SHOULD SETTLE TABA DISPUTE

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, it has been over 7 years since President Sadat of Egypt and Prime Minister Begin of Israel traveled to Washington in 1979 to sign the historic Treaty of Peace Between Egypt and Israel. This treaty which ended the state of war between Egypt and Israel represents a major step toward peaceful relations in the Middle East.

The premise of the peace treaty is the exchange of land for peace. As a result of the treaty, Egypt recovered most of the Sinai Peninsula which Israel had occupied since the 1967 war. The Israeli withdrawal began in 1979 and was completed in 1982, with the exception of Taba, a small strip of land on the Gulf of Aqaba.

The continuing territorial dispute over Taba has been a major stumbling block in the normalization of relations provided for in the peace treaty. Yesterday Egypt and Israel finally agreed to submit the Taba dispute to arbitration after resolving the final questions concerning the selection of international arbitrators and the map presenting the claims of the two parties.

The active participation of the United States for over a year in the mediation talks which eventually led to the arbitration agreement once again demonstrates the importance of U.S. support for the Middle East peace process.

Now is the time for the Congress to confirm its support for improved relations between Egypt and Israel on the basis of the 1979 peace treaty and to call upon the parties to settle the Taba dispute, which has been a thorn in their relations for too long, and to move forward in normalizing relations in accordance with the treaty.

SENATE—Monday, September 12, 1986

(Legislative day of Monday, September 8, 1986)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, in executive session, and was called to order by the Honorable MARK O. HATFIELD, a Senator from the State of Oregon.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Gracious God, loving Father and Deliverer, thank You for the pleasure and privilege of having Father Jenco with us yesterday, and thank You for the loving response of the Senators to his presence. Thank You for the efforts that the Senators have made and continue to make to free the hostages and do all in their power to free the captives and the oppressed. Bless these faithful and zealous advocates of freedom.

Thank you Father for the success of Senator GARN's surgery and the functioning of his kidney in the body of his daughter. Grant rapid and total recovery to both. Bless Mrs. Garn and the loving care she gave to husband and daughter during the process.

Now, Father, be with the Senators and their leadership in the monumental task they face in these next 3 weeks. Grant to them special wisdom, strength, and courage to do the impossible task. Be with their families who with them endure the pressures peculiar to this period and let these final days of the 99th Congress be triumphant days. To the glory of Thy name and the good of the Nation. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, September 12, 1986.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable MARK O. HATFIELD, a Senator from the State of Oregon, to perform the duties of the Chair.

STROM THURMOND,
President pro tempore.

Mr. HATFIELD thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished presiding officer, the Senator from Oregon, Senator HATFIELD.

THE WAR AGAINST DRUGS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, last night the House passed an omnibus antidrug bill; I guess the price tag is at least $2 billion. At the outset I want to indicate that there were a number of good provisions in the House-passed bill. I want to commend the House for moving as quickly as they did on this legislation.

I guess where I would fault the House is the fact that again there is a lot of money spent, money just literally thrown at the problem in many cases without hearings, and without any indication whether or not it will be effective.

I ask unanimous consent at the conclusion of my remarks that an editorial which appeared in the New York Times be made a part of the RECORD. It is entitled "Drug Crazed." It is a response to some of the action on the House side. Again I would indicate however that some of the efforts by the House were constructive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit No. 1.)

Mr. DOLE. I believe there is an understanding among all of us, Democrats, Republicans, House Members, Senators, certainly the President, First Lady, families, concerned citizens, doctors, that all across this country there is more and more interest in how we can cope with the drug problem.

I would guess that the Senate is going to act. I listened with interest on C-SPAN the other evening as the distinguished minority leader and nine of his colleagues spelled out their proposal. I believe in many areas that was a constructive effort. We are now in the process on this side of trying to put together a package, waiting for the administration to see what precisely the administration has in mind, and then trying to supplement that with some ideas of our own. I would assume that would include some ideas in the House bill.

I think it is well to point out, so that there be no public misperception that the Senate has not been responsive again with the strong bipartisan support, that we have already passed seven drug measures this year. Designer drugs was addressed in the Senate. Money laundering has been addressed in the Senate. Corrections to the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 have been addressed in the Senate. Rewards for information on the death or kidnaping of Federal agents has been passed in the Senate. Prohibiting the operation of a common carrier while under the influence of drugs or alcohol has been passed in the Senate. Treatment and education for American Indian children has been passed in the Senate, and provisions of the DOD authorization for interdiction by the Customs Service and the Coast Guard and how they deal with drugs.

So it is not that we have not been aware of the problem. Frankly, we have been moving on the Senate side, as many have on the House side.

I guess what I am suggesting is that this is not a political contest. It should not be a political contest. I believe I can say it will not be a political contest. I do not really believe the victims of drug abuse and their families really are looking for a Republican or Democratic alternative or solution. They are looking for help. I think they expect the Congress, to proceed in a nonpartisan way to address the problem.

I am not certain that the measure of our sensitivity or concern is going to depend on how much money we spend. That is the old politics: That we would throw money at the problem and then indicate well, we are more concerned than the other side, because we are willing to spend more of your money than they are. I do not believe that would be the contest either. I do not believe we can ignore the realities of the Federal deficits. I think we have to be responsible if we are going to pass a drug bill, as we will I hope, and it will cost some money, probably more than the administration has indicated. In my view we have to find a way to pay for it.

As I have indicated, apparently the House has not yet learned how to kick the spending habit. There was a near unanimous vote on the House side—Democrats and Republicans. So I am prepared, as I am certain the distinguished minority leader is, to go to work for the welfare of the American people. We hope to do that. We will be working with the House bill with the proposal of the distinguished minority leader, and others.

EXHIBIT No. 1

[From the New York Times]

DRUG CRAZED

What does America think it is doing about drugs? The House orders the military to halt drug traffic into the country within 45 days. Candidates challenge each other to submit to urinalysis and rush to endorse the death penalty for drug dealers. White House aides bicker over how many Federal workers should take drug tests. Congress suddenly wants to throw money at the drug problem. In bills hastily coopered together, House Democrats would commit $1.5 billion for enforcement, treatment and education; Senate Democrats would add $100 million more. No one knows what it will buy.

The new spending would be added to the $1.5 billion Washington already spends on drug enforcement and border interdiction. That's serious money for more personnel and equipment like radar planes. Yet there's no reason to think it will do much good. Trafficking profits are so huge that dealers match the cops gun for gun, plane for plane.

Such proposals are enough to stir up the ghosts of the old Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, which in 14 years doled out $8 billion to help fight local crime. Yet in those years, crime grew faster than ever. So it is now with Federal spending against narcotics. It has nearly doubled since 1982 but more cocaine flows in than ever.

The tragedy is that more useful ways to spend are obvious.

Sooner or later, most addicts seek help as the frustrations of supporting a habit grow. Yet the search for help often produces only more frustration: overcrowded programs turn them away for weeks or months. The House bill offers only $100 million for drug treatment, barely restoring cuts in Federal funding since 1982. The Senate does somewhat better with $300 million. But even that's modest, given the need and potential effect.

Both bills offer only a trivial $50 million for the most promising strategy of all: eradication of drug production at the source. It worked for a time with Turkey during the Nixon Administration and more recently, for a short time, in Mexico. Bolivian officials claim some success for recent American aided raids to destroy jungle drug factories.

Producer countries are becoming more sympathetic to American demands for cooperation since drugs increasingly threaten their own societies. Instead of dubiously investing another billion-plus in enforcement, why not try spending on that scale to buy up coca and help Andean peasants plant rice, coffee or cirtus fruit?

The haste to look good undermines hopes for initatives that would do good. So does the rush to partisanship; these rough Democratic proposals are likely to be misshapen further in negotiations with Congressional Republicans and the White House. The need for drug spending is urgent but the need for quick and dirty legislation is not.

DEBATE ON THE REHNQUIST NOMINATION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I would also hope that we could reach some agreement on when to vote on the Rehnquist nomination. I happen to believe that it is a very important nomination. It deserves thorough discussion and consideration. No Senator who wishes to speak on the matter should be denied that opportunity.

Yesterday Senators had good solid debate for about 6 hours. I was a bit disappointed we did not stay in longer last evening. But we were still discussing the Rehnquist nomination until almost 7 o'clock. So there was a good 7 hours, I would guess, on the Rehnquist nomination. I hope there can be another good 5 or 6 hours today on the Rehnquist nomination.

I am quite certain there will not be a vote on the Rehnquist nomination today. I think it has been indicated to me that we would not vote on the Rehnquist nomination today. But I would hope and I have indicated to the distinguished minority leader that we might have a vote on Tuesday. That would give another full day Monday. We would be prepared to vote late on Tuesday, 3, 4, or 5 o'clock, and still hope to take up the Scalia nomination on that same day. That should give everyone ample opportunity to discuss this nomination.

We would like to avoid filing cloture. It seems to me this should not be necessary on this nomination. It will come to a vote. The only reason I urge my colleagues, the primary reason, is I am still convinced we can finish our work by October 3. I must say I had different signals as I visited the House in the joint meeting yesterday morning. They were wringing their hands, saying there was no way to do it by October 3. In any event, that is a possibility. I hope we would reach some agreement on when we might vote on the nominations.

Today we have special orders. I ask that the order in favor of Senator HAWKINS be vitiated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. That will leave Senators BOSCHWITZ, PROXMIRE, and LEVIN with special orders, with routine morning business until 11 o'clock.

At 11 o'clock we will resume consideration of the Rehnquist nomination.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Democratic leader is recognized.

THE REHNQUIST NOMINATION

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I share the distinguished majority leader's hope that cloture will not need to be sought on the nominations, certainly on the Rehnquist nomination. I do not see any indication on this side of the aisle or on the other side of the aisle that a filibuster is in progress. I think Senators are rightfully expressing their support or opposition to the nomination. There has been good debate on the nomination thus far.

I applaud the distinguished majority leader for not offering a cloture motion today.

I will explore the possibilities on this side for a time for the vote, as the majority leader indicated his desire to do that.

THE DRUG EPIDEMIC

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on the drug legislation matter, I commend the House for yesterday's passage of drug legislation. I realize that cost is a factor in this or any other matter. But I think we also have to contemplate the cost of not doing something. When I say not doing something, I say not doing something that is meaningful and effective in dealing with this drug epidemic.

If we do not take effective, immediate, and meaningful action then the cost in wasted lives and increasing crime will certainly dwarf any cost of any meaningful, effective program which might otherwise have been the case.

Already there are crocodile tears beginning to be shed about the penalties that the House has included in their bill. But I say to the cynics, "What would you do? What would you do?"

All too long we have been soft on criminals in this country, and it appears there is still a lot of thinking out there that these are poor guys who are caught pushing drugs, selling drugs—making millions of dollars. This is a multibillion dollar business in this country and it results in wasted lives. It results in crime, crime in which innocent victims pay the price, a high price—sometimes the price of life.

I hope we have not reached the point where we look at the cost of everything and the value of nothing. If an individual seeks to enrich himself by destroying a life, and in this instance the lives of many, and in all too many instances the lives of young people who have otherwise promising futures ahead of them, in such instances it seems to me that life in prison is a low price to ask for those who perpetrate this crime against society.

If it is the death penalty, so be it. I know it sounds tough and it may sound mean-spirited. But what about the children who go to our schools and who become addicts, slaves, to this costly, deadly habit? What about them? What about their lives? How about that? Is that mean-spirited, to think in those terms?

So I would say to the cynics, "What would you do? You have tried your way. We have been soft too long. We have not had a coordinated, comprehensive program to deal with this epidemic. You have tried it your way. It is not working. Now let us try it our way. Let us get tough on the criminals."

You know what would happen to some of these people in some countries. Yet, ours is a democracy and we want to do things the right way. There is such a thing as due process. We believe in it. We intend to maintain it. But if it ends in the electric chair for some of those who want to enrich themselves with the blood of others on their hands, then so be it. I am for it. I have never felt otherwise than that the death penalty is appropriate in some cases where due process has had its way, where the accused has had his rights observed, the legal process has run its course, and the appellate process has run its course. For certain crimes, treason among them, premeditated murder, and now those who are the kingpins of this dirty, sinister, deadly drug trade—for them, too, it is not asking too much that they snuffer the death penalty. Again, I commend the House for the action it has taken.

BRAZIL: WELCOME PRESIDENT JOSE SARNEY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the esteemed and articulate President of our hemispheric sister nation, newly democratic Brazil, Mr. Jose Sarney, yesterday addressed a joint meeting of the Congress. His address was strong and inspirational, warm and wise. He displays a deep understanding of our history and the true meaning and values of democracy. He has eloquently complemented the United States, and we are very grateful for that. He is to be congratulated on his vision and his leadership. Brazil is a giant nation, with a people acclaimed worldwide for their style, creativity, and innovative talents. They have created one of the great cities of the world, Rio de Janeiro, and carved out of the jungle the totally new and beautiful capital city of Brasilia. Brazil has always been noted for the tremendous potential of its human and physical resource base, and it has only lacked the right combination of political and economic structures and policies to propel those potentials into new realities.

Mr. President, it now appears that that kind of combination is coming together under President Sarney. After 21 years of revolving military regimes, and lackluster economic performance, the resurrection of democracy under President Sarney has given Brazil a new sense of self-assurance. Her economic growth is rapid, and she is a successful trading power. She is now the world's eighth largest free-market economy. She has become more active, politically, in the affairs of the hemisphere and, happily, her political and diplomatic goals dovetail rather well with those of the United States.

As far as this hemisphere is concerned, the administration's policies have suffered from its myopic focus on the confrontation we are engaged in with Nicaragua. The rest of the hemisphere has been badly neglected, and yet the opportunities to deepen our understanding of, and relations with, nations like Brazil are vast and exciting. She has pioneered alternative fuel technologies, has the ability to develop safe nuclear technology, has made impressive advances in computer technology, and can today participate as a major partner in the exploration and uses of outer space. A creative foreign policy would, in my opinion, put the development of cooperative relationships in technology, education, and many advanced fields of study and practice with Brazil at the top of the list.

Mr. President, with all of this potential, there is a strong undercurrent of concern over frictions in the trade field with Brazil. Our trade deficit with Brazil will be around $4 billion for this calendar year, dropping from some $5 billion in 1985 due to the more vigorous demand of the Brazilian economy. Tensions have arisen over a series of trade disputes, including Brazil's exclusion of foreign companies from its data-processing industry. On September 16, this coming Monday, it is reported that President Reagan will announce the results of an investigation into Brazil's unfair trading practices. No doubt there are valid complaints in this area.

But, complaints are not what the United States needs to focus on. Solving those problems through creative solutions are what the economic doctor should be ordering. In the case of Brazil, it is clear what Brazil needs. She has a very big external debt, $105 billion—the annual service on it constitutes 5 percent of her gross domestic product. She needs debt relief. Mr. Sarney stated in his address yesterday that—

> It is necessary to promote an understanding among the leaders of creditor and debtor nations to reduce the magnitude of (debt) payments now being made. This would allow the debtor countries to again import more from the creditor countries, and their own growth can, in turn, contribute to the recovery and normalization of the world economy. For our part—

> We are still prepared to engage in such a joint endeavor. But we must not wait until it is too late. We have urged our industrialized partners to join us now in such an effort to safeguard the financial health and stability of the western world.

Now there is an obvious arrangement that could be made here, and it has been the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] and the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] who have taken a strong leadership position in this area. Mr. BRADLEY would have creditor nations and commercial banks provide debt relief, in the way of rescheduling loan payments and interest terms, in return for agreement by debtor nations to liberalize their trade barriers and promote domestic economic growth. This would benefit everyone. Mr. BINGAMAN, in his report released on September 10, 1986, on competitiveness, focuses on positive, cooperative efforts to solve the world's economic problems, instead of recrimination and retaliation.

I think we ought to rethink our economic relationship with Brazil and test the Bradley formula, and test the Bingaman approach. The visit by President Sarney provides an opportunity to refocus and expand the priorities of American policies in our hemisphere. It provides an opportunity to be positive about what could be a new and better relationship between the two biggest democracies in the Americas. It provides an opportunity to refashion economic relationships that could serve as a model elsewhere.

I commend President Sarney on his address, I congratulate him on his leadership, and I wish him success in his visit to the United States. I urge that those who could not hear the address when it was delivered read it in the RECORD where it will appear in its entirety.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, have I any time remaining?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minority leader has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

I ask unanimous consent that I may reserve that time throughout the day.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

SENATE DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE GIVES STAR WARS MORE THAN THE PRESIDENT DOES

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, how many Members of the Congress would believe that the Defense appropriations bill as it has emerged from the Appropriations Subcommittee and on its way to the full committee actually provides more money for the strategic defense initiative [SDI] or star wars than President Reagan requested? I am sure the chairman and some other members of the subcommittee will vehemently deny this. But it is a fact. Consider the following:

First, the President's total request for SDI for the coming fiscal year was $5.4 billion;

Second, that compares with only $3.1 billion approved by the House in its authorization bill. That $3.1 billion is also precisely the amount approved by the House Appropriations Committee in its markup. It is $23 billion below the President's request;

Third, last month, the Senate approved $3.9 billion for SDI in fiscal year 1987; that is $1.5 billion below the President's request.

Now consider what the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee has done. First, it appropriated outright $3.6 billion. For SDI, this $3.6 billion is the Department of Defense share of star wars. But there is more. There is an additional $370 billion also for SDI from the Department of Energy portion of SDI. That Energy Appropriations Subcommittee has already marked up their bill and about $370 million is the amount they allocated to SDI. This brings the total for SDI to $3.97 billion. Is not this $3.97 billion still well below the President's request? Yes—but.

At this point, the hocus-pocus begins in earnest. The subcommittee also carried an additional $1.2 billion for SDI. That is right—I said $1.2 billion. That brings the total for SDI to $5.17 billion in 1987 for SDI. Those behind this massive SDI buildup on the subcommittee will say that we should not count this $1.2 billion because it is "fenced." How is it "fenced"? It can only be released and spent if the release meets two conditions: First, the President must certify that the arms talks have failed; second, both Houses have to vote to release the money.

Mr. President, what is wrong with that? Answer: Just about everything. First, has the President asked for this so-called arms control "help"? He has not. If he needs it, why does he not ask for it? After all, the President is necessarily this country's one and only ultimate arms control negotiator. This kind of appropriation, unasked for, can only embarrass him. Can we imagine the President telling the country that he has failed to win an arms control agreement and that therefore he wants more than a billion dollars more in this coming year to rush research on a program whose director General Abrahamson tells us cannot be deployed for at least 10 years?

More importantly, consider the coffin the subcommittee is asking the Congress to climb into. Let me describe that coffin. The other condition that fences the additional $1.2 billion is that both Houses of Congress must vote to release the money. We all know the President and the Soviet Union are far apart on many arms control issues. There may be some agreement, but the President could certify very easily next January that the "arms talks have failed." Since Congress would have passed this legislation with the obvious implication that it would ante up the extra $1.2 billion if the President tells us he is not satisfied with the arms control agreement, what do Members of the Congress do then? Do we wimp out? Do we say "we thought it might be a pretty good bluff, but we were only kidding"?

No way. We built the fence. The President did not. Many Members of the Congress would feel that we have no alternative as a proud country but to live up to our clearly implied commitment.

Now, Mr. President, that is not all. The subcommittee also appropriated $400 million to "SDI spinoffs." That $400 million brings the grand total subcommittee SDI appropriation to $5.57 billion. And that's a cool $170 million over the immense request of President Reagan.

How about that $400 million? Once again, the subcommittee champions of SDI will strongly denounce any suggestion that the $400 million is for SDI. Here's their argument: The $400 million is not SDI money. It would simply develop spinoffs that came from SDI research, but applied to other weapons programs.

And who decides whether to spend the money and when and how to spend it? Secretary of Defense Weinberger, that's who. Secretary Weinberger has made it clear that he wants far more for SDI than Congress is willing to give him. So what can we expect him to do with that $400 million of SDI-related technologies? Will he use it on field artillery or aircraft? Or will he find a way to adapt it to star wars related functions?

Keep in mind that the $400 million will be appropriated for fiscal 1987. The year 1987 will be a year of continued research for SDI. There will be little or no development. General Abrahamson has told the committee that deployment is 10 years away. What does this mean? This means that the $400 million will be expended in the research infancy of this technology. The ultimate application whether to SDI systems or antitank guns or aircraft is years away. That means the $400 million will be for SDI research with the first objective SDI application. The "spinoff" will be an incidental and accidental development years down the line. This $400 million for SDI in 1987 for "spinoff" for conventional weapons is transparently just another $400 million for SDI. Let us not kid ourselves.

AMENDMENTS TO S. 2752

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, today I am introducing six amendments to S. 2752 which was reported by the Banking Committee on August 13. As reported, S. 2752 would provide for a recapitalization of the FSLIC, extend the emergency authorities under the Garn-St Germain Act, and provide new authority to the bank regulators to merge failing banks with out-of-State banking institutions.

The first amendment would establish a 1-year moratorium on the creation of new nonbank banks while placing certain restrictions on existing nonbank banks.

The second amendment would terminate the new authority to sell failing banks after 1 year.

The next four amendments would provide bank holding companies with new securities powers including the authority to underwrite and deal in municipal revenue bonds, mortgage backed securities and commercial paper and to offer mutual funds.

Mr. President, at a minimum, I strongly believe the first two amendments are essential to the passage of S. 2752. It would be foolish to provide the FSLIC with $15 billion in new funds to close insolvent savings and loan associations while at the same time, the nonbank bank loophole remains a viable option for the potential buyers of those ailing S&L's. Clearly, the FSLIC will receive fewer bids at lower amounts if the nonbank bank loophole is still open. That means the ultimate cost of closing these institutions will be higher. This higher cost will be passed on to the savings and loan industry and their customers.

The same argument also applies to the authority provided the bank regulators to sell failing banks to out-of-State buyers. How many institutions will want to buy a sick bank if they can penetrate the same market through the nonbank bank loophole? Presumably, the motivation for selling failing banks to out-of-State buyers is to save the FDIC money. But that objective is undermined by failing to close the nonbank bank loophole. Keeping the nonbank bank loophole open will cost the FDIC more money and that cost will likewise be passed on to the banking industry and their customers.

I have heard it argued that the nonbank bank issue is controversial, that we cannot reach an agreement in the time remaining, and that prudence dictates that we proceed on the two items on which there is a reasonable consensus. I do not buy that argument.

First, the bank regulators have made no showing that they even need the new authority they have requested to sell failing banks across State lines in contravention of State law. Most of the States that have had problems have already amended or are in the process of amending their laws to facilitate out of State mergers including the State of Texas which was reported to have had the severest banking problems.

Second, there is also not a strong consensus behind the FSLIC recapitalization measure. As recently as a few weeks ago, the major trade association representing the savings and loan industry was saying that the plan vastly overestimated the amount of new capital needed by FSLIC and that the entire program could be accomplished without additional borrowing. These savings and loan officials argued that many institutions that are nominally insolvent today will not be insolvent a year or two from now as real estate markets begin their inevitable recovery. Pumping a lot of money into FSLIC could actually result in costing more money in the long run.

For these reasons, I do not believe a compelling case can be made that the Congress must act on these two items this year, especially if they are not coupled with a closing of the nonbank bank loophole. If we cannot get an agreement on the nonbank bank issue in the few weeks remaining, I believe we would be better served by having no bill and considering all banking issues together next year.

One of the arguments made by the Treasury against closing the nonbank bank loophole is that it should not be considered unless it is part of a broader bill to extend new powers to banks and bank holding companies. I fail to see the logic of holding the nonbank bank issue as hostage to new powers for the banks even though I favor limited new securities powers similar to those already approved by the Senate in 1984 by a vote of 89 to 5.

While I do not agree with the Treasury position, I am nonetheless prepared to vote on securities powers if that is what it takes to secure an agreement this year on closing the nonbank loophole. Accordingly, I have introduced amendments allowing bank holding companies to engage in new securities activities including the underwriting of municipal revenue bonds, mortgage backed securities and commercial paper. All of these activities were previously approved by the Senate in 1984. In addition, I would allow banks to offer mutual funds.

Mr. President, if and when S. 2752 is called up for consideration, I reserve my rights to speak at length against the legislation. If it appears that new bank securities powers are the key to breaking the Treasury opposition to closing the nonbank bank loophole, I am prepared to offer these amendments and to ask for roll call votes on them.

(The text of the amendments appears in today's RECORD under Amendments Submitted.)

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. STENNIS addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

RECOGNITION OF MRS. GRACE SMITH CAPERTON

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I wish to make a very short statement for the RECORD with regard to a newspaper article.

At a time when national concern is mounting on problems of teenage pregnancy, drug abuse, and other problems facing our young people, and when our schools and teachers are coming under criticism for failure to better prepare our young people for productive lives, I have found a source of encouragement and hope in the example of Mrs. Grace Smith Caperton, a young lady who is a home economics teacher at West Kemper High School in my hometown, DeKalb, MS.

Mrs. Caperton recognized the tremendous pressures facing her students as they struggled to cope with life as teenagers in our society. She decided to do something positive to help equip them in their efforts to deal adequately and positively with the problems they face day by day. She initiated a program that helps students realize their potential by improving their skills in coping with problems involving such sensitive issues as suicide, death, drug abuse, family planning, sexuality, and child and spouse abuse.

Three years ago, Mrs. Caperton introduced a class entitled "Coping with Life" as part of the home economics curriculum at West Kemper High School. The class has been highly successful in helping students to better understand the pressures facing them and the alternative choices they can make leading to happier and more productive lives. An outgrowth of the class has been establishment of a peer counseling squad to help students on a more informal basis with their needs and problems.

Mrs. Caperton was recently awarded a National Merit Award in the Home Economics Teacher of the Year Program in recognition of her successful efforts at West Kemper High School. She is certainly deserving of this high award which was announced at the annual convention of the American Home Economics Association in Kansas City, MO, last month. She had earlier been selected as Mississippi's Home Economics Teacher of the Year.

I have, personally, known Mrs. Caperton all of her life. I have known her family through several generations, and it comes as no surprise to me that she is making such a significant and successful contribution to the lives of young people in my home county. She is a truly outstanding individual who contributes to the community in many ways. We need more people with sensitivity to recognize the needs of our young people who will respond with compassion and concern rather than with criticism. Her approach has been entirely positive, recognizing that many of her students' problems result from family difficulties and circumstances largely beyond their control. She has helped these young students to see that they can make decisions on a daily basis that will make their own lives better in the long run.

Mrs. Caperton's efforts have already reached far beyond the classroom where she teaches. Her students have participated in numerous community service projects and have raised money to help build a Christian center at the State penitentiary at Parchman. These students, who have learned to better cope with life through her teaching, are also now in a position to help others in the community with the problems they are facing. She has helped them to become productive members of the community. The lessons they have learned have enabled them in many cases to strengthen their family structures and to prepare for the future.

Mr. President, I commend Mrs. Caperton highly for the initiative she has taken, and congratulate her on the recognition she so richly deserves. I hope she will serve as a real example to other teachers as to what can be done through such efforts in the classroom, and I hope my colleagues will find in her a source of encouragement and hope as I have.

I ask unanimous consent that two articles describing Mrs. Caperton's work and the "Coping With Life" class which recently appeared in the Meridian Star be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GRACE CAPERTON INSTILLS CONFIDENCE

Her county has one of the highest unemployment rates in Mississippi and many of her school's students tended to face the future with pessimism, or at least concern.

Grace Smith Caperton, who grew up in Kemper County, Mississippi, and returned there to teach home economics at West Kemper High School in KeKalb, decided to do something about it. She developed a program that helps students realize their potential by erasing that pessimism by improving their self-esteem and coping skills.

Her efforts have earned her a National Merit Award in the Home Economics Teacher of the Year program.

Announcement of the award was made in Kansas City, Mo., Monday at the American Home Economics Association's annual convention by Daria Sheehan, manager of consumer programs at Chesebrough-Pond's Inc., which co-sponsors the home economics teaching excellence awards program with the AHEA.

Ms. Caperton earned bachelor of science and master of science degrees in home economics education from the University of Southern Mississippi. She has taught at West Kemper High School since 1981. She was named Mississippi's Home Economics Teacher of the Year prior to receiving the National Merit Winner award.

Three years ago, Ms. Caperton instituted a "Coping with Life" class as part of the home economics curriculum at West Kemper to help students deal with personal and family problems while improving their everyday decision-making skills.

"I felt there was a real need to help my students feel better about themselves, their present and future families," says Ms. Caperton. "I grew up in this county and was very familiar with the types of problems they faced and the feeling of insecurity that can develop. It is essential to know how to deal with life's problems, to have the ability to make wise decisions as consumers and citizens, and to know that you can make a difference in your community. That is what this course is designed to promote."

Ms. Sheehan said "Ms. Caperton has taken a leadership role in her community by helping provide young people with the confidence and skills necessary to meet the pressing demands of their everyday life."

Ms. Caperton also tries to teach students the value and importance of helping others. Last year, they raised money to make a donation to help build a Christian Center at the State Penitentiary at Parchman.

To help improve communications skills, students select newspaper stories to summarize and discuss before class members and are given a "show and tell" time each week to discuss television programs. Students are also required to prepare a family tree tracing their roots back to their great-grandparents.

"I realize that my values and opinions about life can influence the values of my students," says Ms. Caperton. "Therefore, I have a great responsibility to serve as a role model. Because of some unfavorable family conditions, many of the teen-agers have not had the opportunity to develop sound ideas about the many functions and responsibilities of family living."

"COPING" CLASSES TEACHES STUDENTS HOW TO DEAL WITH LIFE

One objective of Ms. Caperton's "Coping with Life" class is to assist students in learning about sensitive issues such as suicide, death, drug abuse, family planning, sexuality and child and spouse abuse. "We try to provide a safe environment in which to learn accurate information about these topics," says Ms. Caperton. "If sensitive issues are confronted and discussed openly, students can develop the ability to deal with them knowledgeably."

Topics covered in class studies and discussions include sexual behavior, communications skills, child development and care, family roles, career choices, peer pressure, caring for the sick and elderly, budget planning, consumer rights and responsibilities, first aid procedures and personal health, among others. Outside experts, such as speakers from the State Board of Health and an area mental health center are frequently called on for help. Field trips to a child-care facility, nursing home, vocational training center, retail and service establishments to learn wise purchasing practices, and even to the local sheriff's department, are part of class activities.

Class topics are not selected totally without student input. At the end of each year, a questionnaire is provided to at least 100 West Kemper students, which helps identify student concerns and aids in planning the class for the coming year. Almost half of the students in the "Coping with Life" classes are males.

As an outgrowth of the "Coping with Life" class, and as a result of encouragement and advice from students, faculty members, administrators and parents, a Peer Counseling Squad was established at West Kemper High School to help students with their needs and problems. Its purpose is to allow selected class students (peer counselors) to listen to and assist other students in solving current personal, school and family problems. Selected faculty counselors and the school nurse assist the Peer Counseling Squad as needed in counseling sessions.

"Students, faculty members and parents have been very receptive to this outreach program," says Ms. Caperton. "To me, it crystallizes the success of the 'Coping with Life' curriculum. Not only are the students learning to deal with their personal problems, they are now reaching out to help others in the community."

Mr. STENNIS. It has been my privilege to know the young lady during her entire lifetime as well as that of her mother, father, and grandfather. I am proud of every one of them.

Mrs. Caperton recently received nationwide recognition for her originality and her very effective way of bringing teaching into fashion in a large way in these problems I have referred to.

There was a good article in the newspaper, the Meridian Star, that reflects a great deal about this young lady and her amazing work. I have asked that it be printed in the RECORD at this point with my brief remarks so that more will get the benefit of her counsel and relation of her experiences which we encourage and carry on in a broader and more effective way.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ACID DEPOSITION AND SULFUR REDUCTION ACT

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, today along with Senators HUMPHREY, BURDICK, D'AMATO, SIMPSON, HOLLINGS, and BOSCHWITZ, I am introducing the Acid Deposition and Sulfur Reduction Act. This bill builds on S. 503 which I introduced with Senator HUMPHREY on February 25, 1985.

The bill reduces sulfur dioxide emissions by 10 million tons per year below their 1980 levels in 31 States east of or bordering the Mississippi River. Statewide average rates of sulfur dioxide emissions from steam generating units would be reduced to 2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million Btu of heat input by 1992 and to 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million Btu by 1997.

It reduces nitrogen oxide emissions by approximately 3 million tons below 1980 levels by 1997 and allows States and sources free choice of methods for achieving these reductions. New clean coal technologies, coal cleaning, fuel switching, scrubbers, and energy conservation would all be available options under the bill.

The bill requires installation of continuous emission monitoring devices on all powerplants, improving implimentation of the bill's standards.

It also includes modest auto emission controls for nitrogen oxide modeled on those in H.R. 4567 but set at slightly lower levels.

The Acid Deposition and Sulfur Emissions Reduction Act provides equitable protection for all consumers by favoring at least-cost approach to emissions control.

According to the Congressional Budget Office my bill costs approximately $34 billion over 30 years to achieve a 10 million ton sulfur dioxide reduction which under Senator STAFFORD's bill, S. 2203, a reduction of just 2 million tons more would cost nearly three times as much.

Since the bill closely parallels the control strategy contained in H.R. 4567, the compromise House bill, it would face a much easier conference with the House as well as better prospects in the Senate than would S. 2203.

Only this acid rain control bill encourages State use of energy conservation as part of emissions control programs by providing an optional method for calculating reduction requirements that fully credit conservation.

The bill's phased approach encourages the development of new clean coal technologies which burn high sulfur coal cleanly and cheaply. In contrast, S. 2203 would rule out new technologies through early compliance dates and a requirement that all existing plants eventually comply with very expensive new source performance standards.

My bill follows the polluter-pays principle, providing no subsidy and collecting no tax. This economically efficient approach lets producers and consumers make decisions based on the economic cost of the resources they use, including the cost of environmental controls.

Its two-phased design makes my bill more flexible, by allowing for adjustments in emissions requirements based on research obtained during phase I. Such adjustments go into effect only with the approval of Congress.

In addition, the bill encourages cost-saving emissions trading between plants, utilities, and States. Trading achieves the same environmental result at a lower total cost to consumers by concentrating industry efforts on plants where cleanup is less costly.

Finally, the bill excludes new sources from the averaging required to meet its emission rate of 1.2 million pounds of sulfur per million Btu's. This exclusion translates into an extra million tons of reduction above that contained in H.R. 4567.

Mr. President, this bill enjoys the support of the Alliance for Acid Rain Control, a coalition of eight governors, corporate leaders, academics and environmentalists which actively work for its passage. The Governors who formed the Alliance want to break the 5-year deadlock on the issue and win passage of cost-effective legislation. Only my bill meets their objectives and can win broad support in the Senate.

My own State of Wisconsin, one of the leaders in environmental protection, recently enacted the toughest State law in the Nation for reducing acid rain. But we can't do it alone. Emissions from other States cause acid deposition in Wisconsin. Yet we have no control over their behavior. Only comprehensive legislation can save our lakes and forest from acid rain damage.

Mr. President I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis, a side-by-side comparison with other acid rain bills and the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NEW PROXMIRE-HUMPHREY ACID RAIN CONTROL BILL: SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

Section 1: Short Title. "The Acid Rain and Sulfur Emissions Reduction Act."

Section 2 of the bill amends the Clean Air Act by adding the following new sections:

Section 180: Findings and Purposes. Congress declares that the long-range transportation of pollutants is a serious problem threatening public health and welfare and the environment. This bill intends to reduce the emissions of pollutants which cause acid rain.

Section 181: Applicability to New Sources. This program does not apply to plants which are defined as "new sources" in the Clean Air Act; only "existing" sources are covered.

Section 182: Establishment of Region. The emission reduction program applies to the 31 States east of our bordering the Mississippi and the District of Columbia, which are defined as the "acid deposition impact region."

Section 183: State Plans to Control Emissions. This section establishes requirements for reducing emissions of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides. The Governor of each State in the region must submit an emission control plan and compliance schedules to the EPA Administrator within 24 months after the enactment of this Act.

Sulfur Dioxide Emission Rate Requirements. By January 1, 1992, the annual average rate of emissions of sulfur dioxide (SO_2) must be reduced to 2.0 pounds per million Btu of heat input in each State. By January 1, 1997, the annual average rate of emissions of SO_2 must be reduced to 1.2 pounds per million Btu of heat input in each State.

Separate Utility and Non-Utility Requirements. These average rates of SO_2 emissions must be achieved separately by the pool of "existing" electric utility sources and by the pool of "existing" non-utility fossil-fuel fired steam generating units.

Conservation Option. If the Governor certifies to the Administrator that the State plan includes a conservation program that will help reduce emissions, then electric utility sources in the State may comply with an SO_2 tonnage emission reduction requirement, rather than an emission rate. The 1992 reduction requirement would be set at the amount of emissions in excess of 2.0 lbs per million Btu from "existing" utility sources in the State in 1980; the 1997 reduction requirement would be set at the amount of emissions in excess of 1.2 lbs per million Btu from "existing utility sources in the state in 1980.

Nitrogen Oxides. The Administrator must identify all sources in the region that can achieve an emissions rate of 0.6 lbs of nitrogen oxides (NO_x) per million Btu by 1997 using burner retrofit technology or using other means at a cmparable cost per ton of NO_x removed. By 1988, the Administrator must transmit to each State a calculation of the total amount of NO_x emission reduction that can be achieved in this way. The Governor's emission control plan must achieve the amount of NO_x reduction by 1997.

Section 184: Accelerated Research Programs. An accelerated research program is to be conducted by the Acid Precipitation Task Force (in the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration), in addition to the other research being conducted by that Task Force. The research program will include high terrain modeling, regional tracer studies, research on the relative importance of different air pollutants in environmental damage, identification of sulfate and nitrate sensitive geographic areas, and research on health effects. The research is to focus especially on the long range transport and deposition of pollutants in the Western U.S. The research should be completed by January 1, 1990; $25 million is authorized for the program annually in fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990.

The EPA Administrator must conduct an intensive evaluation of the results of the research and of the effects of the first phase emission reductions. The evaluation is to be conducted between January 1, 1990 and July 1, 1991, and $1 million is authorized annually for it in fiscal years 1990 and 1991.

Section 185: Review of Phase II Requirements. The EPA Administrator may recommend changes in the Phase II emission control requirements based on the research and evaluation conducted under section 184 and other available research. By no later than July 1, 1991, the Administrator may recommend requiring States to comply with Phase II of the program that were not included in Phase I; exempting States included in Phase I from complying with Phase II; or increasing or decreasing an individual State's SO_2 or NO_x reduction requirements. The Administrator may recommend such changes only if they are supported by scientific evidence, and the recommendations shall take effect only if they are enacted into law by the Congress before January 1, 1993.

Section 186: General Provisions Applicable to State Plans.

Interstate Trading. The Governors of any two or more States may agree to reallot reductions requirements among the States, or to permit interstate trading of reduction requirements, as long as the total aggregate tonnage emission reduction achieved is the same as it would have been otherwise.

Revisions to State Plans. Governors may submit revisions to measures in their States' emission reduction plans at any time. If the Congress enacts changes in the Phase II requirements for any State, then the Governor must submit revised measures to achieve emission reductions within 9 months of enactment or by September 1, 1993 (whichever is earlier). However, if Congress eases a State's requirements, then the Governor may opt not to submit revised measures.

Criteria for Approving State Plans. In order to be approved, State measures to achieve emission reductions must include requirements for monitoring by the source and enforcement agencies including the installation of continuous emission monitors on all fossil-fired electric utility units; must be adequate to achieve the required reductions; and must establish a State baseline for SO_2 and NO_x emissions and baseline capacity factors for each electric unit. If the state's plan meets these criteria, the EPA Administrator shall approve the measures submitted by the Governor of a State within four months, taking into consideration the comments of Governors of other States. State plans shall also specify compliance schedules and incremental progress requirements, and to the extent practicable shall phase compliance dates so that larger amounts of emission reductions occur earlier. Emission limitations and requirements of State plans shall be treated as requirements of an applicable "implementation plan."

Enforcement and Penalties. The EPA Administrator may sue for a permanent or temporary injunction against violators of any requirement or measure of a State plan. The Administrator may also assess a civil penalty of up to $10,000 per day on any violator, by an order made on the record after opportunity for a hearing.

Section 187: Major Stationary Source Sulfur Dioxide Reduction Requirements—"Default" Provisions. If any State in the region fails to adopt measures to achieve the required reductions or fails to have such measures approved by the EPA Administrator within 42 months after the enactment of this bill, then every "existing" fossil fuel fired steam generating unit which is a "major source" in the State must achieve an annual average sulfur dioxide emission rate of 2.0 lbs per million Btu by 1992, and 1.2 lbs per million Btu by 1997. The owners or operators of each source are then responsible for submitting plans and measures to the EPA Administrator that will achieve the required reductions, establish baselines, and install continuous emission monitors on all electric generating units.

Section 188: Alternative Programs for Enforceable Emission Reductions. Emission reductions may be achieved using enforceable continuous emission reduction measures, or using alternative means including: least emissions dispatch of electric generating units; early retirement of major stationary sources; investments in conservation of electricity; precombustion cleaning of fuels; fuel substitution; and trading.

Trading of emission reduction requirements is permitted if the total aggregate tonnage emissions reduction is no less than the total that would be achieved absent such trading. Trading schemes may credit emissions reductions resulting from enforceable continuous emission reduction techniques, fuel substitution, precombustion cleaning of fuels, or early plant retirement. The States and the EPA Administrator are authorized to facilitate trading by establishing emissions reduction banks or brokerage institutions, and shall consider emissions and capacity factor baselines and the actual monitored emissions and capacity factors achieved when implementing trading.

Section 3: Smelters. Section 3 of the bill is appended to § 119(c)(2) of the Clean Air Act. This section requires each primary nonferrous smelter, which has applied for or been granted a second order extending deadlines for complying with sulfur dioxide emission limitations or standards, to be in compliance by January 2, 1988. No administrative or court order may extend the compliance deadline beyond this date. The EPA must complete action on all pending applications within 180 days of enactment of this bill, and within 60 days of enactment must amend all orders already in effect to provide for compliance by January 2, 1988.

Section 4: International Cooperation. Congress expresses its concern and sense of urgency about transboundary air pollution between the U.S. and Mexico. Congress directs the Secretary of State to conclude an Annex concerning transboundary air pollution with Mexico with all due dispatch. Congress directs the Secretary of State to ensure that the new Nacozari smelter and any expansions to the existing Cananea smelter will meet standards at least as stringent as new source performance standards under the Clean Air Act. The Secretary of State is to negotiate a mutually acceptable arrangement for monitoring, inspecting, and enforcing pollution control standards near the border, and with the EPA Administrator, is to report to Congress on the results of research by the EPA and international agencies on the effects of transboundary air pollution from copper smelters on public health and welfare in the U.S. and Mexico. (This section is identical to the international provision in H.R. 4567.)

Section 5: Mobile Sources. Passenger cars must meet .8gpm by the 1989 model year, gasoline-powered trucks weighing up to 8,500 lbs. must meet 1.1gpm by 1988, gasoline-powered trucks weighing from 8,500 lbs. up to 14,000 lbs. must meet 5.0 g/Bhp-hr by 1988, and diesel trucks weighing up to 6,000 lbs. must meet 5.0 g/Bhp-hr by 1988, and diesel trucks weighing from 6,000 to 8,500 lbs. must meet 5.0 g/Bhp-hr by 1988.

SIDE-BY-SIDE COMPARISON OF ACID DEPOSITION CONTROL BILLS

[September 11, 1986]

	Stafford bill (S. 2203)	Waxman-Sikorski bill (H.R. 4567)	New Proxmire-Humphrey bill
Phasing?	No	Yes	Yes.
Effective dates	1991	1993, 1997	1992, 1997.
Effective region	Entire United States	Entire United States	31 Eastern States.
Limitation of utility SO_2 emissions	Average emissions from each plant limited to 0.7 lbs per MMBtu, with a short phase-out period permitted for plants that do not meet this standard.	Annual statewide average rate of emissions from all fossil-fueled utility plants limited to 2.0 lbs per MMBtu in the first phase, and 1.2 lbs per MMBtu in the second phase.	Annual statewide average rate of emissions from all fossil fueled utility plants limited to 2.0 lbs per MMBtu in the first phase, and 1.2 lbs per MMBtu in the second phase, excluding "new sources" as defined in Clean Air Act.
Limitation of nonutility SO_2 emissions.	No provision	By 1994, each state must promulgate emission reduction plans and compliance schedules for industrial process emitters. By 1997, monthly average statewide SO_2 emissions from nonutility fossil fueled steam generating units must not exceed 1.2 lbs per MMBtu.	Nonutility fossil fuel-fired boilers must meet statewide average levels of 2.0 lbs per MMBtu in the first phase and 1.2 lbs per MMBtu in the second phase.
Limitation of utility NO_x emissions	Best available NO_x emission control technology (e.g., German SCR process) required for each plant.	Annual average statewide utility emissions limited to 0.6 lbs per MMBtu in the second phase. Revised NSPS: 0.35 lbs per MMBtu for subbituminous coal; 0.40 lbs per MMBtu for bituminous coal.	EPA Administrator to identify all units which can achieve a emissions rate of 0.6 lbs per MMBtu using burner retrofit technology or other means at a comparable cost. Statewide reduction level, based on amounts identified, to be achieved by 1997.
Limitation of nonutility NO_x emissions.	Best available NO_x emission control technology utilized in Germany for all major stationary sources.	By 1994, each state must promulgate emission reduction plans and compliance schedules for industrial process emitters. By 1997, monthly average statewide emissions from non-utility fossil-fueled steam generating units must not exceed 0.6 lbs of NO_x per MMBtu.	Nonutility stationary source boilers are included in the same NO_x reduction program as utility boilers, to be achieved by 1997.
Trading and bubbling	Not allowed	Only intrastate trading allowed but no interstate trading or trading between utility and nonutility stationary sources.	Full interstate and intrastate trading allowed as well as full trading between utility and non-utility stationary sources.
State implementation	No State role, no flexibility	Free choice of strategies to reduce emissions, except that in order to be eligible to receive a subsidy, the state must ensure that rate increases due to emissions reductions are equalized among residential ratepayers of all utilities in the state, and are levelized over time.	Free choice of strategies to reduce emissions.
Specific old sources requirements	Must meet NSPS standards 35 years after completion of construction.	None beyond overall statewide average emissions limits.	None beyond overall statewide average emissions limits.
Mobil sources	Vehicles must meet the following standards: Light-duty cars made after 1990 model year: HC: 0.16 g/mi CO: 1.3 g/mi NO_x: 0.25 g/Mi. Heavy-duty gasoline powered vehicles made after 1991 model year: NO_x: 5.1 g/bhph HC: 0.48 g/bhph CO: 1.3 g/bhph. Heavy-duty diesel-powered vehicles made after 1991 model year: NO_x: 5.1 g/bhph HC: 0.54 g/bhph CO: 1.7 g/bhph. Particulates: 0.25 g/bhph (except buses: particulates: 0.1 g/bhph). Light-duty trucks made after 1990 model year: NO_x 0.5 g/bhph HC: 0.54 g/bhph CO: 3.0 g/bhph Particulates: 0.18 g/bhph. Sulfur content of diesel fuel may not exceed average sulfur content of gasoline during 1985 (0.05 pct by weight).	Enacts provisions identical to current EPA regulations, except for auto standard for NO_x, which is tightened to 0.7 g/mile.	Passenger cars must meet 0.8 gpm by the 1989 model year, gasoline-powered trucks weighing up to 8,500 lbs. must meet 1.1 gpm by 1988, gasoline-powered trucks weighing from 8,500 lbs. up to 14,000 lbs. must meet 5.0 g/Bhp-hr by 1988, and diesel trucks weighing up to 6,000 lbs. must meet 5.0/Bjp-hr by 1988, and diesel trucks weighing from 6,000 to 8,500 lbs. must meet 5.0 g/Bjp-hr by 1988.

Civil penalties for violators	$10,000 per day per violation	$50,000 per day per violation	$10,000 per day per violation.
Review of requirements in second phase.	No phasing	The EPA is to conduct a study before the second phase, but only Congress may authorize changes.	EPA Administrator may recommend changes in phase II to Congress based on research results. Congress must act by Jan. 1, 1993 to put changes into effect.
Monitoring compliance	No provision	No provision	All fossil fuel fired power plants required to install continuous emissions monitors on stacks. States must calculate emissions and plant capacity baseline.
Research	Study of tariff on emissions required. Implementation of system of monitoring acid deposition in Western states required. Funding level not specified.	EPA to assist with financing R&D of innovative emissions reduction technologies. Study required on trans-boundary air pollution. Funding level not specified.	$25 million authorized for an accelerated study of source receptor relationships and health effects of SO_2 and NO_x emissions, with a special emphasis on the Western United States.
Subsidy	None	An 8-year tax of up to 0.5 mill per kwh, varying in proportion to SO_2 emission rates, on fossil-fuel electric generation in the United States and all electric imports, would be used to fund a subsidy to utility systems to ensure that residential rates would not increase by more than 10 percent due to emissions controls.	None.
Smelters	No provision	Each nonferrous primary smelter that has been granted or has applied for a "second order" extending its deadline for compliance with SO_2 emissions limits or standards must comply by no later than January 2, 1988; no administrative or court order may extend this deadline. EPA must amend all orders already in effect to provide for compliance by January 2, 1988. S. 2813

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Acid Deposition and Sulfur Emissions Reduction Act".

ACID DEPOSITION AND SULFUR EMISSIONS REDUCTION

SEC. 2. Title I of the Clean Air Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART E—ACID DEPOSITION AND SULFUR EMISSIONS REDUCTION

"FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

"SEC. 180. (a) The Congress finds that—

"(1) the long-range transport of pollutants and their transformation products is an interstate and international problem;

"(2) current levels of emissions of air pollutants from existing sources as well as increased emissions from new and existing sources threaten public health and welfare and the environment in States and countries other than the States and countries from which the emissions are made;

"(3) reductions in total regional atmospheric loading of pollutants such as sulfur oxides and nitrogen oxides will enhance protection of public health and welfare and the environment;

"(4) more effective regulation of the interstate transport of air pollutants is needed in order to protect the health and welfare of the citizens of downwind States and is properly a Federal concern;

"(5) a phased reduction strategy will provide additional time to demonstrate, on a commercial scale, innovative technologies, such as limestone injection and fluidized bed combustion and other precombustion, combustion, and postcombustion technologies, which eventually will provide sources of air pollution with a wider choice of cost-effective alternatives to reduce the atmospheric loading of pollutants;

"(6) creation of a two-phase pollution control program, with an evaluation period of new research efforts prior to implementation of the second phase, will allow the second phase of the program to be revised by Congress as necessary to incorporate the results of the research and produce increased protection of sensitive areas and increased mitigation of environmental damage; and

"(7) in particular—

"(A) the deposition of acid compounds from the atmosphere is causing and contributing to widespread long-term ecosystem degradation including damage to aquatic and terrestrial resources;

"(B) the principal sources of the acid compounds in the atmosphere, and their precursors, is the combustion of fossil fuels;

"(C) the problem of acid deposition is of national and international significance and cannot be addressed adequately without Federal intervention;

"(D) control strategies and technology for precursors to acid deposition exist now that are economically feasible; and

"(E) current and future generations of Americans will be more adversely affected by delayed action, so that efforts to remedy the problem should commence now.

"(b) The purposes of this part are to—

"(1) initiate a program to protect public health and welfare and the environment from any actual or potential adverse effect caused by ambient concentrations or deposition of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides, including the products of atmospheric transformation of pollutants;

"(2) enhance the ability of States to protect the public health and welfare and the environment of their citizens from air pollution originating in other States;

"(3) provide for State flexibility in the design of a pollution control program in order to encourage the use of the most cost-effective emission reduction techniques;

"(4) achieve a just and efficient solution to the problem of acid deposition by requiring those responsible for pollution to pay for its control; and

"(5) identify and protect areas which are sensitive to ozone and to sulfate and nitrate deposition, including but not limited to, aquatic and terrestrial resources.

"APPLICABILITY TO NEW SOURCES AND CONVERSIONS

"SEC. 181. Nothing in this part shall be construed to limit emissions from any major stationary source defined as a 'new source' in section 111(a)(2) of this Act.

"ESTABLISHMENT OF REGION

"SEC. 182. There is established an acid deposition impact region (hereafter in this part referred to as the 'region'), which shall consist of the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and the District of Columbia. The Administrator may include additional States within the region and may exclude States from the region as provided by section 185(b) herein.

"STATE PLANS TO CONTROL EMISSIONS

"SEC. 183. (a) Not later than 24 months after the date of the enactment of this section, the Governor of each State within the region shall submit to the Administrator a plan establishing emission limitations and compliance schedules for controlling emissions of sulfur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen from major stationary sources in the State. The plan shall meet the requirements of subsections (b) and (c).

"(b)(1) The emission limitations and compliance schedules contained in the plan under this section shall be adequate to ensure that by January 1, 1992, and thereafter, the annual statewide average rate of emissions of sulfur dioxide from the total of all fossil fuel fired electric utility steam generating units in the State not defined as new sources under section 111(a)(2) of this Act, shall not exceed 2.0 pounds per million Btu of heat input.

"(2)(A) If the Governor certifies to the Administrator that a program encouraging the conservation of electricity will be implemented as part of the State plan under this section and that such program will result in a reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions, then the plan shall comply with the requirements of subparagraph (B) in lieu of complying with the requirements of paragraph (1).

"(B) The emission limitations and compliance schedules contained in the State plan under this section shall be adequate to ensure that by January 1, 1992, and thereafter, aggregate statewide emissions of sulfur dioxide from the total of all fossil fuel fired electric utility steam generating units in the State, not defined as new sources under section 111(a)(2) of this Act, shall not exceed an aggregate statewide sulfur dioxide emissions ceiling. Such aggregate emissions ceiling for each State shall be equal to the total amount of sulfur dioxide emitted by all fossil fuel fired electric utility steam generating units in the State in 1980, not defined as new sources under section 111(a)(2) of this Act, minus the aggregate amount of sulfur dioxide emitted by such plants in excess of 2.0 pounds per million Btu of heat input in the State in 1980.

"(3) The emission limitations and compliance schedules contained in the State plan under this section shall be adequate to ensure that by January 1, 1992, and thereafter, the annual statewide average rate of emissions of sulfur dioxide from the total of all fossil fuel fired steam generating units in the State (other than fossil fuel fired electric utility steam generating units), not defined as new sources under section 111(a)(2) of this Act, shall not exceed 2.0 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million Btu of heat input.

"(c)(1) The emission limitations and compliance schedules contained in the State plan under this section shall be adequate to ensure that by January 1, 1997, and thereafter, the annual statewide average rate of emissions of sulfur dioxide from the total of all fossil fuel fired electric utility steam generating units in the State not defined as new sources under section 111(a)(2) of this Act shall not exceed 1.2 pounds per million Btu of heat input.

"(2)(A) If the Governor certifies to the Administrator that a program encouraging the conservation of electricity will be implemented as part of the State plan under this section and that such program will result in a reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions, then the plan shall comply with the requirements of subparagraph (B) in lieu of complying with the requirements of paragraph (1).

"(B) The emission limitations and compliance schedules contained in the State plan under this section shall be adequate to ensure that by January 1, 1997, and thereafter, aggregate statewide emissions of sulfur dioxide from the total of all fossil fuel fired electric utility steam generating units in the State, not defined as new sources under section 111(a)(2) of this Act, shall not exceed an aggregate statewide sulfur dioxide emissions ceiling. Such aggregate emissions ceiling for each State shall be equal to the total amount of sulfur dioxide emitted by all fossil fuel fired electric utility steam generating units in the State in 1980, not defined as new sources under section 111(a)(2) of this Act, minus the aggregate amount of sulfur dioxide emitted by such plants in excess of 1.2 pounds per million Btu of heat input in the State in 1980.

"(3) The emission limitations and compliance schedules contained in the State plan under this section shall be adequate to ensure that by January 1, 1997, and thereafter, the annual statewide average rate of emissions of sulfur dioxide from the total of all fossil fuel fired steam generating units in the State (other than fossil fuel fired electric utility steam generating units), not defined as new sources under section 111(a)(2) of this Act, shall not exceed 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million Btu of heat input.

"(d)(1) The Administrator shall identify all fossil fuel fired steam generating units in the region which can achieve, by January 1, 1997, an annual emission rate of 0.6 pounds of nitrogen oxides per million Btu's of heat input annual emission rate through the use of burner retrofit technology or other means that can be utilized at a comparable cost per ton of nitrogen oxides removed. By December 31, 1988, the Administrator shall transmit to each State in the region a statement containing a calculation of the total nitrogen oxide emission reduction that can be achieved through utilization of such technologies in that State.

"(2) Not later than December 31, 1990, the Governor of each State shall submit to the Administrator a plan establishing emission limitations and compliance schedules for emissions of nitrogen oxides from fossil fuel fired steam generating units. Such State plan may include any emissions limitations and compliance schedules, applicable to such steam generating units within the State, which the State deems appropriate and which are adequate to ensure that, by January 1, 1997, the aggregate annual reductions in emissions of nitrogen oxides from the total of such sources located in the State will be at least equal to the total statewide emission reduction identified by the Administration under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"ACCELERATED RESEARCH PROGRAMS

"SEC. 184. (a) An accelerated research program to examine the pattern of effects of atmospheric loading of pollutants such as sulfur oxides and nitrogen oxides shall be implemented by the Acid Precipitation Task Force (established under section 703 of the Acid Precipitation Act of 1980), under the direction of the Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. Results of such research program shall be made freely available to the States. Such research program shall include but shall not be limited to—

"(1) high terrain modeling;

"(2) research on the health effects resulting from emissions of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides;

"(3) regional tracer studies to identify source receptor relationships in the continental United States, Mexico, and Canada;

"(4) research on the impacts of emissions of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides and their transformation products on visibility and air quality related values in the continental United States, with particular emphasis on such impacts as they affect national parks and high mountain areas of the western United States;

"(5) the identification of sulfate and nitrate sensitive geographic areas in the continental United States; and

"(6) the identification of the causes of aquatic, terrestrial, and materials air pollution damage in the United States, including an examination of the relative role of emissions of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, hydrocarbons, and their transformation products, individually and in combination, and the role of natural stress factors and other potential causes of such damage.

"(b) The Administrator shall conduct a study of air pollution problems associated with the long-range transport of pollutants in the portions of the continental United States not within the region. The study shall give particular attention to examining, within such portions, the possibility of damage from acid deposition to health and the environment in high mountain areas in the western United States, and to national parks, wilderness areas, and national monuments. The study shall determine the causes and consequences of such potential or actual damage, and make recommendations as to means to prevent or control such damage. Each Federal agency responsible for administering Federal lands is directed to make available to the Administrator, at his or her request, such personnel, resources, and equipment as are necessary to collect the data required by the Administrator concerning the natural and cultural resources of these areas which will allow the Administrator to form an adequate scientific basis for estimating the effects of long distance pollutant transport, particularly that of acid precursors, on these areas. To the extent possible, the Administrator shall design and implement this study to complement the research program authorized in subsection (a).

"(c) The accelerated research program shall expand on the research being conducted pursuant to sections 701 through 706, section 711, and section 712 of the Acid Precipitation Act of 1980 (Public Law 96–294). The authorization for appropriations for the accelerated research program under subsection (d) is intended to supplement and not to replace funds authorized and appropriated pursuant to such Act and subsequent laws.

"(d) To implement the accelerated research program, there are authorized to be appropriated not in excess of $25,000,000 for each fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1986, and ending before October 1, 1990. The Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration shall submit to Congress a comprehensive report on the accelerated research program by no later than January 1, 1990.

"(e) The accelerated research program shall be completed no later than January 1, 1990.

"(f)(1) An intensive evaluation of the results of the accelerated research program required under this section, and to the extent practicable, an evaluation of the effects of the reductions in emissions under the first phase of the program under section 183(b), shall be conducted by the Administrator during a period beginning no later than January 1, 1990, and ending no later than July 1, 1991.

"(2) To carry out the evaluations required under paragraph (1) of this subsection, there are authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 for each of the fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1989, and ending before October 1, 1991.

"REVIEW OF PHASE II REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 185. (a) Taking into consideration the research conducted under section 184, other available research, and the evaluation conducted pursuant to section 184(f), the Administrator may recommend to Congress no later than July 1, 1991, that changes should be made in the phase II sulfur dioxide requirements and the nitrogen oxide requirements of section 183 of this part.

"(b) Pursuant to subsection (a), the Administrator is authorized to recommend changes in phase II of the program only in the following respects on the basis of findings made pursuant to subsection (c):

"(1) Requiring States which were not included in the region in the first phase of the program to comply with the phase II sulfur dioxide emission reduction requirements of section 183(c).

"(2) Exempting States in the region from the phase II sulfur dioxide requirements of section 183(c).

"(3) Increasing the individual State annual average sulfur dioxide emission rate required for States in the region, or the individual State maximum aggregate emission ceiling required, if applicable.

"(4) Decreasing the individual State annual average sulfur dioxide emission rate required for States in the region, or the individual State maximum aggregate emission ceiling required, if applicable.

"(5) Requiring States which are not in the region to comply with the nitrogen oxide emission reduction requirement of section 183(d).

"(6) Exempting States which are in the region from complying with the nitrogen oxide emission reduction requirement of section 183(d).

"(7) Increasing the individual State annual nitrogen oxide emission reduction requirement of section 183(d) for States in the region.

"(8) Decreasing the individual State annual nitrogen oxide reduction requirement of section 183(d) for States in the region.

"(c)(1) The Administrator shall not recommend to the Congress that a State in the region be exempt, pursuant to subsection (b)(2), from the requirements of section 183(c) or that an individual State's required annual emission rate of sulfur dioxide or required maximum aggregate emission ceiling of sulfur dioxide be increased in phase II of the program, pursuant to subsection (b)(3), unless the Administrator finds and reports to Congress that emissions of sulfur dioxide originating in that State are not causing damage, and are not reasonable anticipated to cause damage, to areas sensitive to sulfate deposition (including but not limited to aquatic and terrestrial resources) identified by the research program under section 184.

"(2) The Administrator shall not recommend to Congress that a State outside the region comply, pursuant to subsection (b)(1), with the requirements of section 183(c) or decrease an individual State's required annual average emission rate of sulfur dioxide or required maximum aggregate emission ceiling of sulfur dioxide, if applicable, in phase II of the program pursuant to subsection (b)(4), unless the Administrator finds and reports to Congress that emissions of sulfur dioxide are causing, or are reasonably anticipated to cause, damage to areas sensitive to sulfate deposition (including but not limited to aquatic and terrestrial resources) identified by the research program under section 184 which will not be adequately mitigated by full compliance with the annual average sulfur dioxide emission rates required under section 183.

"(3) The Administrator shall not recommend to Congress that States outside the region comply, pursuant to subsection (b)(5), with the requirements of section 183(d) or recommend an increase in an individual State's nitrogen oxide emission reduction requirement pursuant to subsection (b)(7), unless the Administrator finds and reports to Congress that emissions of nitrogen oxide originating in that State are causing, or are reasonably anticipated to cause, damage to areas sensitive to nitrate deposition or ozone identified by the research program under section 184 which will not be adequately mitigated by full compliance with the annual average nitrogen oxide emission reductions required under section 183(d).

"(4) The Administrator shall not recommend to Congress to exempt a State in the region, pursuant to subsection (b)(6), from the requirements of section 183(d) or to decrease an individual State's annual nitrogen oxide emission reduction requirement, pursuant to subsection (b)(7), unless the Administrator finds and reports to Congress that emissions of nitrogen oxide originating in that State are not causing damage, and are not reasonably anticipated to cause damage, to areas sensitive to nitrate deposition or ozone (including but not limited to aquatic and terrestrial resources) identified by the research program under section 184.

"(d) The recommendations of the Administrator for changes in the requirements of sections 183 (c) and (d), made pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, shall not take effect unless the Congress enacts into law legislation before January 1, 1993, providing that such recommendations shall take effect.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO STATE PLANS

"SEC. 186. (a) The Governors of any two or more States within the region may by agreement reallot among agreeing States the reductions required under section 183 if the total aggregate tonnage emissions reduction equals the total that would otherwise be achieved under section 183.

"(b) Revisions to measures to achieve the emission reductions required by this part may be submitted to the Administrator by the Governor of each State in the region at any time.

"(c) If the Congress enacts into law changes to phase II requirements, the Governor of each State shall submit revised measures to achieve emission reductions to the Administrator within 270 days following the date of the enactment into law of such changes, or by September 1, 1993, whichever first occurs; except that, if Congress, by law, increases a State's phase II sulfur dioxide average emission rate, decreases its aggregate sulfur dioxide emission ceiling (if applicable), or decreases its nitrogen oxide reduction requirement, the Governor of that State may elect not to submit revisions to measures submitted previously pursuant to section 183.

"(d) Review and approval of measures submitted under this part shall be as provided in section 110(a)(3). The Administrator shall approve within four months measures submitted by the Governor of a State under sections 183 and 186 if, taking into consideration the comments of Governors of other States in such region, the Administrator finds that such measures—

"(1) contain enforceable requirements for continuous emission reduction, or alternate measures permitted under section 187;

"(2) contain requirements for monitoring by the source and enforcement agencies, including but not limited to, the installation of continuous emission monitors by all fossil fuel-fired electric utility steam generating units, to assure that the emission limitations are being met;

"(3) are adequate to achieve the sulfur dioxide emissions rate and nitrogen oxide emissions reduction required by this part within the time period specified by section 183; and

"(4) contain requirements for the establishment of an actual State sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions baseline and a baseline capacity factor for each electric steam generating unit in the State.

"(e)(1) The enforceable measures adopted under this section shall include schedules for compliance which specify actions to be performed leading toward final compliance and increments of progress to be achieved by dates in advance of the dates by which the State requires each particular source to comply with the emission limitation necessary to attain the reductions in each phase for such State under section 183. The State in adopting such measures and the Administrator in reviewing such measures shall stage or phase such compliance dates so that to the maximum extent practicable the largest amount of emissions reductions occurs in the early years of each phase.

"(f) Each emission limitation in effect under this part and each requirement of a State plan approved or promulgated by the Administrator under this part shall be treated for purposes of sections 113, 114, 116, 120, and 304 as a requirement of an applicable implementation plan.

"(g)(1) The Administrator may commence a civil action for permanent or temporary injunction, or may assess a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 per day of violation, or both, on any person who violates any requirement of a State plan, regulation, or measure promulgated under this part. Such civil penalty shall be assessed by the Administrator by an order made on the record after opportunity for a hearing. In connection with any proceeding under this section the presiding officer may issue subpoenas for the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of papers, books, documents, and records.

"(2) In determining the amount of a civil penalty, the Administrator shall take into account the gravity of the violation, the size of the violator's business, the violator's history of compliance, action taken to remedy the violation, and the effect of the penalty on the violator's ability to continue in business.

"MAJOR STATIONARY SOURCE SULFUR DIOXIDE REDUCTION REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 187. (a) In any State in the region which has not in accordance with section 183 adopted measures to achieve the reduction required by such section within 30 months after the date of the enactment of this part or which has not had such measures approved by the Administrator under section 186(d) within 42 months after the date of the enactment of this part, each fossil-fuel fired steam generating unit which is a major stationary source which is not subject to section 111(a) shall comply with an emission limitation of 2.0 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million Btu of heat input on an annual average by January 1, 1992, and an emission limitation of 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million Btu of heat input on an annual average by January 1, 1997.

"(b) The owner or operator of each such facility shall submit to the Administrator a plan and schedule of compliance for achieving such emission limitation or equivalent emission reduction in accordance with section 187, not later than three years after the date of the enactment of this part or six months after the date on which such owner or operator becomes subject to such emission limitation, whichever is later. The Administrator shall approve such plan and schedule for compliance if it—

"(1) contains enforceable requirements for continuous emission reduction or alternate measures permitted under section 186;

"(2) contains requirements for monitoring by the source and enforcement agencies, including but not limited to the installation of continuous emission monitors by all fossil fuel fired electric utility steam generating units, to assure that the emission limitations are being met;

"(3) is adequate to achieve the sulfur dioxide emissions rate and nitrogen oxide emissions reduction required by this part within the time period specified by section 183; and

"(4) provides for the establishment of an actual sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions baseline for each such source and a baseline capacity factor for each electric steam generating unit owned or operated by said owner or operator.

"(c) Failure of such owner or operator to submit such approvable plan and schedule within the time provided in this section, failure to comply with the plan and schedule of compliance, or failure to achieve the emission limitations required by this section at the earliest practicable date, but no later than March 1, 1995, shall be violations of emission limitations for the purposes of sections 113, 120, and 304.

"ALTERNATIVE PROGRAMS FOR ENFORCEABLE EMISSION REDUCTIONS

"SEC. 188. For the purposes of maintaining the limitation on emissions required by section 183, or attaining emission reductions required by section 183, 186, or 187, the following methods or programs for net emission reduction may be used, in addition to enforceable continuous emission reduction measures by a State or the owner or operator of a source, if emission limitations under such methods or programs, are enforceable by the Federal Government, States other than those in which the emissions occur, and citizens under section 304—

"(1) least emissions dispatch to meet electric generating demand at existing generating facilities;

"(2) retirement of major stationary sources at an earlier date than provided in schedules on file with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, the Internal Revenue Service, or State utility regulatory agencies;

"(3) investments in the conservation of electricity, which are likely to contribute to reductions in emissions;

"(4) precombustion cleaning of fuels;

"(5) fuel substitution; and

"(6) trading of emission reduction requirements and actual reductions on a State or regional basis, where the total aggregate tonnage emissions reduction is no less than the total that would be achieved under section 183 absent such trading. Trading of reduction requirements and of actual reductions shall be limited to situations where actual reductions of emissions occur as a result of fuel substitution, enforceable continuous emission reduction techniques, precombustion cleaning of fuels, or plant retirement. The States and the Administrator are authorized to establish emission reduction banks or brokerage institutions to facilitate such trading, and shall consider emissions and capacity factor baselines established under section 186(d)(4) of this Act as well as the actual monitored emissions and capacity factors achieved by sources when implementing such trading.".

SMELTERS

SEC. 3. Section 119(c)(2) of the Clean Air Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "Each primary nonferrous smelter which has applied for, or been granted, a second order under this section with respect to an emission limitation or standard for sulfur oxides under the applicable implementation plan shall be in compliance with such limitation or standard by January 2, 1988. No order under section 113 and no action under any authority contained in this Act or in any other provision of law (including any State implementation plan) and no order of any court shall permit any extension or delay of the effective date of such compliance beyond January 2, 1988. Within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this sentence, the Administrator shall complete action on all applications for an order under this section which are pending on such date. Within 60 days after the date of the enactment of this sentence, the Administrator shall amend each order in effect on such date under this section to require final compliance by the primary nonferrous smelter before January 2, 1988, with the emission limitations and standards for sulfur oxides under the applicable implementation plan.".

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

SEC. 4. (a) The Congress expresses its concern and sense of urgency regarding the ongoing and prospective environmental impacts of transboundary air pollution between the United States and Mexico, particularly from existing and future point sources of sulfur dioxide in both countries. The Congress finds that the progress of the United States in negotiating an Annex concerning transboundary air pollution to the August 4, 1983, United States-Mexico Border Environmental Agreement has been unsatisfactory and therefore directs the Secretary of State and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to, with all due dispatch, conclude with the Government of Mexico an Annex concerning transboundary air pollution to the 1983 Border Environmental Agreement. All feasible efforts shall be made to conclude a final version of said Annex as soon as possible and in no case later than 3 months after enactment of this section.

(b)(1) In negotiating the Annex referred to in subsection (a), the Secretary shall give special emphasis to ensuring that an agreement is concluded that will ensure that the Nacozari smelter in Mexico will meet pollution control standards that are at least as stringent as new source performance standards under the Clean Air Act (40 CFR Part 60, subpart p), preferably before startup of that smelter but in no case later than January 1, 1988.

(2) In negotiating such Annex the Secretary shall ensure that an agreement is concluded that will ensure that the Cananea smelter in Mexico will—

(A) at a minimum, achieve a level of pollution control for any increased emissions before any proposed expansion that is at least as stringent as new source performance standards under the Clean Air Act (40 CFR Part 60, subpart p); and

(B) if technically feasible, achieve that level of pollution control for the entire source before any expansion.

(3) In negotiating such Annex the Secretary shall ensure that an agreement is concluded for a mutually acceptable arrangement for monitoring, inspection, and enforcement of pollution control standards for copper smelters in both countries in the air quality control region (within 100 kilometers in each direction from the border) encompassing the copper smelters at Douglas, Arizona; Nacozari, Sonora; and Cananea, Sonora.

(4) In negotiating such Annex the Secretary shall promote a final version that in its other provisions is in no case less stringent in terms of absolute emissions and ambient air quality standards, and in the schedule for coming into force of such standards, than set out in the July 18, 1985, joint communique of the national coordinators of the 1983 Border Agreement.

(c) The Secretary of State and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall submit a report to Congress no later than 6 months after enactment of this section, on their implementation of subsections (a) and (b) of this section.

(d) The Environmental Protection Agency shall perform atmospheric field experiments to determine the effects of emissions of sulfur dioxide from the Nacozari smelter in Mexico, before and after implementation of pollution controls, on concentrations of oxides of sulfur and deposition thereof in the States of Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming. The experiments shall place particular emphasis on the effects of the smelter, before and after implementation of pollution controls, on acid rain and visibility in the above-mentioned States.

(e) The Secretary of State, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall establish a duly constituted international agency, or make use of an already constituted international agency to prepare and report on the effects of transboundary air pollution originating from copper smelters on public health and welfare in the United States and in Mexico. The study and report shall address, to the extent available data permit, the magnitude and effects of transborder pollution by sulfur dioxide, including pollution expected from further industrial expansion. The report shall make a finding as to whether such transborder pollution by sulfur dioxide originating from copper smelters may reasonably be expected to endanger public health and welfare in the territories of the United States and in Mexico and shall make recommendations for prevention or elimination of such endangerments as may be documented in the report.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the new acid rain control bill being introduced by my colleague from Wisconsin, Senator PROXMIRE, and by my colleague from New Hampshire, Senator HUMPHREY. I commend these two distinguished gentleman for their leadership on this urgent issue.

As a supporter of other legislation to address the acid rain problem, I want to reiterate my willingness to back any reasonable proposal to address this problem.

I consider the Proxmire-Humphrey acid rain bill to be a major step toward a realistic solution. Without effective controls, we will continue to see costly destruction of our irreplaceable resources.

This bill is similar to the approach proposed by Congressman WAXMAN in the House of Representatives. As we all know, Congressman WAXMAN's bill has received widespread support from House Members as well as from the environmental community.

Our goal is to reduce the potential adverse effects caused by ambient concentrations of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide, including the products of atmospheric transformation of pollutants.

Under the Proxmire-Humphrey bill, these goals will be achieved in a manner which permits State flexibility in conjunction with Federal oversight; cost-effective emission-reduction techniques; and specified acid-deposition impact regions. The bill offers a practical, two-phased transition of energy-producing facilities rather than an immediate cessation.

Instead of placing sulfur dioxide emission restrictions on each plant regardless of size, this new proposal provides for a more flexible aggregate emission standard. Such latitude would result in the same emission output, but would provide a reasonable method of achieving the necessary reduction.

I am pleased that this proposal also recognizes the need for a truly federalist approach by allowing for full interstate and intrastate trading between utility and nonutility stationary sources. It also permits the States free choice to implement individual emission reduction strategies. In both instances, the same aggregate reduction would be achieved, but in a more reasonable manner.

This new Proxmire-Humphrey acid rain control bill includes stiff fines and, for the first time, calls for the installation of continuous emissions monitors on smokestacks.

The pragmatic theme of this bill is ultimately revealed in its cost evaluations. In a comparison of annual costs of acid rain control bills, the new Proxmire-Humphrey acid rain control bill will amount to less than half of previous versions, and only cost about a third as much in 20 years.

Mr. President, I cosponsor this proposal because it is reasonable and fair. I believe it has a real chance of attracting the coalition necessary for passage, and I think this is something we have to be realistic about. The acid rain problem is too important for us to clash on egos or pride of authorship. We need to reduce the emissions responsible for the problem, and we need to do it now.

Behind these numbers and provisions is the more tangible proof of our deteriorating ecosystem. Those trees damaged thus far by acid rain will not bloom, nor will the affected lakes bear the life which so enhances the quality of living in New York State and elsewhere. We must act immediately and effectively. The Proxmire-Humphrey acid rain control bill has my support. I continue to stand ready to support any reasonable compromise to reduce these emissions effectively and expeditiously.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, for years, many in this body have been frustrated by the continued inaction on the part of the Federal Government with regard to the problem of acid rain. Others have maintained that further research is necessary to ensure the enactment of effective legislation regarding this matter. I believe acid rain is causing serious environmental damage in North America, and that the United States, Canada, and Mexico each must do their fair share in controlling acid rain throughout the continent.

Unfortunately, this bill does not cover the major concern of my State. While it is expected that Canada and Mexico will take appropriate action to reduce emissions, they should also recognize extra costs of producing electricity in achieving this goal.

I am pleased to join my distinguished colleagues, Senators PROXMIRE and HUMPHREY, in introducing new acid rain legislation that may be the delicate compromise which breaks the congressional deadlock which has prevented the passage of acid rain control legislation in this country. This bill offers the most viable and cost-effective plan offered to date accompanied by a valuable research program.

The bill is divided into two phases of 6 and 5 years respectively with a research program to be conducted with the first phase to evaluate the requirements of the next. The plan involves the 31-State region east of the Mississippi River, and sets the emissions reductions for stationary sources at an annual statewide average rate of 2.0 lbs per MMBtu in the first phase, and 1.2 lbs per MMBtu in the second phase. In order to achieve the required emissions standards, States will be free to choose their own reduction strategies.

By covering only those States east of the Mississippi, western States, like North Dakota, which have already spent hundreds of millions of dollars for clean air controls, will be able to continue their operations without further costs. Since these States will be required to reduce their SO_2 emissions by 1–3 percent, it is unfair to ask them to bear a greater burden.

In addition, by dividing the reductions into two phases, utilities and other pollutors can use cheaper controls such as coal washing and fuel switching during the first phase while preparing for perhaps more expensive controls in the second. This flexible approach is the key to this new legislation.

This bill also offers an effective plan to ensure the reduction of nitrogen oxides form stationary sources, believed to play a serious role in the formation of acid rain. In addition, the bill requires continued compliance monitoring on all coal-fired powerplants, and establishes an intensive research program to study the health effects of SO_2 and NO_x emissions and to develop innovative clean coal technologies.

This is sound acid rain control legislation. While other bills provide no alternative to the implementation of expensive stack scrubbers, this legislation stimulates the development of new cheaper technologies.

We must act now to prevent further damage of our natural environment caused by acid rain, but at the same time we must enact the most cost-effective and flexible approach available. This legislation is an innovative approach which deserves the support of the Senate.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator PROXMIRE and others in introducing an amended version of our acid rain control bill, originally introduced at the beginning of the 99th Congress. I believe that this bill is an improvement over our original legislation and, as such, an effective vehicle to reduce and control acidic deposition.

Little progress has been made on acid rain control legislation within the last two Congresses. However, recent action in the House of Representatives offers us some encouragement. The House is currently marking up H.R. 4567, a bill which is enjoying widespread bipartisan support. The Proxmire-Humphrey bill, based on recommendations made by the National Governors Association, has been amended to conform to the House bill and to capitalize on past experience and new developments to reach a feasible, cost-effective solution to this critical environmental problem.

The bill takes a two-phase approach to acid rain control and mandates new standards for an acid rain impact region consisting of 31 States. By January 1, 1992, annual Statewide average rate of emissions for sulfur dioxide shall not exceed 2.0 pounds per million Btu of heat input. By January 1, 1997, annual statewide average rate of emissions for sulfur dioxide shall not exceed 1.2 pounds per million Btu of heat input. These emissions standards translate into a yearly emissions reduction of approximately 10 million tons of sulfur dioxide. In addition, all sources of nitrogen oxide must meet the new source performance standard annual emission rate of 0.6 pounds of nitrogen oxides per million Btu's of heat input by January 1, 1997. Most plants can meet this standard by using low nitrogen oxide burners.

The new Proxmire-Humphrey bills would accelerate and refocus acid rain research and allow for an alteration of the provisions laid out in this bill if, at the conclusion of the first phase, new research leads to this determination. After taking into consideration the research conducted under the bill and other available research, the Administrator of the Environment Protection Agency may recommend to Congress that changes be made in the emissions requirements for sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide. the Administrator's recommendations must be made by July 1, 1991, and will not take effect unless the Congress enacts legislation to impose the recommended changes by January 1, 1983.

The bill would require that all fossil fuel-fired plants install continuous emissions monitors on stacks. This provision is vital for an accurate reading of emission baselines, chemical composition and emission reduction rates.

Automobiles and other mobile sources of air pollutants contribute significantly to the percentage of nitrogen oxide and other chemicals in our air. The mobile source emissions provision contained in our bill is a good first step toward combating the problems caused by the emission of excessive amounts of nitrogen oxide. I believe that mobile source controls should be further examined and considered to be an important part of any acid rain control program.

The relative flexibility incorporated into the bill being introduced today is one of its great strengths. While establishing firm goals for emissions reduction, the bill allows for a reduction strategy that is cost effective. Our bill would allow both inter- and intra-state trading and would not mandate the use of a specific emissions reduction technology. This means that States may develop the most cost-effective method for dealing with the problems and circumstances which are unique to their State or area. The flexibility allowed within this bill will significantly decrease the cost of emission reductions. Other acid rain control bills with more stringent and inflexible standards will probably lead to excessive use of scrubbers and exorbitant cost increases.

It is a well-documented fact that acid rain is killing our lakes and rivers. The 1986 report by the National Research Council, "Acid Deposition: Long-Term Trends," concludes that "there is a cause-and-effect relationship between SO_2 emissions and stream sulfate fluxes." The report documents a causal link between sulfur dioxide emissions levels and reduced visibility and also states that, "The data that are available indicate that fish populations decline concurrently with acidification." Scientists testifying before the Environment and Public Works Committee stated that acid deposition is eroding our buildings, our monuments, and other manmade materials. Furthermore, scientists have linked an increase in acidic deposition with epidemiological effects and forest growth decline. The red spruce and other trees throughout the forests of the world are dying at an alarming and an increasing rate. The forests of the Appalachian Mountains are riddled with dead and damaged trees. In West Germany, it has been determined that this forest dieback or "waldsterben" is affecting up to 50 percent of the trees.

I have no doubt that we must enact Federal legislation to reduce acid deposition. I am committed to that objective. Scientists have testified that "a causal relationship does link sulfur emissions produced by burning fossil fuels with the formation of acid rain." My assessment of the current state of science, technology and the environment leads me to wholeheartedly endorse the Proxmire-Humphrey bill as a positive and necessary step toward the control of the threat posed by acid rain.

Problems related to acidic deposition are not just national, but international. For this reason, I would encourage international cooperation and a 50-State Emissions Reduction Program. Several of the other acid rain bills which have been introduced this Congress set emission reduction standards for the entire United States. I believe that a national program will ultimately be necessary to ensure adequate acid rain control.

In conclusion, I appreciate the opportunity to work with Senator PROXMIRE and others on this legislation which is so critical to the health of our environment. I urge my colleagues to join this effort to reduce the effects of acid rain and to preserve our natural resources. I am hopeful that this bill will elicit support of the same magnitude and enthusiasm which similar legislation has received in the House. I am encouraged by the recent movement on this issue and look forward to working with the other members of the Environment and Public Works Committee on marking up an effective and feasible acid rain control bill.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A SENSE OF FAIRNESS

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, we all know that the Nation is reeling from huge budget deficits and we also know that the farm crisis worsens every day. Farmers are going bankrupt, being driven out of business. Our rural communities are drying up; our small businesses and our small towns are closing their doors. In my own State of Iowa we have lost an estimated 50,000 people in the last 4 or 5 years, almost 17,000 from our farms. And yet at a time when this is happening, when we have these huge budget deficits and we have farmers going broke, we see also something very odd happening—millions of taxpayers' dollars going to the largest farm corporations in America, one large cotton farm in the State of California getting almost $20 million in Farm Program payments.

This is unconscionable, Mr. President, and it is time that it come to a halt. Where is our sense of fairness? While our small farmers are going bankrupt, the Farmers Home Administration employs a cut-throat collection agency to go after the families that have been foreclosed on, that have lost everything, their farms, their homes, everything. Farmers Home hires a collection agency to hound them to try to get the last drop of blood out of the turnip, so to speak. Where is our sense of fairness and outrage that this would happen?

Mr. President, yesterday, I offered an amendment in the Appropriations Committee to try to put a halt to this. I had two surprises. First of all, that I offered the amendment yesterday which would have put a $500,000 limit on all Government payments and loans to any farmer in the United States. I never thought I would offer an amendment that would have an amount that high. But a lot of people said, well, you could not have it any lower than that. So I offered it with a $500,000 limit.

The second surprise I had is I never thought it would be defeated, but it was. The majority voted to say no, we could not limit these payments to $500,000.

I am sure we are going to hear all kinds of excuses about why we cannot, but I think the time has come to say for once and for all that we are going to limit these payments to these huge farmers. No more $20 million payments to large cotton farmers; that we are going to put a limit on it.

So it is this Senator's intention that when this legislation reaches the floor of the Senate, I will offer this amendment again and let the full Senate speak as to whether or not we really want to gear our programs to the smaller, family farms or whether or not we want to continue to give these huge payments to these large farm corporations.

In essence it is a vote on fairness and equity as to whether we are going to use the scarce resources we have to support those family farmers out there who are on the brink, ready to go under, ready to leave their farms or whether we are going to have these huge payments of $20 million to one cotton farmer in California. I believe that the Senate will vote to make this more fair and to make sure that we gear our programs to the smaller, family farms.

With this budget deficit, with the farm crisis, I believe it is the least we can do. I believe it will be a great step forward for harboring the scarce resources we have and sending a message to the farm families of America that indeed this Government is on the side of the family farmer and not just on the side of the large corporate farmers in this country.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR LEVIN

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] is recognized, under a previous order, for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the Chair.

THE TAX REFORM BILL

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the past 2 weeks have provided us with some interesting and disturbing insights into the potential consequences of the tax reform bill which the Senate will consider later this month. I would like to focus on these events and consequences as the basis for my fifth in a series of speeches on the tax reform bill.

First, there has been the discussion by both Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI of the House Ways and Means Committee and Chairman PACKWOOD of the Senate Finance Committee about the need for and the methods of raising revenues to reduce the budget deficit after the tax reform bill has been passed. Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI has ruled out a national sales tax or consumption tax and suggested perhaps increasing the new income tax rates. Chairman PACKWOOD has agreed that a consumption tax is not going any place, but also has ruled out an increase in the income tax rates any time soon. Both agreed that the deficit should be reduced.

Implicit in Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI's remarks is a suggestion that increased revenues are going to be needed to reduce the budget deficit. Implicit in both his and Chairman PACKWOOD's statements is a preview of the stalemate that is likely to develop in any attempt to raise revenues: consumption taxes are not on the table and there is disagreement over whether to consider raising income taxes.

But there is a way out of this dilemma. We can have tax reform. We can avoid increased consumption taxes, which would disproportionately affect middle- and low-income people. We do not have to increase tax rates. And, we can reduce the deficit. It requires only one thing. And it is really quite simple. All we have to do is to defeat the pending tax reform bill.

Once the pending tax reform bill is defeated, the revenues generated by a new and different tax reform bill—a bill which would have as its cornerstone a strengthened minimum tax on profitable corporations and wealthy individuals and which would close some tax loopholes—that new tax reform bill would provide the additional revenues necessary as part of a comprehensive and credible deficit reduction package.

Such a bill would get at, and respond to, what an aide to Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI has called "the fire in the belly behind this issue"—that is, the anger our people feel because some wealthy individuals and tens of thousands of profitable corporations have paid nothing in taxes.

But such a bill would not do other things:

It would not increase income taxes on middle- and low-income people and would not increase the sales taxes on the items which people, including middle- and low-income individuals, buy.

It would not increase taxes on a broad range of businesses, thereby minimizing the potential for the passing on of higher business taxes in the form of higher prices.

It would not raise income tax rates—from 28 percent to 29 percent, for example—thereby avoiding the prospect of making middle- and low-income taxpayers who lose under the current tax reform bill into bigger losers and avoiding the prospect of transforming modest winners into losers.

At the same time, the new tax reform legislation would produce enough revenue for comprehensive and credible deficit reduction.

However, once the Congress has approved of the pending conference report on the tax reform bill, the revenues from a strengthened minimum tax and from loophole closing will already have been soaked up to pay for the uneven tax cuts in this bill. Then, we will have to face the prospects of increased consumption taxes, or increased income tax rates, or unacceptable spending cuts, or inadequate deficit reduction.

These are all unpleasant choices. But they are unpleasant choices of our own making if we approve this tax reform bill.

Second, there was a debate on Wednesday during consideration of the Labor-HHS appropriation bill on whether we should cut funding for research programs on Alzheimer's disease and other dread diseases in order to adequately fund a program for math and science education. There was agreement on the great need for both programs. The tragedy of Alzheimer's disease is well known and greatly feared. The need to regain our competitive edge as a nation through greater math and science education also is well recognized. But there isn't the money to adequately fund both of them.

This is the kind of choice that we will face over and over again, this year and in future years, if we are to remain true to our deficit reduction goals but not rely on any additional revenues to share the burden of deficit reduction. And, again, once the revenues from loophole closing and from a minimum tax on profitable corporations and wealthy individuals have been soaked up to pay for uneven tax cuts in the quest for a revenue-neutral tax reform bill, then any new revenues will have to come from taxes which will particularly affect middle- and low-income individuals. The Congress thus will have engaged only in an elaborate charade of lowering taxes for some people on one day with one hand and of raising them the next day with a heavier hand. Do we really think that when the American public becomes aware of this that they will bestow accolades on us? Is it not more likely that once our constituents see the full picture of what we have done and of how it will affect their lives, they will not say "Thank you," but rather, "Say it ain't so—say it ain't so"?

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, as in legislative session, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond 11 a.m., with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

IT'S TIME TO PASS FIFRA

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise today as a member of the Senate Agriculture Committee, who has worked for many hours, and was the sponsor of several amendments, to ensure that the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act [FIFRA] would protect the consumer, while preserving the interests of agriculture and small business.

The Agriculture Committee reported out S. 2792 before the August recess. However, it is my understanding that it has not yet been scheduled for consideration on the Senate floor.

I have written to both the majority and minority leaders to urge that this legislation receive our expeditious consideration before the Senate is scheduled to recess in October.

The reauthorization of FIFRA is important to the State of Illinois and to the entire Nation. It is vital that this legislation come before the Senate at the earliest possible time.

At this point, I ask unanimous consent that the September 4, 1986, editorial, "Don't Zap Pesticide Bills," which appeared in the Chicago Sun-Times, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DON'T ZAP PESTICIDE BILLS

A few months ago we rejoiced at the landmark agreement struck between environmentalists and pesticde manufacturers for a tougher, more comprehensive law regulating pesticides.

But the agreement, embodied in bills awaiting approval by the House and Senate, now stands in danger of itself being fumigated by narrow interests.

The bills were the result of 18 months of careful and difficult negotiations between 40 environmental, consumer and labor groups, called the Campaign for Pesticide Reform, and the pesticide industry represented by the 92-member National Agricultural Chemical Association. Crafted with the assistance of the American Farm Bureau Federation, the legislation would give the public additional protection from potentially health-damaging chemicals by tightening procedures and requirements for testing, registering and labeling pesticides, by imposing better restrictions on pesticide use and by establishing standards for removing pesticides from the market if new evidence indicates they pose a health hazard.

Legislation embodying the agreement has been endorsed by both the Senate and House agriculture committees. However, lawmakers have only a few more weeks to approve the bills when they return to work next week. Failure to act in those few weeks will unravel the agreement and require all sides to start from scratch next year.

But that could be the scenario. Lawmakers have much to do before the projected (and unlikely) Oct. 3 adjournment date, from tax reform to budget-setting.

Furthermore, several members of Congress are threatening to hang amendments on the legislation. One would prevent states from imposing product registration standards more stringent than the federal government's—an amendment we would oppose because of the special needs of some crop-producing states. The manufacturers generally support the environmentalists in their strong opposition to this amendment. Another possible amendment centers on a complicated issue involving compensation owed to a pesticide's inventor.

The pesticide agreement is much too important to die, because of almost-certain floor fights over these special-interest amendments. The legislation should be approved by Congress without amendment and signed into law by President Reagan as soon as possible.

OLD DEFENDERS' DAY AND THE BICENTENNIAL OF THE ANNAPOLIS CONVENTION

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, it is the law in Maryland to observe September 12 as Old Defenders Day. For it was on this day in 1814 that the British Army was repulsed at the Battle of North Point near Baltimore City.

Events had not been going too well for the Americans in this second war of independence. Only weeks before, British forces had captured Washington, burned the Capitol and White House, and sent President James Madison scurrying to safety. American troops were defeated at the Battle of Bladensburg just several miles northeast of the Capitol. So it was with a great deal of justified concern that the citizens of Baltimore watched the advancing troops.

The British had planned to take Baltimore by a land and sea operation. On September 12, 4,000 British troops landed at North Point where they were met by 3,200 militiamen from Baltimore. The British commander, General Ross, was killed that day and American opposition was so stiff that the attack was not pressed.

The following day the battle for Fort McHenry began and on the 14th Marylander Francis Scott Key wrote the words to the "Star Spangled Banner." The British, having been defeated on land and at sea, withdrew and the battle for Baltimore was over.

This year Old Defenders' Day coincides with another historical occasion. Two hundred years ago on September 11, 1786, a hearty band of 12 patriots from five States gathered in Annapolis, MD. Their names, Hamilton and Madison, Randolph and Dickinson, are a rollcall of American history. Exasperated by rampant bickering over interstate trade and fishing and navigation rights, they convened to search for solutions to their differences. However, hindered by problems too big and attendance too small, the delegates adjourned 3 days later, with squabbles remaining and nothing resolved.

Well, they did agree on something. The Annapolis Convention, as it came to be known, recognized that the young Nation's troubles were rooted in the system it had constructed to govern itself, and they agreed that, for the United States to survive, fundamental changes had to be made in that system. So the delegates sent out a call to all 13 States, asking that each send representatives to Philadelphia in May 1787 to discuss weaknesses in the Articles of Confederation—and to do something about them. The defects of those loosely-binding articles, wrote the delegates in their report, "merit a deliberate and candid discussion * * * which will unite the sentiments and councils of all the States." As we know, the convention in Philadelphia was a success. And so was born in Annapolis 200 years ago the process that produced the U.S. Constitution.

As activities in the Annapolis of 1786 launched the constitutional process, so do activities in the Annapolis of 1986 kick off with a flourish the 200th anniversary celebration of our Constitution. For the next several days, Annapolis will be a festive whirlwind of galas, workshops, lectures, and cultural events. The new Maryland State Archives Building officially opens today, featuring an exhibit on Maryland and the Constitution which will include an original copy of the Constitution as signed in April 1788, by the members of Maryland's ratifying commission. Tomorrow, the National Commission on the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution will open a 2-day meeting in Annapolis. The Commission's activities will include participating in the ribbon cutting for the Constitution Resource Room in the Maryland State House and the dedication of a plaque marking the site of Mann's Tavern, where the delegates met.

As the weekend continues, the Ballet Theatre of Annapolis will present the ballet, "Annapolis Yesteryear," and the State bicentennial commission will sponsor a number of performances of "A More Perfect Union," a play about the framing of our Constitution. Music and art programs are scheduled at the city dock, including a demonstration of "transparency" art, a popular 18th century medium in which a large painting on transparent material is illuminated by candles at night to create a tremendously vivid effect. Fort George G. Meade plans to participate in the celebration with a full military review and a performance by the Golden Knights parachute team. The festivities will conclude on Sunday with an 18th century fair on the St. John's College campus, featuring costumed craftspeople and artisans, and colonial food and games galore.

I hope my colleagues and their families and friends will have the chance to visit Annapolis in the next few days and join in this celebration. It is a special opportunity to reflect on the legacy of the Annapolis Convention and to revel in the spirit of our enduring Constitution.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article by Leonard Rapport on the Annapolis Convention in this month's National Archives bulletin be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CLASSIC VOLUME ON CONSTITUTION REPRINTED BY NATIONAL ARCHIVES

Two hundred years ago this month there was a political meeting, the name of which is familiar to most Americans even though its significance is not. On September 11, 12, 13, and 14, 1786, 12 delegates met in what come to be known as the Annapolis Convention.

The Annapolis Convention was a way station on the historical road from the Revolution and the resultant Articles of Confederation to the convention that sat in Philadelphia in 1787 and produced the Constitution that replaced the Articles. Participants in these events wrote letters, kept diaries and notes and, in later years, reminisced; much of that documentation has survived. But not much more is known about what happened during the four days in the small capital of Maryland than what is contained in a single document, now in the National Archives. Even the meeting site in Annapolis is a matter of surmise.

The Articles of Confederation was a weak instrument. This was pleasing to some, displeasing to others. Increasingly displeasing to those wanting a stronger central government was the Congress's lack of authority to regulate commerce between the states and between the states and foreign nations. In January 1786, the Virginia legislature adopted a resolution appointing commissioners to "meet such Commissioners as may be appointed by the other States in the Union . . . to consider how far a uniform system in their commerical regulations may be necessary to their common interest and their permanent harmony; and to report to the several States such an act relative to this great object, as, when unanimously ratified by them, will enable the United States in Congress effectually to provide for the same." In February Governor Edmund Randolph sent the resolution to the other states with the proposal that the delegates meet that September in Annapolis.

Nine states appointed delegates. On September 11, with delegates from five states present, the convention was called to order. The delegates were, from New York, Alexander Hamilton and Egbert Benson; from New Jersey, Abraham Clark, William C. Houston, and James Schureman; from Pennsylvania, Tench Coxe; from Delaware, John Dickinson, George Read, and Richard Bassett; and from Virginia, Edmund Randolph, James Madison, and St. George Tucker.

On that first day the convention elected John Dickinson chairman, examined the credentials of the delegates, appointed a committee to prepare a report to the states, and adjourned until the 13th. On the 13th and 14th the commissioners considered the draft report and, after some amending, on the 14th unanimously adopted it.

The commissioners "did not conceive it advisable to proceed on the business of their mission, under the Circumstance of so partial and defective a representation." They proposed, rather, "the appointment of Commissioners, to meet at Philadelphia on the second Monday in May next, to take into consideration the situation of the United States, to devise such further provisions as shall appear to them necessary to render the constitution of the Federal Government adequate to the exigencies of the Union; and to report such an Act for that purpose to the United States in Congress Assembled, as when agreed to, by them, and afterwards confirmed by the Legislatures of every State will effectually provide for the same."

Copies of the report, signed only by John Dickinson as chairman, went to the Congress and to the executives of the 13 states. Apparently Dickinson retained the document, in the handwriting of Alexander Hamilton, that included the proceedings of the meeting and the report which all the delegates signed. He also retained the credentials of the delegates. In December 1803 Dickinson sent these documents to President Thomas Jefferson who added them to the Federal archives (which already included the copy of the report that Dickinson had sent to the Congress on September 14, 1786) The unique document that Dickinson sent 17 years after the event is now in the National Archives.

Though the delegates cut short their meeting because of the "partial and defective" representation, other delegations were at the time on their way to Annapolis. The Rhode Island delegation reached Philadelphia where they met the returning delegates from Annapolis. The Massachusetts delegation was even closer to Annapolis when they encountered the returning delegates. North Carolina delegate Hugh Williamson actually got to Annapolis but at some time after September 14th.

Once they received the report of the Annapolis Convention, some of the states did not wait for the Congress to act before selecting delegates for the May meeting in Philadelphia. On February 14, 1787, the Congress resolved "that on the second Monday in May next a convention of delegates who shall have been appointed by the several states be held at Philadelphia for the sole and express purpose of revising the Articles of Confederation and reporting to Congress and the several legislatures such alterations and provisions therein as shall when agreed to in Congress and confirmed by the states render the federal constitution adequate to the exigencies of government and the preservation of the Union."

After that all roads led to Philadelphia and the long hot summer of 1787.

(For a detailed discussion of the history and significance of the Annapolis Convention documents that Dickinson sent to Jefferson, see National Archives staff member Howard Wehmann's article, "The 'Lost' Records of the Annapolis Convention, 1786-1986" in the Spring 1986 issue of Manuscripts).—Leonard Rapport.

(Mr. Rapport recently completed a year's search for unpublished contemporary records of the Federal Convention of 1787. The project was funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities. The Yale University Press will publish these documents as an addendum to Max Farrand's Records of the Federal Convention of 1787. Mr. Rapport is a retired staff member of the National Archives.)

STUDY OF SALVADORAN DEPORTEES

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I cali to the attention of my colleagues a very important study that has recently been concluded which concerns pending legislation in the Senate Judiciary Committee (S. 377). This legislation would suspend the deportation of all Salvadorans who are presently in the United States in an illegal immigration status. The study is the most thorough and conclusive to date concerning Salvadorans who are returned—deported—to El Salvador, and it demonstrates that S. 377 is wholly and assuredly unnecessary—a most inappropriate and very misguided piece of legislation. Indeed, it is just that.

The Intergovernmental Committee on Migration [ICM] is a well-respected international refugee organization which has participated in many of the international refugee assistance efforts that the United States has been involved in over many years—including the resettlement of over 700,000 Indochinese refugees in the United States over the last 10 years. Representatives of this fine organization have been meeting Salvadoran deportees at the San Salvador Airport since December of 1984 and then assisting them in resettling in their native provinces. ICM has also been closely monitoring the security of those returned Salvadorans through mailed questionnaires and onsite visits to those persons who did not return a questionnaire.

From December 1, 1984 through December 31, 1985, ICM met 4,822 returnees at the San Salvador Airport and maintained or reestablished contact with 3,812 of these people—approximately 79 percent of the caseload. Of those people monitored, four deaths were recorded: two by natural causes, one in a bar fight over a disputed soccer game, and one in the process—as a participant—of an armed robbery. No deaths nor injuries were recorded due to the civil conflict in the country.

I believe that this is the most conclusive one of a series of very convincing reports that all Salvadorans in this country should not be able to enjoy the privileges of a blanket suspension of United States immigration laws. While some Salvadorans certainly do have legitimate fears of violence above and beyond that of the average Salvadoran national, these are special people who may apply for United States refugee status through our political asylum system. Charges that this system is slanted by the present administration are inaccurate and misleading, since any denied applicant may then appeal his denial to the independent Federal judiciary. In addition, the record of reversal of administrative asylum decisions at the Federal court level is minimal—suggesting that charges of political favoritism in the political asylum process are not without a remarkable degree of political distortion themselves. The groups that are the most strident and raucus are simply those who just don't like Ronald Reagan worth a damn * * * or his policies in Central America. That is their real bitch. He galls them period.

An article in the Washington Post, September 9, 1986, page A9, noted that,

Although intended only as a progress report on the relief organization's effort to assist returned Salvadorans, the ICM report provides the most systematic and direct evidence to date of the fate of the returned refugee.

As one might expect, proponents of the Sanctuary Movement and of S. 377 have already begun to salivate and react and have criticized the findings, but I suggest that all Members read the study and decide quite for themselves whether the most comprehensive information found to date should be ignored. You will find the hard evidence here to refute one of the most hyped up and ill-advised pieces of legislation in this Congress. You just don't give special status to 500,000 to 600,000 people who would not be injured or harassed in any way if they were returned to their country. Recall that the second largest flow of illegal, undocumented persons to our country are from El Salvador. They come here to work. They flee poverty. But they are not refugees. They should not have special privileges.

Mr. President, I ask that the ICM report be made part of the record.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ICM'S SALVADORAN RECEPTION AND COUNSELLING PROGRAM

On the basis of ICM's 34 years of experience in facilitating refugee resettlement, national migration, and repatriation all over the world on behalf of its member governments, ICM was requested by the governments of El Salvador and the U.S. to provide a reception and counselling service for Salvadorans returning to El Salvador.

ICM established in December 1984 reception facilities at the San Salvador airport and in its office in the city of San Salvador. Through these facilities, ICM also offers inland transportation, temporary accommodation and food for the first 2-3 days and limited material assistance as necessary. If individuals so wish, they are channeled to existing camps for displaced persons (run by church or government authorities), or they can travel to their homes or other destinations of their own choosing. If they express an interest in migrating to another country, ICM will refer them to the appropriate embassies.

After carrying out a thorough interview of the returnees in the ICM office to ascertain their needs and personal situation, ICM also gives them a series of questionnaires which they are asked to mail back to ICM over a four months' period, in order to report on their whereabouts and well-being and let ICM know if they face any specific problems where ICM may be of assistance. Subsequently, reminder letters are sent to those who do not return the questionnaire within the period indicated. All facilities offered and all communications with ICM are on a voluntary basis. Personal information supplied by the returnees is kept strictly confidential. According to needs in individual cases, the program includes cooperation with the competent medical authorities of El Salvador, voluntary agencies such as Project Hope, the local office of the International Committee of the Red Cross, and with other relevant Salvadoran authorities.

The ICM staff at the airport meet all flights arriving from the United States, as they are not previously informed on which flight returnees will arrive. Approximately 400 returnees are thus received by ICM each month. From 1 December 1984 to 31 December 1985, for example, ICM met 4,822 returnees at the airport, of whom 4,365 were offered the ICM assistance mentioned in the two previous paragraphs.

As regards the 4,822 persons who had returned between 1 December 1984 and 31 December 1985, ICM maintained or re-established contact with 3,812 returnees, i.e. 79 percent of the total caseload. These contacts were made in certain cases up to eight months after return. Thus, from the 4,822 returnees, 1,887 returned spontaneously the questionnaire they had received from ICM upon arrival, and 1,925 returnees were contacted in person, or through relatives, freinds and neighbors, in the course of three major surveys. These surveys were carried out, at the request of ICM, by a specialized polling agency which employed, on each occasion, over 40 interviewers and other specialists who travelled throughout the country for the purpose of tracing and interviewing the returnees or their relatives, whenever feasible. Of those who could not be located in this follow-up action, the large majority had given inaccurate or incomplete addresses during their first interview and were thus untraceable.

The contacts between ICM and the returnees after the return are entirely voluntary on the part of the returnee and the findings of the surveys and the questionnaire replies cannot therefore be considered as a scientific data base upon which to construct definitive analyses of situations of returnees after a given period of return. The information gained does, however, permit the recognition of general trends in the situation of those returnees who could be located.

Taking into consideration the limitations of the data collected, it is possible to make the following general observations on the situation of the returnees, through 31 December 1985:

During the first interviews at the ICM office the large majority of the returnees indicated as primary motives for their departure their poor economic situation in El Salvador and the wish to find employment abroad. This indication was confirmed through the survey and other follow-up action with the returnees.

Of the 4,822 returnees, 35 alleged that they had problems relating to their security in El Salvador. ICM referred 13 persons to the relevant embassies for consideration under their special humanitarian resettlement programs and ICM's on-going emigration program in El Salvador. Two of these cases have so far departed from El Salvador, seven are pending decision, and four were rejected by resettlement countries on the grounds that they were economic cases. Of those remaining, in nine cases it turned out that their problems were of an economic nature or had otherwise been solved, six had again left the country by their own means, one did not re-establish contact with ICM and in six other cases, which had been contacted through the third survey, ICM is endeavoring to locate the persons concerned and ascertain their specific needs.

Over the period from 1 December to 31 December 1985, it was reported to ICM that the death of four returnees had occurred, two from natural causes. The other two returnees had been killed, one in a dispute over a football game in a bar and the other in the process of robbing a store. In both the latter cases, specific investigations were made which corroborated these findings.

Two returnees were arrested upon arrival in San Salvador in connection with the Zona Rosa incident during which four US marines were killed. These two returnees were never interviewed by ICM.

Some 29 percent of those returnees located by ICM through relatives or friends had again left El Salvador for the United States or other countries. A number of returnees have gone through the ICM facilities more than once, and several have made the trip from the U.S. more than twice.

FORMER UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR TO MALAWI WESTON ADAMS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President I would like to take this opportunity to welcome the United States Ambassador to Malawi, Weston Adams, and his lovely family back home to their native South Carolina.

I had the pleasure of recommending his appointment to President Reagan and he was confirmed by the Senate on June 8, 1984. He served in the post from July 9, 1984, until September 3, 1986, when he resigned to return to private law practice in Columbia, SC.

I want to highly commend Ambassador Adams on his distinguished service to our country during his 2 years in Malawi. The State Department has praised him, stating that he had significantly improved relations with key officials in the Government of Malawi, in particular, advisors to the President of Malawi. This has not been easy in a country where political discussion is discouraged and the Government has been known to restrict contact between civil service and foreigners.

Ambassador Adams has established himself as an individual of great ability, not only as a diplomat, but as a lawyer, a businessman, and as a State legislator in South Carolina. His résumé is an impressive one.

Upon graduation from the University of South Carolina in 1960, Ambassador Adams entered the University Law School, earning his law degree in 1962. He was admitted to the South Carolina Bar in August 1962 and served as assistant staff judge advocate as a captain in the U.S. Air Force from 1963 until 1966.

He joined South Carolina National Bank as a trust officer in 1966.

In 1970 Ambassador Adams came to Washington as associate counsel to the House of Representatives' Select Committee on Crime.

Returning to Columbia in 1971, he practiced law until his appointment as Ambassador in 1984.

He served a term in the South Carolina House of Representatives from 1972-74 and was a member of the U.S. Presidential delegation to the inauguration of the President of the Dominican Republic in 1982 with the rank of Special Ambassador.

I would like to officially welcome him, his lovely wife, and his fine family back to the United States and their home State of South Carolina. The people of South Carolina are proud to have the Adamses back home.

In view of his honorable and dedicated service, I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to Ambassador Adams' latest performance evaluation as well as a recent article in the Malawi Daily Times, and ask unanimous consent that these be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PERFORMANCE EVALUATION FOR AMBASSADOR TO MALAWI WESTON ADAMS—APRIL 16, 1985-APRIL 15, 1986

During the rating period, Ambassador Adams has significantly improved relations with key officials in the government of Malawi, particularly advisors to the President of Malawi. For example, he maintained excellent rapport with the Secretary of the Office of the President and Cabinet and arranged an official visit to the United States for him. The Ambassador's regular offical and social contact with the Principal Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs has yielded valuable insight into the inner workings of the closed society of Malawi politics. This has not been easy in a country where political discussion is discouraged and the government sometimes restricts contact between civil servants and foreigners.

Ambassador Adams' political reporting included his assessment and analysis of the political hierarchy of Malawi, and in-depth evaluations of key issues such as the relationship between the Government of Malawi and insurgents in neighboring Mozambique.

At a time of unrest throughout southern Africa, the U.S. position on regional conflicts is often misunderstood. Ambassador Adams has seen to it that Malawians are familiar with U.S. policies and their benefits for the region in general and Malawi in particular. His efforts have helped to keep Malawi one of the few countries in Africa that consistantly supports our southern Africa policies; Malawi has the second highest coincidence in Africa of voting with the United States in the United Nations.

Economic performance is closely linked to political stability in Malawi, as elsewhere in Africa. Ambassador Adams has closely monitored economic developments and, under his leadership, USAID and international banking agencies have worked together to influence the government of Malawi to pursue sound economic and fiscal policies. Ambassador Adams' good working relationship with the AID Director has ensured that U.S. AID funds, which increased from $9 million in FY 85 to $25 million in FY 86, have been used with commendable efficiency and effectiveness. He met regularly with American and foreign national AID employees and took a personal role in strengthening relations between AID and the government of Malawi. One fruit of these efforts has been the up-grading of AID/Malawi to full Mission status and of the AID representative position to Mission Director.

Although the diplomatic community in Malawi is small, Ambassador Adams has excelled in cooperating with his colleagues. As one example, he initiated and encouraged establishment of joint U.S.—Israeli aid projects for Malawi by enlisting the active support of the Israeli Ambassador and instigating planning meetings between Israeli Embassy officials, the U.S. Embassy and the Government of Malawi.

Administratively, the Ambassador has involved himself in all aspects of the Embassy's operations, demonstrating his concern for all levels of his Mission. He has stressed the application of sound and consistent administrative procedures and personnel policies. He saw to it that Mission objectives were correctly understood and pursued. He supervised the orderly transfer of the branch office in the old capital of Blantyre and its employees to the Embassy in Lilongwe, leaving behind a reduced office facility to serve the Blantyre/Limbe community on a part-time basis.

Ambassador Adams has taken a close interest in all levels of Embassy operations. For example, he personally supervised revision of the emergency action plan, and took a particular interest in continuous improvement of security for the Embassy and other American facilities. His efforts, which included increased guards, screening of visitors and vehicles, and improved employee identification procedures, have been commended by the regional security officer.

In sum, as Ambassador to Malawi, Weston Adams has served his country well and contributed to the excellent relations which exist between the United States and Malawi.

CHESTER A. CROCKER,
Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, July 29, 1986.

[From the Malawi Daily Times, Aug. 7, 1986]

U.S. AMBASSADOR TO MALAWI—WESTON ADAMS

Malawi is most grateful for the economic and technical support the United States of America gives the country and hopes that the relations happily existing between the two countries will continue to grow from strength to strength, for the mutual benefit of the two countries, the Minister of Trade, Industry and Tourism, Mr. Wadson Deleza said in Lilongwe.

Mr. Deleza was speaking at a farewell luncheon in honour of the United States Ambassador to Malawi, Mr. Weston Adams and his wife which was held at Capital Hotel on Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Adams are returning to the United States this Friday after serving two years in the country.

The Minister noted that during Mr. Adams' term of office, the urgent needs of the Malawi Government were brought to the attention of the United States Government.

He said Malawi greatly appreciated the continued support the United States was rendering to this country in various fields of development, including agriculture, industry, education and health.

We are most grateful for the economic and technical support we have received and continue to receive from the United States of America," Mr. Deleza said, adding that Malawi was delighted that the United States had recently granted Malawi funds for upgrading the northern transport corridor.

Mr. Deleza said the route would offer Malawi an alternative passage to the sea and help solve transportation bottleneck which the country was experiencing at present.

On the problems of southern Africa, Mr. Deleza said Malawi shared a common policy with the United States, based on peaceful means of solving the problems.

TRIBUTE

I can only pay special, tribute for all this to the wise and dynamic leadership of this country which has created a climate of tranquillity and peace that has paved the way for political and economic viability as well as racial harmony," Mr. Deleza said.

Mr. Deleza commended the role Mrs. Adams played to enhance charity work in the country during her stay in Malawi. He said Mrs. Adams worked with vigor and determination to boost charity work in the country, through the association of the diplomatic women of which she was the chairperson.

Mr. Deleza then wished the out-going ambassador and his wife a safe journey home.

In reply, Mr. Adams said Malawi was most deserving to receive external aid, because the nation was hard working, committed to accomplishing it development projects, and made good use of the money from external donors.

He said that was why the United States Government had increased its aid to Malawi four to seven times the original quota, despite fierce competition for aid from other developing countries.

ASBESTOS HAZARD EMERGENCY RESPONSE ACT OF 1986

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I would like to add my support of the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act of 1986. This legislation, recently reported from the Committee on Environment and Public Works, represents a signal achievement in the protection of the public health. It is important to all of us because it involves the protection of our most valuable resource—our children. We have learned in recent years that there is no safe threshold of exposure to asbestos fibers. This legislation will help to ensure that exposure in the classrooms today does not lead to the tragedy of asbestosis and mesothelioma tomorrow.

The Environmental Protection Agency has already responded to the asbestos problem through its authorities under the Clean Air Act and the Toxic Substances Control Act. But we have all come to realize that technical guidance and training are an insufficient response to a critical national need.

As in other areas of environmental concern, there is always the possibility that in our desire to do the right thing, we might act hastily and less thoughtfully than we should. I am proud that this legislation, which was drafted with the active cooperation of the EPA, is a measured attempt to improve EPA's existing Asbestos-in-Schools Program, with three major components.

First, the bill requires that the Agency publish national standards for asbestos inspection, to help determine whether there are hazardous materials present in specific schools, and to determine whether abatement action will be required in specific schools.

Second, the bill calls for State accreditation of asbestos contractors to make certain that only competent and reliable persons undertake asbestos-related work.

Finally, the bill requires that the asbestos standards be followed. Those schools which have satisfactorily responded to asbestos problems under the pre-existing, voluntary EPA program are not covered in this legislation. But those which have not yet undertaken proper inspection, operation, and maintenance, or abatement activities will now be required to act in the interest of public health.

This legislation does not include any provision for an express or implied Federal cause of action in tort. In this environmental area, as in others, there are grave problems inherent in embarking into the uncharted waters of toxic torts before we have all the facts. After being assured that there is no express or implied Federal cause of action in tort included in this key legislation, I lent my support to its passage in committee.

Finally, I want to commend the able chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, BOB STAFFORD, for his fine leadership in getting this bill to the full Senate. It is my hope that the Senate, working in conference to forge a compromise with the well-considered House asbestos bill, can get a good bill to the President's desk before we recess in October.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

NOMINATION OF WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST TO BE CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the nomination of Justice Rehnquist.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William H. Rehnquist, of Virginia, to be Chief Justice of the United States.

The Senate resumed consideration of the nomination.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further debate on the nomination?

Mr. CRANSTON addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California is recognized.

(Mr. HECHT assumed the chair.)

REHNQUIST LACKS JUDICIAL TEMPERAMENT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I rise to speak in opposition to Senate confirmation of William Hubbs Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the United States.

I am convinced that Mr. Rehnquist does not possess the requisite judicial temperament to serve as the Nation's Chief Justice, or for that matter as Associate Justice.

Indeed, when Justice Rehnquist first was nominated by Richard Nixon, I reached the conclusion—along with 26 of my then-Senate colleagues that he did not qualify to be Associate Justice. Three Republicans were among those opposed to the nomination.

In 1971, I made my judgment after researching carefully the Rehnquist record and concluding it lacked evidence of a balanced, dispassionate approach to legal and policy questions.

I observed then that William Rehnquist apparently was an extraordinarily committed ideologue, who first forms conclusions, then reasons backward to justify them.

I found that Mr. Rehnquist used his considerable intellect to examine microscopically arguments presented which opposed his predetermined conclusion, but questioned only superficially the merits of arguments which supported his predispositions.

When President Reagan nominated Associate Justice Rehnquist for even higher office. I undertook to review carefully not only his judicial record of the last 15 years, but additional information which has surfaced about the prior years, to determine whether there was a basis on which to change my original judgment.

It is clear to me, having completed that review, that there is not.

Indeed, my original observations, regrettably, are strengthened.

SUPPORTER OF SEGREGATION

Particularly, Mr. President, I find that Mr. Rehnquist is an unrelenting supporter of segregation—a position so far from the temper of the times and from the attitudes that the American people believe proper in a Federal judge that it has been an important factor in the Senate's rejection of three Presidential nominees for the Supreme Court since 1930.

I find that this view of women's rights would find wider acceptance in a prior century, and that he is unwilling to remedy even obvious examples of sex-based discrimination for such reasons as administrative convenience.

Moreover, I find—as I did in 1971—that Mr. Rehnquist has consistently provided the narrowest possible interpretations to opinions and concepts that protect all individual rights and liberties, and the most sweeping interpretations to those opinions and concepts that sanction government restrictions on individual rights and liberties.

Mr. President, the essential bedrock on which our unique form of government rests is the supremacy, not of government, but of law.

The supremeacy of law in turn rests on the existence of an independent judiciary, free dominance by either the executive or legislative branches.

And to head that independent judicial branch, more than in any other Federal judicial position, we need an individual prepared to match deeds to the words carved in stone on the wall of the Supreme Court, "Equal Justice Under Law." Time after time, as a private citizen, as a public official, and as a justice of the Supreme Court, William Rehnquist's actions have shown that he does not support those words.

History taught the Founding Fathers—and should teach us—that the judiciary must be coequal with the other branches, and subservient only to the Constitution.

The independent judiciary is essential to guard the human freedom and rights that our constitutional system—more effectively than any other governmental system yet devised—was designed to protect.

Careful review of Justice Rehnquist's judicial opinions conclusively demonstrates that he rigidly, consistently, and virtually without exception, rejects the view that the Supreme Court has any special obligation to defend individual liberty from legislative or executive encroachment, and rejects the position, frequently expressed in the opinions of the Court, that the Bill of Rights as a whole, and the first amendment in particular, have a favored place in the constitutional scheme.

In this respect, Mr. Rehnquist is not a "strict constructionist" or a conservative, words often used to describe several members of the present Supreme Court.

Rather, Mr. President, he is an extreme ideologue, whose judicial philosophy is far beyond the mainstream, and is not shared in its entirety, or even in its central features, by any other person who now sits or who has served with him on the Supreme Court, including justices who often vote with him.

And very frequently—more than any other member of the Court—Justice Rehnquist has voted alone.

In my judgment, Mr. Rehnquist's unremitting record of ideological extremism makes him an inappropriate choice for the Federal bench. But certainly, it makes him an even more inappropriate choice for Chief Justice.

Ideological zeal and biased prejudgment of issues are the very antithesis of acceptable qualifications for the Federal bench.

The agenda of an ideological extremist, whether of the right or the left, can create a doctrinal conflict of interest fully as inappropriate for a Supreme Court Justice as a financial conflict of interest.

QUESTIONABLE ETHICS

In one case where this doctrinal conflict of interest was manifest, Laird v. Tatum, 408 U.S. 1 and 409 U.S. 824 (1972), Mr. Rehnquist declined to recuse himself, as judicial ethics and propriety seemed to require, and cast the deciding vote in a 5-4 Supreme Court decision reversing a Federal appellate decision reviewing a case challenging government policies which he had helped formulate as both participant and advocate.

Conceding that his [unreviewable] decision to sit was "debatable", and one with which "fair-minded judges might disagree", Justice Rehnquist explained that the prospect that his recusal in that case would result in Supreme Court affirmance of the Court of Appeals decision by an equally divided court propelled him to decide the case.

The notion that recusal is appropriate judicial conduct only when it doesn't matter to the decision "seems to turn the doctrine of recusal on its head", as one witness against this nomination told the Senate Judiciary Committee.

And, it demonstrates that William Rehnquist is a zealot, more committed to the outcome in a particular case than to a desire to serve fairness and justice, or, as importantly, the appearance of fairness and justice.

The main indication of ideological zeal is the inability to separate strongly held personal or political beliefs from the responsibilities of judicial decisionmaking.

Standard judicial ethics require not only the fact of impartiality, but its appearance, in order to maintain the confidence of the people in their judicial system.

The fact and appearance of impartiality is required of all judges, but is especially important for the Chief Justice of the United States.

There is another quality that the American people have a right to expect in the person that stands at the top of their judicial system.

That is unquestioned integrity.

But there are now serious questions about the integrity of William Rehnquist.

That he is loyal to his own philosophical agenda I do not doubt, for he has demonstrated that loyalty for over 35 years.

But it is also increasingly obvious that he is willing to cut corners with the truth to protect his ability to serve that agenda.

And, Mr. President, I speak of far more than merely a case of a suspiciously selective memory or an attempt to "stonewall" questions from the Judiciary Committee, though that pattern is also abundantly clear.

Even one apparent Rehnquist supporter on the committee has expressed regret that Justice Rehnquist was not "more forthcoming" in his appearances before the committee.

But I am particularly appalled that in one of several situations in which Mr. Rehnquist's more extreme views are documented, he has denied the views are his own, although they were written in a memorandum he admittedly authored.

He would have us believe in an instance of particular concern to me that these views belong to Associate Justice Robert H. Jackson, for whom Mr. Rehnquist was a law clerk.

Mr. President, I am now going to explain why that particular incident is of grave personal concern to me. Regrettably Justice Jackson died in 1954 and cannot testify to the facts.

The memorandum, written in 1952 by Mr. Rehnquist in the context of the pending Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, urges that the previous decision of the Supreme Court in Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537, is "right" and should be reaffirmed.

The Rehnquist attribution of these views to Justice Jackson was first made during Rehnquist's 1971 confirmation hearings, and repeated in the present hearings.

One colleague with whom I discussed this situation suggests that perhaps Justice Jackson solicited memoranda on both sides of the issue. Or one can imagine Justice Jackson saying to an importuning clerk, "Get me a memo." But these scenarios are not what Mr. Rehnquist has testified to. He has attributed these views to Justice Jackson, not to himself, not to theoretical advocacy.

The Plessy case had sustained the constitutionality of a Louisiana statute requiring separate—but, theoretically, "equal"—accommodations for "white and colored persons" on railroads. The law was challenged in respect to its application to trains engaged in interstate travel. The 1986 case initiated the "separate, but equal" doctrine, and stood for the proposition, among others, that "a law which requires the separation of the races in public conveyances is a reasonable exercise of the police power of the state."

The record is abundantly clear that Justice Jackson did not even accept the memorandum's recommendation, let alone start with the view that Plessy was "right".

Justice Jackson was one of the nine Supreme Court Justices who joined in the unanimous decision in Brown versus Board of Education, expressly rejecting the doctrine of Plessy versus Ferguson in education, and forecasting its total demise.

Nor did Justice Jackson participate reluctantly. On May 17, 1954, he left a hospital bed where he was recuperating from a heart attack to stand with the united Court announcing the Brown decision.

Moreover, the Brown decision did not reflect a changed position for Jackson.

As early as 1941, his first year on the Court, Jackson had written a concurring opinion declaring that race, creed or color is a neutral fact, "constitutionally an irrelevance," which under the 14th amendment could not be used by a State to restrict constitutionally protected rights, Edwards v. California, 314 U.S. 160, at 185.

In 1949, concurring in Railway Express v. New York, 336 U.S. 106, at 111, though Jackson urged restraint in using the due process clause to strike down a State or municipal statute, he commented:

> Invocation of the equal protection clause [of the 14th Amendment], on the other hand, does not disable any government body from dealing with the subject at hand. It merely means that the regulation must have a broader impact. I regard it as a salutary doctrine that cities, states and the Federal Government must exercise their powers so as not to discriminate between their inhabitants except upon some reasonable differentiation fairly related to the object of regulation. This equality is not merely abstract justice. The framers of the Constitution knew, and we should not forget today, that there is no more practical guaranty against arbitrary and unreasonable government than to require that the principles of law which officials would impose on a minority must be imposed generally.

So spoke Justice Jackson.

These and other opinions written by Justice Jackson totally discredit Rehnquist's testimony that Justice Jackson believed that Plessy versus Ferguson was "right." They also state the antithesis of Rehnquist's extremist view that a State statute must be upheld against constitutional attack under the 14th amendment unless it is "irrational."

Mrs. Elsie Douglas, Justice Jackson's long time secretary, has called Rehnquist's testimony "incredible on its face" and a "smear of a great man" in a letter to Senator KENNEDY.

SOME PERSONAL HISTORY

And it is. I want to bring a bit of history—personal history—to bear on this matter.

I knew Robert H. Jackson and worked with him on matters relating to discrimination and bigotry when he was Attorney General of the United States. I know, firsthand, that he could not have held the views attributed to him by Mr. Rehnquist. Later on, in 1945, Justice Jackson went to Nuremberg, Germany, to become chief U.S. prosecutor at the war crimes trials. It is beyond belief—absolutely beyond belief—to suggest that, after prosecuting Adolf Hitler's top associates who committed some of the most cruel acts of intolerance and brutality in human history, Justice Jackson returned to the Supreme Court to represent the views on race expressed in the Rehnquist memorandum. For Mr. Rehnquist to attribute such views to Justice Jackson, who gave him the opportunity to serve him on the Supreme Court, is shocking, to put it very, very mildly. I deem the charge a slander on the record of a great justice. It reflects not on Justice Jackson but on Justice Rehnquist.

I know firsthand of Justice Jackson's commitment to equal justice under law, and that to uphold racial segregation was as foreign to his judicial philosophy as it is consistent with everything we know about William Rehnquist.

Although there is other evidence of Mr. Rehnquist's lack of credibility, his shabby attempt to rewrite history and blacken the memory of Justice Robert Jackson in order to protect himself is, alone, in my judgment, disqualifying.

Ironically, as Merlo J. Pusey has reported, "as a Supreme Court Justice, Jackson showed independence, and argued that judges should try to keep their judgment free from personal opinion," another point on which he is at odds with his former clerk.

Some have suggested that this debate on confirmation is a partisan debate between Republicans and Democrats, and that the President is entitled to confirmation of his nomination because of his reelection victory in 1984.

But big election victories give the President no right to abrogate our constitutional protections or place an ideological extremist at the head of the Supreme Court.

Some have suggested that this is an ideological struggle between conservatives and liberals, with each side trying to control the makeup of the Supreme Court.

In my judgment, both of these viewpoints are wrong.

The Founding Fathers clearly intended to give the Senate the power and obligation to make its own independent judgment of whether confirmation of a Federal judicial nomination would be in the best interests of the Nation.

Judicial nominees are not part of the President's team. They serve for life, and will serve long after a succession of Presidents with new claims to a political mandate have been elected.

His electoral mandate gives President Reagan the right and power to send us this nomination, but it does not take away our right, power, and, indeed constitutional obligation, to withhold consent if the nominee is found wanting, as, in this case, I believe he is.

From the administration of President George Washington, when his nomination of Associate Justice John Rutledge to be Chief Justice was rejected by the Senate primarily for his views on the Jay Treaty to as recently as the Lyndon Johnson administration, when a Senate filibuster, led by some of the proponents of this nomination, prevented confirmation of Associate Justice Abe Fortas to be Chief Justice, the Senate has demonstrated its right and power to reject Supreme Court nominees whose views offended the temper of the times, when Senators believed those views would disserve the interests of the Nation.

The Chief Justice should personify evenhanded justice in the United States.

The Chief Justice must be able to meet the most exacting standards: dedication to the great principles of the Constitution he will swear to uphold; dedication to dispense equal justice under law, not just for the majority, but for all in our society; impeccable ethical judgment; unquestioned integrity.

□ 1120

It ill behooves us at this time in history to put into that hallowed seat a man who is a consistent foe of civil rights; a man who is insensitive to changing roles and rights of women in our society; an ideological extremist whose very zeal prevents detached judicial consideration and affects his ethical judgments; a man whose integrity is under serious question.

William Rehnquist does not meet the qualifications for Chief Justice of the United States.

I urge that his nomination be defeated.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to comment on some of the statements which were made here yesterday, including the statement of the Senator from California today.

We are all aware that many questions have been raised about this nomination which date back several decades. Not only do many of these alleged concerns predate Rehnquist's 1971 confirmation, but many relate to his clerkship in 1952. These allegations come under the heading of ancient history rather than under a category of fair questions concerning Mr. Justice Rehnquist's nomination.

To put this in context, my colleagues might be shocked to learn that there was not a Kennedy in the Senate in 1952. Most shocking of all, STROM THURMOND, as I said in committee, was still a misguided Democrat and had not yet embarked on his Senate career.

Imagine the Senate without STROM THURMOND and TED KENNEDY and you can imagine the relevance of these accounts.

The first bit of ancient history which is supposed to be relevant to this nomination is a memorandum written by Justice Rehnquist in 1952. That was 34 years ago. It was written by him in 1952 when he was serving as a law clerk to then Supreme Court Justice Robert Jackson.

The Senator from California has just referred to that memorandum.

Justice Rehnquist has explained Mr. Justice Jackson asked him to prepare this memorandum to present the point of view that the doctrine of Plessy versus Ferguson was correct. That is the testimony of Mr. Justice Rehnquist.

Therefore, in the memorandum entitled "A Random Thought on the Segregation Cases," it is not surprising to read that Plessy versus Ferguson was right and should be reaffirmed, as a memorandum written to present that point of view which the Justice had asked him to do.

After all, then clerk Rehnquist's assignment was to defend that proposition. That is done today on the Supreme Court. There are Justices who ask a more conservative law clerk to write a memorandum on a conservative issue and Justices who ask more liberal law clerks to write a memorandum on more liberal issues. That is necessary to express the viewpoint of the writer of the memorandum.

I think in fairness these were not Mr. Rehnquist's personal views. He said so. My colleagues cannot seem to agree with that because they want to defeat Mr. Justice Rehnquist.

They do not care about his 15 years of great service to this country. They do not care that he is the leading intellect on the U.S. Supreme Court. They do not care that he has the respect of all his colleagues. They do not care that he has the respect of the bar and bench across this country. They differ with him ideologically. Therefore, they are going to assume the worst in everything.

It seems to me if a Supreme Court Justice says those were not his views and he says that categorically, that ought to end it right there. But we hear these diatribes here on the floor, and we hear them in the committee, as to how it could not have been the viewpoint of Mr. Justice Jackson. It was not his viewpoint. Nobody disputes that. But it also was not then law clerk Rehnquist's at the time. He said that it was not.

Why can we not take his word for that? Why do we have to dredge up all that ancient history? Why do we have to put our own distorted approach to it? Why do we have to always resolve every ambiguity, and I do not think there is one here, against Mr. Justice Rehnquist?

There is only one answer. Ideologically, he does not fit the mold that so many of my colleagues have been used to over these last 30 or 40 years. That is what is wrong with the court system in our country. We have had basically one mold, a predominant position.

In the first place, my cursory review of his 15 years on the bench indicates that Justice Rehnquist has voted at least 34 times to sustain the most famous civil rights case of all time, Brown versus Board of Education.

When asked to decide the legal issues covered by the 1952 memo, Justice Rehnquist has consistently and without exception voted against the principles of Plessy versus Ferguson every time.

Yet we have Senators coming on the floor saying, "No, this cannot be right."

Justice Rehnquist's personal statements to the Judiciary Committee, it seems to me, have to be taken at face value. He feels Plessy is not consistent with the 14th amendment. That statement only embellishes his clear judicial record. We have a clear record here.

In addition, the only other living person, a self-admitted liberal, with the knowledge of the genesis of the 1952 segregation memo agrees that the memo was commissioned by Justice Jackson and that Justice Rehnquist believed even then that Plessy was wrongly decided.

What more do you need? We do not need a Senator, albeit a distinguished Senator from California, coming here and saying he knows Justice Jackson's views were different because he knew him personally. I know they are different. I do not need to know him personally.

On the other hand, how about giving the benefit of the doubt to knowing that Justice Rehnquist is not a liar? I think fairness, decency and dignity would lead everyone to conclude he is not a liar, that he told the truth, especially when the only other person who has any knowledge of this agrees with what he has said, and especially when his judicial record makes very clear what he believes.

Donald Cronson was Justice Rehnquist's coclerk in 1952. Mr. Cronson recalls that two memoranda were prepared for Mr. Justice Jackson, one for and one against overturning Plessy. He went on to say that he thought the "random thoughts" memo, though signed with Rehnquist's initials, was probably more his work than Clerk Rehnquist's work. Mr. Cronson, who probably knew Rehnquist's mind in 1952 on this subject better than anybody else, or at least certainly on that date, also told the New York Times in 1971 that "Both of us personally thought that Plessy was wrong."

We do not need to have somebody second-guessing this at this point when the record is so clear. It is ludicrous, like all of the charges against Mr. Justice Rehnquist.

This 34-year-old memo ought to never have become an issue in this proceeding. The facts are overwhelming that Clerk Rehnquist was preparing a paper to defend a proposition dictated by his employer and that Rehnquist did not then and does not now favor the policies of Plessy. If anything, this 34-year-old memo is indicative of Justice Jackson's struggle to ascertain the merits of the Brown case. Beyond that, it has little significance. Fifteen years on the Supreme Court has already made evident Mr. Rehnquist's abhorrence of the "separate but equal" doctrine.

Another memo was the subject of discussions in the Judiciary Committee hearings.

That memo likewise presents Justice Jackson's views and only shows the lengths some have gone to create issues about this nomination.

This memo, prepared in connection with the Terry versus Allen case, presents the views of three Justices: Justices Black and Frankfurter, and then under the heading "Your Views," the views of Justice Jackson, to whom the memo is written. Those clearly labeled views of Justice Jackson included the phrase, "It is about time the Court faced the fact that white people in the South don't like colored people."

□ 1130

Although some critics like to stop at that point, Justice Jackson's views continue to say, "The Constitution restrains them from effecting this dislike thru State action." With this additional clarification, it becomes apparent that Clerk Rehnquist understands the principle of the Brown case, that the Constitution bars discriminatory State actions. The memo continues to say that private discrimination, which Rehnquist characterizes as "ugly," is not barred by the Constitution. This last point is still the law, as is clearly established by the Court's holding in the Moose Lodge among others.

Thus, the intent of this memo is clear on its face. Clerk Rehnquist is stating Jackson's idea that the issue in this case is State action. The showing of discrimination is clear, the issue is whether the State has done the discriminating. That is the issue. If so, it is illegal. If not, the Constitution does not provide a remedy. Justice Jackson was correct on the law and his clerk was merely expressing those views to prepare his employer for a court conference. By the way, Justice Jackson's conference notes indicate that he followed this memo rather closely. It must have accurately reflected his views, regardless of what the distinguished Senator from California or any other critic of the Rehnquist nomination has to say about it.

Another piece of ancient history that is occasionally misconstrued is a 20-year-old letter written by Attorney Rehnquist in Phoenix, AZ. It was written in defense of the neighborhood school concept. It contains the phrase "we are no more dedicated to an integrated society than we are to a segregated society." Those who prefer to take things out of context stop at that point. That phrase, however, is only part of the sentence. The rest of the sentence reads:

> We are instead dedicated to a free society, in which each man is equal before the law, but in which each man is accorded a maximum amount of freedom of choice in his individual activities. The neighborhood school concept, which has served us well for countless years, is quite consistent with this principle.

The full quote indicates that the Justice did not support segregation, but instead endorsed a "free society" where "each man is equal before the law." This is a ringing endorsement of the fundamental principle of equality before the law. The letter proceeds to show that this concept of equality is furthered by a race-neutral assignment of students to neighborhood schools. On this principle, the Senate agrees. This body has voted numerous times in favor of the neighborhood school concept. Once again, when these so-called items of ancient history are presented in their unabridged version, the myths are revealed as inaccurate and the facts speak for themselves.

Mr. President, the efforts that have been put forth in some of these areas to malign and, I hate to say it but to smear, this man's reputation are really incredible.

LAIRD VERSUS TATUM

I will like to return briefly to the Laird versus Tatum question. This issue, like most of those we have heard presented on the Senate floor, probably does not deserve the time devoted to it. In fact, the weakness of the argument demonstrates the lengths to which some will go to find a flaw in Justice Rehnquist's distinguished record.

Yesterday, I went through the law that governed situations when judges would be required to recuse themselves, or refuse to participate in the decision of a case. A fair reading of that law leaves little doubt that Justice Rehnquist was justified in accepting the responsibility of deciding the Laird case.

Nonetheless my colleague from Massachusetts and a few others suggest that a further ethical consideration should have caused the Justice to refrain from accepting his judicial duties. In particular, my friend from Massachusetts suggests that Justice Rehnquist should have recused himself because he had "personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts." My colleague suggests that he had such a "personal knowledge" because he testified on the general subject before Senator Ervin's Constitutional Rights Subcommittee, a committee that I now chair.

I am now chairman of the subcommittee chaired by Senator Ervin in 1971. Last evening I reviewed the testimony given by Justice Rehnquist in 1971 to see if it showed a "personal knowledge" on the part of the Justice. To the contrary, I found at least four instances where Justice Rehnquist directly told Senator Ervin that he lacked personal knowledge of the evidentiary facts related to Army surveillance. In fact, Justice Rehnquist used those very words "personal knowledge" to clarify what he did not know. Let me rehearse some testimony from that hearing 15 years ago. Justice Rehnquist clarified:

> While it is not altogether clear to me, certainly not from personal knowledge . . . the extent to which the Army guidelines were actually carried out and practiced, it should be apparent that the data base used by internal security is much more restricted. . . .

Justice Rehnquist stated forthrightly in the very hearing we have heard so much about that he had no "personal knowledge" of the Army activities.

In that hearing, Justice Rehnquist said:

> As you might imagine, the Justice Department, in selecting a witness to respond to your inquiries, had to pick someone who did not have personal knowledge. in every field. So I can simply give you my understanding. . . .

He did not have personal knowledge. He said he did not. This is the second time Justice Rehnquist specifically stated that he had no personal knowledge about all the aspects of the hearings, and specifically, no personal knowledge about military surveillance.

Later in the hearing, Justice Rehnquist again states:

> I am not certain—that sounds like he does not have personal knowledge—what use was made by /sic/ the information gathered by the Army. . . . So far as I know, the information gathered by the Army was not used by the Justice Department.

Justice Rehnquist, in these sentences, tells Senator Ervin once again that he is not personally aware of the circumstances of the hearing. He was only present, as he explained, to discuss the legal and constitutional implications of Government information gathering, not to verify any specific surveillance activity.

In other words, Justice Rehnquist told Senator Ervin, at least four times, that he had no personal knowledge about Army surveillance in 1972. I must admit it puzzles me that some individuals would continue to say that this hearing indicates that he had "personal knowledge of the evidentiary facts" of Laird under those circumstances.

That simply is not true; it simply is not fair; and it simply is not seemly to make these arguments on the floor of the U.S. Senate if you look at the record. What it comes down to, pure and simple, is that it is another attempt to distort this man's record because they differ with him ideologically.

Some critics contend that one paragraph in a 1969 memorandum, prepared by a staff attorney for his signature, indicates that he had personal knowledge. In the first place, I should clarify that this single mention in a lengthy memo advises caution in connection with any domestic surveillance by the military. Frankly, it is most probable that Justice Rehnquist did not even read, or at least does not remember reading, that brief paragraph prepared by a staff attorney for his signature. Is there anybody in this body who can tell me all the content of memos they were supposed to have read when they are 3 years old? The single paragraph was prepared for his signature in 1969 and it was not until 1972—3 years later—that the Laird case came up.

I doubt if that single cautionary paragraph would be enough to show "personal knowledge of the evidentiary facts of the case." But more important, Justice Rehnquist clearly did not even know or remember that paragraph. The most important judge of whether he had personal knowledge of the evidentiary facts was of course Justice Rehnquist. He stated in 1972 and again before the committee that he had "no personal knowledge of the arrangement."

Even giving the arguments of my colleagues a fair reading, they do not amount to a significant concern. When these arguments are placed in the context of Supreme Court practice, however, they are almost ludicrous. As I noted yesterday, Justice Black drafted the Fair Labor Standards Act. He had the most intimate knowledge imaginable about that act. As its proponent, he would have had a bias in favor of its approval. Yet he sat on the Court and voted to hold it constitutional. Justice Frankfurter participated in issues about which had formed strong prior opinions as a leading labor lawyer. Chief Justice Vinson decided cases about legislation on which he had taken public positions as a Member of the House. Chief Justice Hughes had publicly criticized the Adkins case in a book he wrote 2 years before he became a member of the Court. As Chief Justice, he authored the opinion overruling Adkins in the West Coast Hotel case, which upheld a minimum wage law. In other words, Justice Rehnquist was fully in line with Supreme Court practice.

Finally, I would note that many have suggested Justice Rehnquist refused to recuse himself because he had an axe to grind. This is not characteristic of Justice Rehnquist. Just a few months ago, he recused himself from participating in the celebrated Baby Doe case merely because it has litigated by his son-in-law's law firm. He recused himself twice early in his Court career because he had a distant advisory role in the case while he was at the Justice Department. In fact, he has recused himself nearly 100 times while on the Court. He is regarded as one of its most ethically scrupulous members. That is what makes these charges so questionable, ludicrous and downright wrong. Anybody who knows him realized that he is an ethical, outstanding good person.

To have these charges brought here with all of these ambiguities and resolve everything against him based upon suspect evidence seems highly questionable. And that is putting it mildly.

I might add that to bring up Mr. Hazard, who clearly has jumped at a number of conclusions to reach his opinion, is also shakey evidence. Yes, he did participate in writing canons for the Bar Association. That does not make him the all-seeing eye of what Mr. Justice Rehnquist did or did not do, nor should it allow him to rebut the expressed testimony of Mr. Justice Rehnquist. I suggest it borders on the unethical for him to get involved in this problem at this late date and to give an opinion that is without all the facts. Talk about ethics. He should read his own canons.

One last point I would like to make. Everyone agrees that Justice Rehnquist testified to Senator Ervin. The real question is a legal question, namely whether his testimony violated 28 U.S.C. 455 and whether his testimony amounted to "personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts." This calls for a legal conclusion. On the statutory law, we should all agree in fairness that he was fully within the law. On the question of "personal knowledge," he was once again well justified in finding himself on solid ground. Lawyers can disagree on these points. Justice Rehnquist himself said that some might disagree with his reading of these provisions, but I think fairness demands our recognition that his legal interpretation and conduct was ethical and undertaken in good faith. Again, I think it is fair to disagree with the Justice. We all have disagreed with him on some points. That is normal. It is another matter to attack him personally because of those legal disagreements.

Mr. President, throughout this debate we have heard it repeatedly said that Mr. Justice Rehnquist has continually sided with the Government against individual rights.

This is an extremely simplistic and misleading view of many complex constitutional issues. In particular, this view overlooks the fact that there are invariably individual rights on both sides of these very important constitutional cases. The only reason that some try to neatly divide competing interests in the Government versus individual rights is that by the time the controversy reaches the judicial stage, one branch of Government has already had to decide between the two sets of individual interests and has made that decision generally by statute.

Let me give you an example. Silent prayer cases. Some would have us believe that silent prayer cases involve the mammoth power of the State against some child who does not want to leave class or stay in class while others silently pray.

This is a pretty one-sided view of that case. On the other side, many students are seeking the religious liberty to participate in a moment of silent prayer or reflection at the outset of the school day. The State legislature has to decide between these competing rights. In 16 States silent prayer rights had been favored until the Supreme Court cast a cloud over those laws in the Jeffrey case. Regardless of the merits of this particular prayer issue, it's clear that there are individual rights on both sides of the controversy and there are differences on both sides of the controversy and those differences are sincere. And neither side needs to be maligned in the process.

It is simplistic to say that this is merely a case of the State against individuals, but we have heard that over and over again by Members of this body who are unwilling to look at both sides.

Let me give another example. The lawyer defending his client on death row would invariably like the court to believe he is advocating individual rights against the Goliath power of the State which seeks to impose upon his client the death penalty. In fact, what has occurred is that the State legislature has weighed the individual interests of murderers against the individual interests of the rest of society at large to be secure and has adopted the policy in favor of the latter.

We have tremendous discord in this body about whether that policy is right, but that is what the legislature has done. In fact, what has occurred is that the States have weighed the interests of murderers against interests of the public to be free from murder and the latter policy has been adopted.

The only reason that the law in question has taken on the character of government policy rather than protection of individual rights is because an elected body has already been required to choose between two sets of competing interests and has done so.

Regardless of the merits of these capital punishment cases, we can see that there are individual rights on both sides of these controversies. It is simply inaccurate and somewhat misleading to speak of these cases as if Justice Rehnquist is always choosing to ignore individual rights. That is ridiculous and some of the media ought to be ashamed of themselves for trying to present it that way. Certainly some of our Senators ought to be ashamed of themselves in trying to present it that way.

On the contrary, there are individual rights on both sides of almost every case that involve serious constitutional questions. The Justice is required to choose between two sets of competing rights.

Incidentally, Justice Rehnquist must do his job well because no other Justice has written more majority opinions, 73 to be exact, over the last four terms of the Court then Mr. Justice Rehnquist. What it comes down to is that some of our colleagues in their own sincere way, I am sure, differ with Mr. Justice Rehnquist's standings on individual rights. They differ with his point of view on individual rights. Some of them are totally against capital punishment. He appears to be for capital punishment, as are the vast majority of people in this country today. That does not take him out of the mainstream, nor does that make him extreme. In fact, it might be equally said on the other side.

Those who do not believe in capital punishment are in a distinct minority in this country. I do not think that is extreme. There are genuine arguments against capital punishment. It should be rarely used and only in the most grievous of cases. I accord them the right to believe what they want to believe, but let us accord the right to a Supreme Court Justice to believe as he wants to.

STANDARD FOR SENATE CONSIDERATIONS

If I may, Mr. President, I would like to comment just briefly on these confirmation proceedings. As we all know, the Constitution contains no explicit standard for appointment or for the advice and consent obligation of the Senate. Nonetheless, article III, which defines the role of the judiciary, and article VI, which requires judges to take an oath to uphold the Constitution, suggest a standard. These provisions note that a judge's duty is to decide cases and controversies in accord with the Constitution and laws of the United States. Because judges are obligated to find, and not make, the law, this suggests that our inquiry ought to focus on the willingness and ability of the candidate to fulfill a judicial office by interpreting the laws enacted by democratic institutions. In more than 15 years of service on the High Court, Justice Rehnquist has amply demonstrated this temperament and talent. A quick review of his ABA rating confirms this.

EXTREMISM

We have heard some critics of this nomination contend that Justice Rehnquist ought to be subjected to an ideological inquisition. According to their view of an ideal justice, Justice Rehnquist is "out of the mainstream." This assertion deserves some examination.

In the first place, it is irrelevant. In the second place, it is inaccurate. And finally, it is dangerous.

First, these charges are only marginally, if at all, relevant to our inquiry. Justice Rehnquist has been nominated to serve as Chief Justice. He is already on the Supreme Court. He will continue to serve on the Court and cast the same single vote he would have as Chief Justice. His views will continue to be represented in Court opinions and influence his colleagues to the degree of their persuasiveness. Thus, any particular Senator's personal assessment of Justice Rehnquist's voting record is only of marginal value, because Justice Rehnquist's ability to influence the directions of the Court will still depend primarily on his ability to persuade four of his colleagues of the soundness of his views.

Second, these charges are inaccurate. At best, they are simply a measure of the extremism of those making the judgment. I think a few examples will serve to establish this point. During the Judiciary Committee proceedings, we heard numerous charges that Justice Rehnquist was "extreme" or "out of the mainstream" because he dissented in the Jaffree case which struck down Alabama's silent prayer law. It is important to note that if this vote makes an individual too "extreme" to serve on the Supreme Court, then Chief Justice Burger and Justice White, a Kennedy appointment, would also be disqualified. They also voted to sustain Alabama's authority to permit silent prayer.

More important, however, is the realization that 12 members of the Senate Judiciary Committee itself have voted against that case—12 out of 18. Senate Joint Resolution 2, a proposed constitutional amendment to overturn Jaffree and permit silent prayer, was approved by a 12 to 6 vote on October 3, 1985. It just may be the case that those who are out of the mainstream on these church/State issues are those Senators who found themselves without a prayer after losing the vote in the Judiciary Committee.

Should that constitutional amendment ever come to this floor, we will see what a majority of the U.S. Senate will have to say about it. If 56 could vote for a vocal prayer amendment last year, can you imagine how many of them are going to vote for a silent prayer or reflection amendment? I believe that such an amendment will be adopted if it is brought to the floor of the Senate.

We have also heard that Justice Rehnquist is out of the mainstream and insensitive on civil rights. We have heard remarks by the distinguished Senator from California on that issue. He is just parroting what a number of others have said who believe that civil rights controversies have to be decided the way they want them decided.

This assertion that he is insensitive to civil rights is inaccurate. More important, this masks the real reason these accusations are made—namely, that Justice Rehnquist simply does not uniformly vote in the way some civil rights activists would prefer to have him vote.

First, I would like to show why it is inaccurate to characterize Justice Rehnquist as "insensitive" to civil rights. This overlooks that in 27 cases which I was able to locate rather quickly he voted for the interests of minorities or women. For instance, in the famous 1974 bilingual education case, Lau versus Nichols, he found that discriminatory impact suffices to establish liability under title VI. He voted to overturn a much narrower circuit court opinion in this case. In the 1984 Palmore case, he found that a State may not remove a child from a mother simply because she is married to a black man. In the 1975 Albemarle case, he invalidated an employment test having a disproportionate impact on minorities. Incidentally, in this case, Justice Blackmun and Chief Justice Burger filed a much narrower dissent. In the pivotal 1973 voting rights case of White versus Regester, he voted to strike down a Texas at-large voting plan because it would have diluted minority voting strength. He reached similar conclusions in striking down voting plans in 1985, Chapman, and in 1977, Connor. This hardly sounds like the record of someone insensitive to civil rights. In doing so, he incurred the wrath of a number of conservatives in our country, particularly in the South. He is not pleasing anybody in some of these decisions. This hardly sounds to me like the record of someone who is insensitive to civil rights.

In the 1973 Tillman case, he also found that a community swimming pool could not exclude patrons on the basis of race. In the 1977 Dothard case, Justice Rehnquist held that title VII did preclude certain limitations on employment requirements, even though Justice White dissented. This list could go on further, but I think fairness would suggest that his record is not as insensitive on civil rights as some might wish us to believe.

We have also heard that he is extreme because he is not sensitive to women's rights. This is simply not accurate. Once again, I found very quickly 27 cases where he had voted for the interests of women and minorities. This is a particularly ironic charge at this time, however, because only a few months ago, the front page of the Washington Post and other papers heralded the result in the Meritor Bank case which said that employers can be held liable for sex harassment in the workplace. This was the most significant women's rights case of this last term. Yet those who make these charges seem to forget that Justice Rehnquist authored this landmark opinion. This is hardly the record of a judge who ignores the fair assertion of women's rights.

In the most important women's rights case of the 1984 term, the Jaycees case, Justice Rehnquist found that an all-male organization may be compelled to accept women. That same year in the Hishon case, he concluded that discrimination against women in admission to law firm partnerships justifies a claim under title VII. In the 1979 Cannon versus University of Chicago case, Justice Rehnquist gave title IX a broad reading to provide an implied cause of action. Justice White, Powell, and Blackmun dissented and would have denied an implied cause of action. Once again this is hardly the record of an individual insensitive to women's rights.

An analysis of the 20 leading civil rights cases of 1986 demonstrates that Justice Rehnquist is fully in the mainstream of the Court when it comes to protecting minority interests. In these 20 civil rights cases, Justice Rehnquist voted with the majority 14 times for a 70-percent mainstream rating, which is identical to the mainstream ratings of Justice Blackmun and Chief Justice Burger. The highest mainstream rating goes to Justice Powell, who voted with the majority 90 percent of the time in civil rights cases. Several Justices have lower mainstream ratings than Justice Rehnquist, as you can easily see.

These idle charges about Justice Rehnquist's record on civil rights simply are just a smokescreen obscuring the real reason these charges are made, which is that some people do not always agree with his independent reading of the law. It may be that Justice Rehnquist does not consistently vote in the way that some civil rights groups or some Senators would want. This, however, is an outstanding qualification for a Supreme Court Justice. A Justice should not feel obliged to reflect the viewpoint of one particular group or interest, but should independently decide each case on its own merits.

CIVIL RIGHTS CASES

Moreover all this rhetoric obscures some realities about these civil rights cases. They deserve a closer examination. To start with, I would like to refer to a few constitutional issues. In the Wygant case, Justice Rehnquist joined the plurality opinion authored by Justice Powell. In other words, the Justice joined an opinion with four of his colleagues which stood for the proposition that a school board could not give racial preferences to some teachers when deciding who to lay off. The school board was using race in its layoff decisions to retain a proportional representation on the faculty. It was that simple. As I recall that decision, the opinion joined by Justice Rehnquist agreed that strict scrutiny applies to racial classification, but concluded that there was not sufficient evidence to justify the conclusion that there had been prior discrimination. This is important because some accounts circulated about Justice Rehnquist's record suggested that he did not think racial distinctions warranted the extra protection of strict scrutiny analysis. This is clearly wrong. He applied strict scrutiny in Wygant, for just one example. In any event that case concluded that, "Societal discrimination without more is too amorphous for imposing a racially classified remedy." The dissent, as I recall, wanted to use quotas in these layoffs even if no showing of actual discrimination were made.

This is an extreme position because even a vast majority of blacks do not want to use the quotas to become the norm in our society. And the vast majority of people in our society do not want them either.

Next I would like to turn to the Fullilove case, where Justice Rehnquist joined a dissent by Justice Stewart. Once again, I note that in these vital cases, Justice Rehnquist is not alone in his views and I have never heard anyone suggest that Justice Stewart was "out of the mainstream." Justice Stewart based his dissent on Harlan's famous principle that "our Constitution is color-blind." Justice Stewart stated: "Except to make whole the identified victims of racial discrimination, the guarantee of equal protection prohibits the Government from taking detrimental action against innocent people on the basis of the sins of others of their own race." This sounds pretty mainstream to me. It says that when discrimination is proven, it will be remedied swiftly, but that otherwise the Government ought not to presume to use quotas or other race-conscious remedies.

Perhaps I could next look at a few statutory civil rights issues. In the Bakke case, which is seminal in this area of law, Justice Rehnquist joined Justice Stevens' opinion. Chief Justice Burger and Justice Stewart also were on that opinion as I remember. Justice Stevens is not noted as weak on civil rights issues. These four argued that the exclusion of any individual from a school on the basis of race would violate the plain language of title VI. Incidentally, Bakke was admitted to school afterward.

For an example of title VII cases, we could perhaps examine Weber, which upheld a collective bargaining agreement containing a racial hiring quota. Justice Rehnquist dissented in an opinion joined by the Chief Justice. That dissent, once again, maintained that a quota is per se violative of the notion of equality and that title VII does not permit racial preferences. This can hardly be called extreme because it prevailed in the Stotts case when the Court held that court-ordered preferences violate section 706 (G) of title VII. The majority in that case decided that court-ordered relief was to provide "make whole relief only to those who have been actual victims of discrimination."

Let me make a few more observations. In the first place, Justice Rehnquist's views in these cases are not unique, nor extreme. As you have seen in just this quick overview, his opinions are invariably joined by several of his colleagues. Another point is also evident. These are close cases. Fine distinctions of statutory language or of the facts often change the outcome from 5 to 4 in favor to 5 to 4 against a particular outcome. In such close cases, it is understandable that observers passionately desiring to win every time would be disappointed. And they are quick to fault someone who does not always vote with their preferences. Nonetheless we must respect that this is not a political, but a legal, process and that Justice Rehnquist is not a political, but a legal, officer. His job is not to balance the equities and keep the majority of his constituents happy; his job is to interpret what is written in the law. In this regard, Justice Rehnquist is respected by his colleagues and lawyers nationwide. Moreover he is not extreme. Even his opponents' statistics bear out that fact. We have heard here on the floor that Justice Rehnquist, in 14 of these close cases, cast the "deciding vote" against minorities. What this really means is that Justice Rehnquist joined the majority of the Court in 14 5-to-4 decisions. With four other Justices agreeing with Justice Rehnquist, he can hardly be called "out of the mainstream" on those 14 close cases, and they involved 14 close, hard-fought, difficult issues with good arguments on both sides or they would not have been that close.

In summary, Justice Rehnquist's record reflects intellectual honesty, not insensitivity. It shows that Justice Rehnquist interprets the civil rights acts and the Constitution to provide equal opportunities for all individuals, which I would submit, is the logical and reasonable view of those laws. Some of his opponents believe that these acts guarantee proportional representation through quotas, busing, and effects tests that invalidate legitimate State activity or require reverse discrimination.

They really argue for those positions. They are legitimate arguments but they are way out of the mainstream because the vast majority of people in this country do not want proportional representation in all instances through quotas. They do not want their kids bused across huge distances against their will. They do not want the effects test that makes every civil rights case regardless of the point of view almost a winnable case at that whether or not the cause is just. They do not want an effects test that will invalidate legitimate State activities and rights to handle matters for themselves, and they do not want an effects test that will permit reverse discrimination or in essence discrimination against a person or any person as a result of the color of their skin. The majority of people just do not want this, but there are legitimate points of view arguing for those positions.

I do not think they are very legitimate. Nevertheless, there certainly are a lot of people who are minority viewpoint people, but nevertheless people who are going to be for them.

They simply differ with Justice Rehnquist on the reading of the law. I wish that is what would be said, not that he is out of the mainstream or that he is extreme because he differs with me on the law.

Instead we hear scathing and misleading attacks on the Justice's character and record. Differences of opinion I can understand, but in my view, personal attacks demean the significance of this proceeding.

MORE ON EXTREMISM

It is also important to note that the groups charging "extremism" only focus on a few narrow areas of law. We do not hear about his record in criminal justice cases where his toughness on drugs and crime and sensitivity to the needs of victims have strengthened law enforcement against the forces of lawlessness. We do not hear about his protection of the separation of powers in cases like U.S. versus Nixon, where he concluded that the President himself is subject to the law, or in the recent Synar case, where he concluded that a provision of Gramm-Rudman infringed on vital constitutional principles. We do not hear about his preservation of rights in numerous other contexts. No Senator likes to be attacked on the basis of a single issue, yet we hear very little examination of Justice Rehnquist's entire record, which is one of leadership and distinction. For a reference on that point, I would once again refer to the ABA's exhaustive study.

I started this discussion, Mr. President, with the observation that charges about Justice Rehnquist's supposed "extremism" were irrelevant, inaccurate, and dangerous. I would like to make one final point about the inaccuracy of these charges before proceeding to discuss their danger. The most important refutation of that charge has yet to be mentioned. In the last four terms, no Justice has written more majority opinions than Justice Rehnquist. To repeat, Justice Rehnquist has authored 73 opinions in the last four terms, more than any other Justice. He simply cannot be "out of the mainstream" of the Court and also be its leading consensus-former and opinion-writer. Because Justice Rehnquist is clearly in the mainstream of the Supreme Court, either the entire Court is "out of the mainstream" or those making the charges are themselves perhaps circling in an eddy so fast that they no longer recognize the center of the current.

Finally, as I mentioned, overemphasis on ideology contains a dangerous assumption. This notion of excluding some nominees on the basis of their views on some debatable issues finds its best expression in Larry Tribe's book, "God Save This Honorable Court." Professor Tribe argues in his book, as we have heard throughout this debate, that "any judicial nominee . . . who denounced . . . the fundamental democratic principle of 'one person, one vote,'" should not be approved by the Senate. The danger in this is that such a standard would have excluded Justices Frankfurter and Harlan, who consistently rejected the doctrine. It would be hard to find two Justices in the last century who had more influence on the shape of American jurisprudence than Frankfurter and Harlan, yet they would fail one of Tribe's litmus tests. Similarly Professor Tribe would exclude nominees who would overrule Roe versus Wade, the abortion case. Of course, this view would reject President Kennedy's appointment, Justice White, and apparently, the first woman Justice, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

Ideological inquisition is a two-edged sword. The staunchly conservative Senate in 1910 and 1916 might have rejected Louis Brandeis or Charles Evans Hughes, who both made outstanding contributions to the law, on the basis of ideology. Thus, one danger is that rejecting nominees on the basis of a few ideological yardsticks may overlook the miles of merit a candidate offers the Nation and its courts.

Another danger of requiring an ideological orthodoxy are the consequences for the nonpolitical third branch. There is danger in reducing the selection of Justices to a political free-for-all. Frankly, the Senate would do well to realize that our Constitution commits some decisions to other branches of Government. Demanding that our political ideology be reflected in those other branches would misunderstand that the judicial branch is not a political entity. The Constitution recognizes that, in the society where taking sides is a national pastime, the judiciary is essential as the one institution capable of applying rules outside the frenzied climate of political activity. Politicizing the selection of its members can only detract from this essential judicial mission.

I have spoken long enough but I want to set the record straight on some of these issues. These are not simple issues. These are not ABC type issues. These are contested and hotly debated issues. Some of them we cannot even bring to this body because we know they are hotly contested and they will bog this body down like nothing else will. We avoid them because we have such a widely divergent set of viewpoints in the U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives. Yet he is being harangued, condemned, mistreated, and vilified because he cannot avoid making decisions, many of which have been 5-to-4 majority positions.

You know it is one thing to say that a man differs with you on civil rights and interpretation of civil rights law. It is another thing to say he is insensitive to civil rights with the record he clearly has with the Court over the past 15 years. In fact, it is an insult to this body to have those types of statements being made.

If they want to point out the cases of law where he is insensitive, we will be happy to debate them. We will be happy to take any case you want.

(Mr. COCHRAN assumed the chair.)

□ 1210

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. Does the Senator think that Justice Rehnquist was insensitive in the Bob Jones case?

Mr. HATCH. No, I do not.

Mr. BIDEN. Thank you.

Mr. HATCH. It would be very misleading to suggest his vote on this very difficult and complex case was insensitive. I am surprised you raised that, Senator BIDEN. I disagreed with him on some aspects of that case. He was the one dissenter. But you seem to assume, as has an awful lot of media which commented on it, that he did not want to have civil rights in universities in this country. That would be an oversimplification.

In that case, the Internal Revenue Service revoked the tax-exempt status of a religious university. This involves a university run by a particular religion with particular values and points of view, with which you and I disagree, at least on this one issue.

The first amendment talks in terms of religious freedom. It is one of the heralded freedoms. It is not just freedom of the press. We have freedom of religion, too. This played a role in that case.

Let me answer your question. The IRS denied Bob Jones University a tax exemption because racially discriminatory policies at the school were against public policy. Justice Rehnquist's vote in the case has been characterized as "support for tax credits for segregated schools."

That is really misleading and is simply inaccurate.

Justice Rehnquist specifically stated that Congress would have the power to deny tax exemptions for discriminatory institutions even if those institutions practiced discrimination by virtue of their religious beliefs. That is a pretty forthright and forceful position.

This is far from support for tax credits for discriminators and those that practice discrimination and segregation. In fact, many would feel that his opinion did not offer enough protection to bona fide religious beliefs.

There are a number of scholars who argue on the other side of this point and who would argue that he did not go far enough. The real issue in the case was not whether racial discrimination was against public policy. Everybody including Mr. Justice Rehnquist, agrees that it is and should be. The entire Court agreed on that point, including Mr. Justice Rehnquist.

The question, according to Mr. Justice Rehnquist's very trained legal eye, concerns separation of powers. Specifically, whether the IRS could, without any further congressional action, undertake to decide the content of public policy. Justice Rehnquist voted against allowing the IRS to decide unilaterally what constitutes appropriate public policy. And, you know, that is a pretty important point.

The IRS, in Justice Rehnquist's view, was exercising a legislative power which should have been given and reserved only to Congress. In other words, Justice Rehnquist clearly agreed that Congress has the power to deny tax exemptions, but the power to make this legislative change resides solely in Congress. This power should not be exercised unilaterally by some agency just because they wanted to do it. The Justice's opinion vents no absence of sensitivity to issues of discrimination, but it vents great sensitivity to the powers of Congress relative to the agencies under the separation of powers doctrine.

Admittedly, he was alone on that point, although I believe the other Justices probably recognized that point, as well. I would have ruled with the majority in that case if I had been sitting on the Supreme Court.

But, I have to tell you that he made what was a valid legal point. It was significant enough to dissent on. As somebody who has seen some of the persecutions by some of these agencies in the past, I respect his position. I have gone to court and fought for the individual rights of people who were oppressed, many times without fees as you have.

Mr. BIDEN. You are right.

Mr. HATCH. I have to admit that Justice Rehnquist has a pretty valid point. I do not want the IRS interpreting the statutes completely on their own and defining what individual rights are, especially in the area of religious freedom. It is a far more different case than what the media has described the Bob Jones University case to be.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Of course.

Mr. BIDEN. I always admire the Senator's advocacy. The Senator started off suggesting that there were no cases where Justice Rehnquist demonstrated an insensitivity on racism.

Mr. HATCH. I do not think that one is.

Mr. BIDEN. Let me finish for a moment.

Second, he said one of the reasons why this is not a matter of real insensitivity, even though he was in the minority and has explained it, was because it was religious. Then he went on to say the decision had nothing to do with religious freedom—zero; never mentioned it; was not an issue.

Mr. HATCH. Who did? I did?

Mr. BIDEN. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. There was a legitimate religious freedom argument that could have been raised.

Mr. BIDEN. Could have been raised, but had nothing to do with Justice Rehnquist's decision.

Mr. HATCH. The final decision.

Mr. BIDEN. Not only the final decision. If the Senator will yield, the beginning, the middle, and the end of Justice Rehnquist's opinion had nothing to do with religious freedom. Zero.

Mr. HATCH. I agree.

Mr. BIDEN. Then why do we keep mentioning religious freedom?

Mr. HATCH. I want to make it clear that this is not some simple case. It was a very important constitutional issue concerning a religious school with religious tenets. The Court decided, in their zeal, to permit the IRS to revoke their tax status.

Mr. BIDEN. But it was not an issue that was adjudicated before the Court about religious freedom on the part of Justice Rehnquist. Justice Rehnquist did not reach that judgment. He did not say this had anything to do with religious freedom. He said this had to do with whether or not the IRS, notwithstanding the facts the Senator says he acknowledges that it is broad public policy, broad public policy to not allow institutions, regardless of their makeup, to discriminate. He said that is broad public policy. But, notwithstanding that, Justice——

Mr. HATCH. Could I correct the Senator on that one point? That is not the broad public policy in this country.

Mr. BIDEN. It is not?

Mr. HATCH. It is not the public policy to ignore religious rights that are acceptable in this country today. We do not need to debate the religious discrimination issue.

Mr. BIDEN. We surely do.

Mr. HATCH. It was raised in this case.

Mr. BIDEN. We surely do.

Mr. HATCH. We do not, because I agree with you. It was raised in this case and it was legitimately raised, but it was brushed aside by all nine Justices. Eight of the Justices said that Bob Jones University practiced discrimination. Therefore, the agency, according to the Court, was within its powers to do what it did. Justice Rehnquist said the agency should not have asserted this power because Congress only could have given the power. That is a far cry from saying he is in favor of discrimination and against civil rights.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will let me now make a full statement. I want to be short and full on this point.

Let us make it clear. Justice Rehnquist made absolutely no judgment relative to whether or not Bob Jones should be allowed to continue the practice of discrimination because it was a religious institution. He, with the other eight Justices, said that is a specious argument. He went out and he said, notwithstanding the fact that it is broad public policy to do away with discrimination in America, we have something here that I, Justice Rehnquist, do not like and think it is, in fact, unconstitutional. He said that the IRS, which had, since the Nixon administration when Justice Rehnquist was counsel for it, been engaging in a practice which said, at the direction of the President and with clear concurrence for failure of the Congress to do anything, said, "Look, if you are going to discriminate,"—"you" meaning anyone out there—"we are not going to allow you to have a tax exemption status."

Now, he seized upon, as I told you before, an intellectually elegant and credible point. He said, technically the IRS, and all of the executive branch, is making a judgment about whether or not discrimination exists. That is not a judgment the IRS should make, he said. He said that is a judgment that only the Congress should make, or, I suspect he would have said, if the Justice Department chose to go in and sue, bring suit against an institution.

But he said here you have an agency that is designed to collect taxes, and to make a judgment that this outfit discriminates. Therefore, they are going to withhold an exemption under the tax code—by the way, they are the arbiters in every other case—saying we are not going to, when you file your income tax, allow you to write off in effect paying us taxes; that is, saying tax exempt because you discriminate. Granted, it is an intellectually elegant argument as all arguments are.

I stood, and the Senator from Hawaii is waiting to speak and I will not take any more time but I will come back to this. But I want to make a point. I was responding specifically to the assertion by my colleague from Utah saying that there is no record of insensitivity, and not legality—insensitivity. Was he insensitive on race? I cannot believe that if in fact he wished to make that argument, if the Senator from Utah were on the Court and I fully expect some day he will be, I suspect he would have written the decision this way: If he agreed with the legal principle stated by Justice Rehnquist he would have said although it is public policy and should be public policy that institutions not discriminate against people merely because of the color of their skin, and inasmuch as I dislike having to write the opinion this way I must conclude that the Congress should move posthaste to remedy the situation which in fact the Internal Revenue Service has arrogated unto itself.

I do not like doing this but technically they should not be allowed—"they"—the Internal Revenue Service—to do this. He did not say that. He did not express any sensitivity.

Again, legal scholars can point out—and I admit, too—he came along, and he made an intellectually defensible argument. That is clear. I am not arguing with that. I am just raising the question, Mr. President, whether or not this fellow understands how delicate the balance in this Nation is. He is to be the Chief Justice of the United States of America. He is technically right. I think he is wrong as does eight other Justices. But he can technically make the argument. But I doubt whether anybody can move from there beyond to saying it is technically right that he expressed any sensitivity.

There are those who will sit and listen to this and say, "Wait a minute, Senator BIDEN. What are you asking the Justice to have sensitivity for? All he or she has to do is have the intellectual ability to define within boundary that we can think of the arguments they hold that is fitting with the constitutional framework. That is all you have a right to do, BIDEN."

Well, if they are right, then I am wrong. But if the issue is sensitivity, which I will come back to later and I will argue the rationale for, if that is the issue, then it is a different matter.

But I do not want to hold up the Senator from Hawaii, and I am sure my colleague and I are going to get a chance to continue this discussion at some point and many others also over the range of the day and maybe into the next couple of days.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the technicality Senator BIDEN mentions was the law. And Justice Rehnquist was upholding the law as it was written, which is what Supreme Court Justices should do.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, it was technically the law according to one man. Seven other men and one woman disagreed.

Mr. HATCH. There is more to it than that. It is interesting to note that 18 of the 26 major law review articles on this issue—and these are the leading scholars of America—are critical of the majority opinion of the case.

All I am trying to point out is that you can take any case out of context. It is insensitivity to you because he disagrees with you. It is courageous for anyone to be a dissenter. And he has been a dissenter on a number of occasions, not as much as some of his colleagues, however. It is also interesting to note that Prof. Larry Tribe from Harvard, who is a liberal law professor, wrote in the Indiana Law Journal that the Court's use of congressional inaction in the Bob Jones University case was not—let me emphasize "was not"—a legitimate means of ascertaining congressional intent.

In addition, two of the four judges that heard this case before it arrived at the Supreme Court ruled that the university was entitled to a tax exemption.

To present it as though he is insensitive to civil rights or that he does not stand for the mainstream of civil rights is not only misleading but it is wrong.

I might add that Justice Harlan was the lone dissenter in the Plessy versus Ferguson case. He was one who coined the language "Colorblind Society." All I can say is that I differ with the Bob Jones case, however, I can understand the very powerful constitutional argument involving separation of powers.

Let us not condemn anybody because of a series of cases. This man has been involved in thousands of cases since he has been on the Supreme Court of the United States of America and has written many opinions.

What I really resent is not my distinguished friend from Delaware. What I really resent is the way some of our esteemed correspondents and journalists have written about this Bob Jones case as though he was for segregation. He is not for segregation. His whole career says that he is not. But he does not go as far as "forced busing" and a whole raft of other issues that are highly controversial and hard-fought issues in the area of civil rights where reasonable minds can differ.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. I was responding only to the one question of sensitivity. Let me broaden it just a moment, and then I will yield to the Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. HATCH. If I can interject, we were limiting this discussion to the Bob Jones case. We should let the distinguished Senator from Hawaii give his remarks. But, in my view, it would not be correct to cite the Bob Jones case to show that he is insensitive to civil rights.

It would be inappropriate to attack the intellectual credibility of his arguments. Some have distorted what he really wrote in that case. Some have tried to make him look like he is anti-civil rights when he merely was standing for one of the most hallowed principles of constitutional law, albeit alone, but so did Justice Harlan in the Plessy case. So did Justice Frankfurter in many cases. So did Justice Holmes and so does nearly every justice at times.

These are not simplistic issues. They are difficult issues. There are always two sides. Even though the person is a lone dissenter, it is a mark of honor. It is not a mark to be criticized for. He has had the courage to do both. He has led and has been a lone dissenter. That is the point I am making.

Sometimes we get too simplistic in our zeal to make our points in these matters. I do not think we should do that.

I will be happy to yield.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. BIDEN. I will only take 3 minutes.

Let me make a couple of points with regard to the Bob Jones case. The Bob Jones case taken all by itself, even though I think it was a real stretch for Justice Rehnquist to reach the conclusion he had, all by itself I would say although insensitive is not one that would lead one to belive that this man is not in the mainstream of American civil rights. Do not forget, we are talking about a man who before he was on the Court fought open housing in his home town and wrote letters to the editor in his home town. We are talking about a man who has been, alleged to have been involved in what was then a constitutionally legitimate practice of challenging voters, Hispanics and blacks, primarily, to ask them whether or not they can read English—read before they voted. We are talking about a man who has written a memo which I will not go into now, but I will go into later, when he was at the Justice Department and allegedly by some, and I am one of those who believes it, wrote a memo for Mr. Justice Jackson saying Plessy versus Ferguson was constitutionally valid law, and it should not be overruled.

□ 1230

So we are not talking about the aberration of an otherwise committed civil libertarian and civil rights activist, you know, not that you have to be a civil rights activist to be in the courts. We should not paint this in being A, in this case, or, B, that Justice Rehnquist does not have a 30-years history of having been at best resistant to change in our civil rights laws in this country.

Let us put it in focus, to use the phrase my friend from Utah likes to use. Let us look at this.

Well, as we look at this, we have a man who in everything he has done from his most narrow interpretation—again, as I said yesterday, intellectually elegant but yet narrow interpretation—of every piece of civil rights legislation that was passed, and prior to him being a man who was to rule on that legislation, he wrote as either counsel to the President or he acted as counsel to the party of his choice in his home State, or as a private citizen, he felt the need to go forward and testify why open housing was a bad idea.

You look at things in a continuum, and the fact that he ends up somewhere 81 out of 84 times voting against civil rights characterizes the position taken by black Americans, black plaintiffs, and I will go further into it, again, in and of itself, does not mean that the man is a racist, it does not mean that the man is not intellectually sound, it does not mean that he is one who has not found arguments in the Constitution to make his argument constitutionally credible.

I will make those points later.

At a minimum, it is not someone who shows an overwhelming sensitivity or any sensitivity, I might add. That is the context in which this occurred. This is not Earl Warren, who was equally as disliked or objected to as Justice Rehnquist. Let us get in everybody's mind the man we are talking about.

We are talking about a man who has not been anywhere near the forefront, and at best he has been at the rear and not hanging on but pulling back, it seems to me, on any movement in civil rights in this country.

I yield the floor to whomever would like the floor. I will come back and discuss other matters.

Mr. HATCH. I know my distinguished colleague from Hawaii would like to speak, but I will just take a moment.

I thank my colleague for being willing to participate in this debate. Some of the criticisms which have been lodged have been general criticisms.

When you start talking about individual issues and individual cases, you find that they generally involve very hotly contested matters in our society.

The Leadership Conference for Civil Rights has been advocating timetables and quotas.

However, the majority of blacks in this country do not want to arrive at their future on the backs of other people who are discriminated against solely because of their skin. They do not believe in quotas.

Mr. BIDEN. Let me ask the Senator, who is talking about quotas?

Mr. HATCH. Let me go into this. A lot of them involve the effects test.

Mr. BIDEN. Quotas?

Mr. HATCH. I am talking about various aspects of the civil rights law in some of these cases, like the Fullilove and Weber cases which involve quotas.

Back in 1979 this body came to a standstill on the effects test issue. Those who advocated for the effects test lost, because it was an important issue. There is a good argument for the effects test, but I think there are overwhelming arguments against it.

A lot of these people are arguing for forced busing in our public schools. That is a neighborhood school concept which has been criticized here.

I know that Senator BIDEN is on the right side on forced busing, he is against it, as I am, the vast majority of people in this country are against forced busing. They are outraged. It has not been proven to be a working situation. You have to really stretch the truth to try to really show where it works at all.

A vast majority of the people are against that.

I could not let the Senator raise Bob Jones just because a lot of people have said that Mr. Justice Rehnquist was against civil rights because he was the lone dissenter in the Bob Jones University case.

He not only made legitimate arguments but they were arguments that should have been made by the other justices as well. Whether he was right or wrong only long-term history can tell. The point is he had a legitimate point of view. He argued it well and it did not show insensitivity to argue that position.

This whole dispute is caused becaused some differ with Justice Rehnquist's ideology.

When Richard Nixon was President, when Gerald Ford was President, and when Eisenhower was President, they could not put a conservative on the Supreme Court because the U.S. Senate, except for a couple of years under Eisenhower, was controlled by the Democrats. And the Democrats are not known for conservative politics in this country except on occasional instances and they are very rare.

The fact is that a conservative President has taken the leading conservative on the U.S. Supreme Court and given him the opportunity to become Chief Justice. His opponents do not like it. There is a good reason for it. They do not agree with him on forced busing. Senator BIDEN does, but a lot of others do not. They do not agree with him on quotas. They do not agree with him on the effects test versus the intent test. These are three of the most crucial and hotly contested issues in civil rights. They involve rights of people on both sides which are extremely important.

What the opponents of Mr. Justice Rehnquist are really upset about is that they do not control this nomination and they do not control this President. They cannot attack this man's sterling 15-year record legitimately, so we get these broad-brush arguments about Bob Jones University. When you get into the issues, you find it is not the simplistic little thing that some of our journalists have written about or some of our colleagues on this floor have talked about.

I really find it reprehensible what went on in the committee hearings. In their zeal to tar this man with something that might stop him from being Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, they bring up matters that some of the media have mischaracterized. Some have tried to make Bob Jones look bad because it did in fact discriminate against blacks through its religious beliefs. If you want to get into religious beliefs, I can show my colleagues that a lot of religions have religious beliefs others object to. And if we want to portray them as bad, the Hassidic Jews are sure going to be upset, and the Catholics are going to be upset.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, Catholics will not be upset.

Mr. HATCH. They will be upset if they are told they have to have abortions.

Mr. BIDEN. You said on race. Will you stick to the point, Senator?

Mr. HATCH. I am sticking to the point.

Mr. BIDEN. You are mixing bananas and apples and oranges now.

Mr. HATCH. Wait a minute.

The reason the Grove City bill is stopped in the House right now is because there is a strong coalition, including the Catholics, which objects to the Carter regulations that would provide that abortion has to be treated——

Mr. BIDEN. What does that have to do with race, Senator?

Mr. HATCH. Because they are part of the coalition that has stopped that bill in the House.

Mr. BIDEN. Is that race, Senator?

Mr. HATCH. The Grove City bill is not limited to title IX but extends to title VI as well.

Mr. BIDEN. Oh, OK, I see.

Mr. HATCH. The Grove City bill involves very serious issues. It involves the nuance of abortion that has the Catholic Church interested in it.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I can understand when there is so much occasional confusion because I engage in it also. I thought the Grove City case relates to discrimination under title IX based on sex.

Mr. HATCH. It does relate to title IX, and also to title VI, involving race discrimination, the Age Discrimination Act and the——

Mr. BIDEN. The only point I want to make is the Catholic Church has no problem on any race issue. You can go in and tell us anything you want to tell us about not discriminating based on race and there is no problem. That is the only point I want to make.

Mr. HATCH. The entire bill is a problem in the context that a bill which will literally overrule the Grove City case on institution-wide coverage in all universities for women has been delayed because the Catholic Church and many other organizations do not like the fact that that bill will result in forced abortions at religious institutions. The entire bill relates to a variety of issues.

I am not saying they are for discrimination. There are instances where various religious institutions do hold beliefs others do not understand.

These are complex issues, Mr. President. The Supreme Court is a complex forum. There are widely divergent views on the Court right now. That is why it is such an interesting institution. To come in and make broad-brush generalities about Mr. Justice Rehnquist demeans the process. It demeans him. It demeans us.

If you want to talk about individual cases, we shall be happy to do it.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, how about Batson v. Kentucky? Let us make sure we are talking—if the Senator will let me finish.

Mr. HATCH. I shall be glad to talk about Batson.

Mr. BIDEN. Give me a chance.

Mr. HATCH. I am glad to do it.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator suggests that what we are talking about here is busing and quotas. The Senator from Delaware has not raised cases regarding busing and quotas. We are talking about much broader issues, about whether or not this man has any sensitivity on the issue of race.

There are a lot of cases, there are a lot of circumstances, there is a lot in Justice Rehnquist's background which, in this Senator's opinion, indicate that in fact he is insensitive on race questions and gender questions and age questions that do not have anything to do with quotas, that do not have anything to do with busing at all.

Maybe the Senator and I could make an agreement that we will let the Senator from Hawaii speak and then afterward, he and I could get back into the discussion about whether or not this is an area that should be pursued, because we have both been standing here saying we are going to let the Senator from Hawaii speak. That is, for the last 45 minutes we have been saying that.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Delaware brought up the Batson case. We will discuss that later. The Batson case is an interesting one. I shall be happy to discuss it in detail.

I yield the floor to the distinguished Senator from Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the patient Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, with much reluctance I intrude into this provocative and interesting debate.

Seriously, we have just seen and listened to a demonstration of what makes this body the most important deliberative body on this Earth. My only regret is that most of my colleagues are not here and were not here to listen in on this exchange. I commend my distinguished friends from Utah and Delaware for carrying on this debate.

Mr. President, I rise to join those who have expressed their opposition to the confirmation of William Rehnquist as Chief Justice of the United States.

The issue before us is not whether Justice Rehnquist should continue to serve as a member of our Supreme Court, the question is whether he should be confirmed to become the single most powerful jurist in our country—the Chief Justice of the United States. This is a distinction which is not to be taken lightly, for we are asked to confirm the leader of one of the three coequal branches of our Government.

Perhaps it is naive, but I believe that the leader of America's judiciary should be above reproach. I believe that there should be no reasonable basis to question his commitment to racial justice; that there should be no reasonable basis to even suggest that he questions the fundamental right of women to equal protection; that there should be no reasonable basis to question his integrity and candor; and, perhaps most importantly, no reasonable basis to question his ability to lead a court which will almost certainly be called to unite a nation, and to remind our people that the promise of fairness and equality embodied in our Constitution will continue to evolve and be made real.

The administration of justice in our Nation deserves no less than a man in whom our people can place its unequivocal confidence. Because I do not believe this to be the case, I must oppose Justice Rehnquist's confirmation.

In the course of this debate, Mr. President, I believe that we must continually remind ourselves that we are selecting a man for leadership. This is not a matter of service on the Court. Nor is it a matter of providing a balancing view or alternative perspective. It is a matter of expressing our confidence that the Court and the American people will be led in a fashion that we believe represents the best of our commitment to justice.

Mr. President, the role of the Chief Justice is far more then merely ceremonial and administrative. He must lead. He must also serve as a moderator and consensus builder who will bind the Court and our Nation.

Although I cannot hold myself out as expert in these matters, I think that it is significant that the role of the Supreme Court in our Government was largely defined by a Chief Justice whose leadership and ability to find a common ground was such that he dissented only once on Constitutional issues in 34 years as chief justice. I speak of Chief Justice John Marshall. Chief Justice John Marshall serves as the paramount example of the duty and potential of the office to bring together a court, engender confidence in our form of Government and give life to the Constitution. And while it is, of course, unfair to compare any jurist to a giant such as Marshall, it is fair to ask that the qualities of leadership, moderation, and an ability to unify be demonstrated at the time of appointment. I do not find this to be the case with Justice Rehnquist.

He has, to my knowledge, served rather than led. He has neither a reputation nor apparent inclination toward compromise and moderation, and on the basis of the record it appears that Justice Rehnquist may be more likely to divide than unite a court or nation.

Mr. President, I believe that the Chief Justice must also symbolize and effectuate our commitment to racial and social equality.

The commitment of our Nation to genuine racial equality was manifested in Brown versus Board of Education. In that case Chief Justice Earl Warren spoke for a unanimous court declaring that "separate educational facilities are inherently unequal." This simple, now self-evident conclusion, precipitated a revolution in the history of race relations in America. The philosophical and moral leadership exhibited by Warren, together with his ability to bind a court epitomized what the American people have the right to expect of its Chief Justice.

Ironically, in 1986, we are debating whether a prospective Chief Justice supported, or currently fundamentally accepts, the premise and principles of the Brown decision.

In this age, we tend to forget that the evil of segregation was supported by benign sounding and apparently objective social and legal analysis. In Plessy versus Ferguson, the Supreme Court sanctioned segregation thusly:

> Legislation is powerless to eradicate racial instincts or to abolish distinctions based upon physical differences, and the attempt to do so can only result in accentuating the difficulties of the present situation. If the civil and political rights of both races be equal one cannot be inferior to the other civilly or politically. If one race be inferior to the other socially, the Constitution, cannot put them upon the same plane.

But those who have historically been the victim of such language have not forgotten the vicious and degrading reality which such neutrality engendered. It is understandable that they are necessarily discomforted by the nominee's statement in 1952 that "I think Plessy versus Ferguson was right and should be affirmed." Although this was subsequently recanted and attributed to Justice Jackson, concern has been reinforced by his statement 15 years later that "we are no more dedicated to an integrated society than to a segregated society"; by his alleged participation in ballot security operations; by his allegedly innocent purchase of two homes with racial covenants; by his development of a constitutional amendment which would consciously permit intentional segregation; and by a judicial record most recently manifested by a lone dissent attempting to retain tax benefits for an educational institution which practiced racial discrimination.

It is difficult to equate this record with leadership of an Earl Warren in Brown. It is equally difficult to imagine that the confidence of the American people in our Court's commitment to racial equality will be enhanced by Justice Rehnquist's confirmation. Mr. President, I think they, and we, deserve better.

Mr. President, in 1974, our Nation was confronted with a constitutional crisis regarding the unwillingness of President Nixon to surrender certain tapes. The case was before the U.S. Supreme Court and many feared that the Court might be predisposed toward the executive since five of its members had been appointed by the President. Led by Chief Justice Burger, the Court not only put these fears to rest but substantially contributed to the resolution of the national crisis. In doing so it raised the Court's, and the Chief Justice's, reputation for integrity by issuing a unanimous consent which left no doubt as to its objectivity, honesty or allegiance.

On the basis of the record before us, I find it difficult to conclude that the Court's reputation in this regard will be enhanced by the confirmation of Justice Rehnquist. Justice Rehnquist's choice in Laird versus Tatum has been thoroughly discussed, as has his candor before the Senate Judiciary Committee. And while I cannot say that he has been proven to be less than candid under oath or violated the canons to which he is bound, I believe that there is more than sufficient doubt which has been raised to justify a rejection of his nomination. For the question before us is not whether he is a criminal who has perjured himself, or whether he must be sanctioned or impeached, but rather whether the evidence justifies elevation to a position which serves as one of the most important repositories of trust in our form of government.

Mr. President, I do not question that Justice Rehnquist is equipped with a fine legal mind. But brilliance is neither a necessary nor sufficient condition for the leadership of the U.S. Supreme Court. What is required is the flexibility to rally a court in times of national crisis; a willingness to forward and symbolize those commitments which represent the best that our system of justice has to offer; and a character and reputation which enhances the Court's reputation for unquestioned integrity.

Mr. President, in applying this standard I ask how the Nation might have evolved if Justice Rehnquist were Chief Justice when John Marshall was confronted with Marbury versus Madison and a need to cautiously and moderately unite the Court; or if he were Chief Justice when the Court was confronted with Brown versus Board of Education and the future of race relations lay at stake; or if he were Chief Justice when the Court decided United States versus Nixon when the faith of the American people in the integrity of the Court lay at issue.

Because I have substantial doubts about how a Chief Justice Rehnquist, or Rehnquist Court, would have led and comforted the Nation, I have no choice but to oppose his confirmation and urge my colleagues to do so.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SIMON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I would like to discuss for a few minutes what I think is the basic question. It is very easy, in the process of all this debate, to avoid looking at the basic question. The basic question—and I think we are all in agreement—is not the ability of the nominee. The basic question in my mind at least is not his ability to administer the Court, or to serve as the Court administrator. I have no trouble at all with the fact that he has had a great many lone dissents; that shows some courage. The question is not even how he votes on the Court, because we are not going to change one vote on the Supreme Court. What are we discussing? We are discussing the symbol of justice for this country well into the next century. If what we are debating is only the symbol of justice, is it that important? I suggest to you, Mr. President, it is that important.

Right in back of you, Mr. President, is a piece of cloth that happens to be colored red, white, and blue. It is only a symbol. Is it important? You bet it is important. It is important to every Member of this body. It is important to 220 million Americans. We just celebrated the centennial of a piece of metal and concrete in New York Harbor. Is it simply a piece of metal and concrete? No, it is much more than that. The Statue of Liberty is a symbol. We die for symbols. Symbols are extremely important.

Can Justice Rehnquist, in the words of Senator INOUYE, bind our Nation together? Can Americans in every State in this country, in Mississippi, in New Jersey, in Delaware, in South Carolina, look to the nominee and say, "Here is a person who represents justice for me" without any hesitation? I have come to the conclusion that Justice Rehnquist is not a good symbol.

Now, can or should ideology be considered? Here I think Justice Rehnquist has provided the best answer. I think in the case of a district court nominee, unless it is a very extreme nominee, ideology should not be a major factor. The court of appeals? It is more important. Supreme Court? Yes, it is important. And important also for that symbol of justice. William Rehnquist wrote in the Harvard Law Review—this is prior to his nomination to the Court:

> Until the Senate restores its practice of thoroughly informing itself on the judicial philosphy of a Supreme Court nominee before voting to confirm him, it will have a hard time convincing doubters that it could make effective use of any additional part in the selection process.

What is true of a nominee is also true of that symbol, the Chief Justice.

A second factor has been raised, and that this is the candor of the nominee before the Senate Judiciary Committee. In the case of the memo to Justice Jackson when Rehnquist was a law clerk, it is difficult to know when memory is guilded a little bit. I was impressed by the comments of our colleague from California, Senator CRANSTON. After he made his remarks today I talked to Senator CRANSTON. I said, "Did you know Justice Jackson well enough so that there is no doubt in your mind these were not Justice Jackson's views?" And Senator CRANSTON said, "Absolutely not." Maybe memory is guilded. I will give the benefit of the doubt to Justice Rehnquist.

In the case of the Phoenix precinct, I have to say I was very impressed by a courageous attorney from California, Mr. James Brosnahan, and his testimony. I think there is at least a small cloud over the question of candor before the Senate Judiciary Committee, but I do not regard that as the main question. The main question is in the area of civil liberties, and in the area of those less fortunate in our society, for whom justice is extremely important. In the area of civil rights, will Justice Rehnquist represent the symbol of justice that we need?

Let me take, first, the area of civil liberties.

One matter that is not a big issue on the floor here but is an important issue, I think, for many Americans, and an important issue in the long run, is the question of wiretapping. When our Constitution was written, they said you cannot come into our home without a very specific search warrant, because we wanted to confine police activity. Also, we should not permit people to invade our conversations without great restrictions. Justice Rehnquist has not shown great sensitivity here.

In the area of church-state relations, the first amendment, the establishment clause, his record, I regret to say, is not strong. As a law clerk—again, I recognize that this is some years ago—William Rehnquist commented in a memo:

> I personally don't see why a city can't set aside a park for all games, picnics, or other group activities without having some outlandish group like Jehovah's Witnesses commandeer the space and force their messages on everyone. (Emphasis added.)

Again, if we were talking about some isolated statement made 30 years ago, that is not a basis for rejecting someone. But the pattern is very clear.

The Society of Professional Journalists, formerly called Sigma Delta Chi, did an analysis of 80 speech-related cases in which Justice Rehnquist has participated. They found that in 69 of the 80 speech-related cases, Justice Rehnquist cast an unfavorable vote for the first amendment.

On the church-state question: In one case, Wallace versus Jaffree, the Justice Rehnquist cited a decision by Chief Justice Story, who was Chief Justice from 1811 to 1840, which he calls the most comprehensive analysis of the Constitution until that time. In that dissent, in that decision by Chief Justice Story, he says this:

> The real object of the first amendment was not to countenance must less to advance Mohamidism or Judaism or infidelity by prostrating Christianity but to exclude all rivalry among christian sects.

I am not suggesting this is precisely Justice Rehnquist's view. But when he cites that particular decision, I feel some discomfort.

Let us quote from Justice Rehnquist, himself, in the same decision:

> The "wall of separation between church and States" is a metaphor based on bad history, a metaphor which has proved useless as a guide to judging. It should be frankly and explicitly abandoned.

I recognize that there is not a complete and total wall of separation. If the local Methodist Church is on fire, you call out the fire department. You do not say "a wall of separation." Yet, that separation has been important to our country, has been a protection for freedom, has been a protection for the religious bodies and the religious opinions of our country. Justice Rehnquist's record in this church-state field does not embody the symbol of justice that I would like to see as the Chief Justice.

Second, what about the less fortunate in our society? Let me just mention a couple of examples.

The Supreme Court has declared unconstitutional eight statutes that discriminated in some way against illegitimate children. Justice Rehnquist dissented in all eight cases—again, a lack of sensitivity that does not commend him to the position of Chief Justice.

In a Wisconsin case, Zablocki versus Redhail, the Wisconsin statute made it a crime for anyone to marry if you had not paid your child support payments. The Supreme Court, by an 8-to-1 ruling, said this is not fair. The Court said:

> The freedom to marry has long been recognized as one of the vital personal rights essential to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free men.
> Marriage is one of the "basic civil rights of man," fundamental to our very existence and survival.

The Court said that if you are to deny people the right to marry because they have not paid a child support payment, you would, in effect, be denying the right to marry to very many poor people.

□ 1320

The Supreme Court Justice Rehnquist dissented from that opinion.

In a Florida case, Gardner versus Florida, a death penalty case, a jury which heard the case unanimously recommended that the death penalty be imposed. After the jury made this recommendation the trial judge, on the basis of a secret presentence report which he refused to disclose to either the defense attorney or to the defendant, ordered the death penalty. The Supreme Court by an 8-to-1 vote reversed that death penalty saying that a defendant and the defendant's attorney are entitled to see the evidence. Again, Justice Rehnquist lacks sensitivity.

Finally, in the area of civil rights, it is very clear despite the comments by my good friend from Utah, Senator HATCH, that the record is not a good one on the part of Justice Rehnquist.

When he was a law clerk—and I recognize here again views change, but the pattern is there consistently—in a memorandum concerning Terry versus Adams, he wrote:

It is about time the Court faced the fact that white people in the South don't like the colored people: the constitution restrains them from effecting this dislike through state action, but it most assure[d]ly did not appoint the Court as a sociological watchdog to rear up every time private discrimination raises its admittedly ugly head.

Admittedly ugly head.

Then he argued to the argument made by Thurgood Marshall, not—

A majority may not deprive a minority of its constitutional right, the answer must be made that while this is sound in theory, in the long run it is the majority who will determine what the constitutional rights of the minority are. One hundred and fifty years of attempts on the part of the Court to protect minority rights of any kind—whether those of businessmen, slaveholders, or Jehovah's Witnesses—have all met the same fate. One by one the cases establishing such rights have been sloughed off, and crept silently to rest. If the present Court is unable to profit by this example, it must be prepared to see its work fade in time, too, as embodying only the sentiments of a transient majority of nine men.

Majority of nine men.

Is that the kind of sentiment we want as a symbol of justice.

Now, you can say well, his opinions have changed a great deal since then. It is interesting because the justice says they haven't changed; in the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund memo they quote a 1985 interview with the New York Times in which Justice Rehnquist observed, "I don't think that my views have changed much from the time" when he was a law clerk to Justice Robert H. Jackson.

Justice Rehnquist has a very different view of the function of the Supreme Court than I have in mind or a great many other people have in mind.

My colleague, Senator BIDEN, has already referred to the letter to the editor he wrote to the Arizona Republic of Phoenix which he recalled the passage of an ordinance prohibiting discrimination on the basis of race in places of public accommodation. Justice Rehnquist opposed that ordinance.

He testified before our committee that he was not aware of the restrictions on the sale of his home. I have no reason to doubt that. It is clear he had been told, because he later sent letters to us, but the restrictions did not seem that important to him, again a lack of sensitivity.

This morning's Washington Post has this paragraph:

But the pattern goes beyond this. The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights made a study of Justice Rehnquist's opinions over the years. It found 83 cases involving civil rights that (1) were statutory, not constitutional, involving interpretation not of the intent of the Founders but the will of Congress, and (2) were not unanimously decided; they were close calls. Mr. Rehnquist, the conference reported, voted against the civil rights complainant in 80 of these 83 cases.

In the years since Justice Rehnquist has been on the Court the Supreme court has decided 11 equal protection cases in which it resolved a dispute of fact between State officials and minorities who claimed discrimination. In 7 of these 11 cases a majority of the Court resolved the dispute in favor of the minorities. Justice Rehnquist, on the other hand, agreed with the minorities in only 1 of those 11 cases.

Fourteen race discrimination cases have been brought to the Court on behalf of blacks in which Justice Rehnquist cast the deciding vote. In every one of those 14 cases Justice Rehnquist cast the deciding vote against the black complainant.

In the case of women, we have the ERA memorandum that he wrote prior to his joining the Court.

Clearly he was wrong in his judgment as to what the effect would be, and I say that coming from the State of Illinois where we have an ERA amendment in our State constitution.

The fact that he was wrong should not be held against him. PAUL SIMON has been wrong. JOHN STENNIS has been wrong. STROM THURMOND has been wrong. DAVE DURENBERGER has been wrong. Even BILL BRADLEY has been wrong from time to time. We all make mistakes in judgment.

The question is not whether he was wrong. The question is whether he was insensitive and the answer clearly has to be that he was insensitive.

Listen to part of that memo:

"Traditionally," Rehnquist wrote, "the domicile of a married woman has been that of her husband, and if the husband decides to move . . . [for a job] the wife is legally obligated to accompany him." ERA, he wrote, "apparently would leave both parties with the power to decide this question."

Well, we have had both parties deciding this question in Illinois for some years and it has not worked out badly nor any differently than it has in any other State.

Since 1971, the Court has ruled on the constitutionality of 23 statutes or Government practices which in one way or another discriminated on the basis of sex and in 14 instances it found them unconstitutional. Justice Rehnquist voted to uphold all but 3 of these discriminatory practices.

Finally, Mr. President, what we have here is a clear pattern. A clear pattern that is going to alienate millions of American citizens if he is our symbol of justice.

Someone criticized me the other day because I had voted against the majority on this side in the case of a Federal court nominee, Judge Fitzwater of Texas. The difference is very clear. Judge Fitzwater was in error on one thing he handled. I do not defend that. But there was no pattern that was wrong.

There is a pattern in the case of William Rehnquist and it is not a good pattern. I will vote in opposition to his nomination.

□ 1320

I recognize at the same time that this body is going to approve him. A question the American public asks themselves and I ask myself is: Despite the pattern, can Justice Rehnquist grow into this new role? Time will tell. I cannot answer that. History is not very encouraging on that point, the history of Justice Rehnquist.

I would encourage Justice Rehnquist, if he is approved—and I am sure he will be within a few days—to take a weekend off by himself, walk along the beach and reflect on this role of being the symbol of justice for all the people of this country. He will no longer be a single Justice. He will be important in ways that none of us know. He will be important as the symbol of justice to everyone.

I want a Chief Justice that will bind the country together, that will give all of us a feeling that he represents justice for every man, woman, and child in this country.

On the basis of the record, I cannot vote for Justice Rehnquist. I hope he will conduct himself in such a way that my vote will turn out to be the wrong vote.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the gesture here of my colleague from New Jersey for allowing me to proceed at this time.

Mr. President, in many ways, our function here, representing our respective States, in considering the approval or rejection of a nomination for a judge and, more particularly, a member of the Supreme Court of the United States and, even more particularly than that, for the Chief Justice of the United States, is grave indeed and far reaching in consequence.

I want to make one point clear here, too, that this is our responsibility. The Chief Justice of the United States is not a part of the administration of whomever may be President when his name came in as a nomination. He will not be a part of the administration that follows and follows that, should he serve year after year after year as Chief Justice.

Under the Constitution, it is clear, crystal clear, that the judicial branch of the Government is separate and apart from the executive and legisative part. It is a separate function. It has a separate independence to it and, more particularly, to the Chief Justice of the United States. Even the President, even the Congress, should the vote be unanimous, cannot change the salary, for instance, for any Federal judge, even for a small amount, $100, or any change whatsoever. This illustrates how complete and how practical and how certain the framers of our Constitution were that they were to create an independent body, a body independent of every other agency in the Government, except of course in the case of the willful violation of the law of such kind that would be grounds for an impeachment.

So I speak with deference, special deference to the Presidents who send the name in because they have the responsibility of it. But they do not have any control as to how we vote.

Now I am not going to take a great deal of time. I just want to put the greatest emphasis that I know how on the importance of any judicial officer under our Constitution and, more particularly, as I say, the Chief Justice of the United States.

The President has his responsibility, as I have already covered quite briefly. But it is there and I am sure the present President felt that responsibility. I am proud to say that I believe that almost every nomination that comes in through this process does represent care and represents careful selection and represents the fundamental principle that is intended.

But I have to emphasize that the final decision is our responsibility. And it should be made clear to the people that this is a function of the Senate to pass a yes or no verdict with reference to any nominee in the judicial branch of the Government and keep on until one is selected that would go forth with the powers and the immunities that are clearly set forth in the Constitution of the United States.

But I will tell you, anyone can have defects pointed out if he served on any high court for as much as 14 years, as has this gentleman. Now I have no personal familiarity or connection with him. I have been to a reception or two at the Supreme Court quarters and have shaken hands with this gentleman. But I do not know him and he does not know me, as we ordinarily use that term.

But I do know, to some degree, about judicial experience. I was a trial judge in a court of unlimited civil and criminal jurisdiction for a good number of years. I will tell you right now, it is a hard, severe, exhausting experience that tries every fiber that a man has, every inclination that he might have. It is a test. His learning in the law is generally recognized, but the qualities, the decisions a judge has to make are far, far more important many times than is the knowledge of the law.

Now, you can have all kinds of apparent qualifications for a man you think will make a good judge. You know he is a man of honor and character and all those virtues that go with it. But the real test comes when you try him out and send him around the track, year after year, and see how he works with his fellow judges, how he reacts to certain sets of facts, how he carries on and conducts the general and special affairs of that court with impartiality. That is where you find the measure of the man.

Now, as I see things, if we had even one case of willfulness or gross carelessness, even, or gross intention to do wrong in any matter that he was deciding these 14, nearly 15 years, I would just let him go. I would not support him.

But as I understand the facts in the record, there is nothing that is clearcut that shows a willfulness or maliciousness or the wrong qualities of character or honor that can be laid at the foot of this man.

Now you can find matters on which you disagree. That is the easiest thing I suppose there is to do. Just go to check in the record, read the law books, the judge's opinion to see what he wrote under this circumstance, that circumstance, these facts and these alleged facts. And you can get barrels and barrels of cases where you thought, well, in that time he made a mistake. But you are not proving any defects of character, honor, capacity, and attitude against anyone that is performing that function. He has to do the best he can.

Another factor is this: how does he get along with his fellow judges? That would be a material point. It is to me, at least, looking at least, looking at these judges, their work, the complexity of it, year after year after year.

I am proud of the Members that have been holding the hearings, all of them. I am proud of the fellow Members we have here that have worked on these cases and brought them in to hear the facts.

But in all of these hearings, I have not heard anything wrong or lack of capacity, lack of intelligence or lack of a will to carry his part of the load that is attributed to this man. You may find things, as I say, that you disagree with him on. I know I could find some things by looking at the record close enough on which I disagreed with him. But when you lay that down beside the average fellow that you are trying to find to serve in this position, you are going to find about the same thing and about the same batting average so to speak with reference to those kind of mistakes, and those kind of conditions. That is true of all those that try to really turn out the work and carry on their part of the load of the Court.

When I said load, that is a deliberate choice. I do not believe anything connected with Government—the President of the United States has gotten a load that is almost impossible to carry because of the volume of it—but I do not believe even the Presidency is any harder on a man to carry the load of it and perform properly than the membership now on our Supreme Court.

In a measure, it is the most unrewarding job, as I see it, except for that satisfaction if he tries to do his best and render his duty. Then there is a certain amount of satisfaction that goes with it.

The first time I ever went into the Supreme Court Chamber was in the old Chamber here on this floor. And the Chief Justice then was a former President of the United States, former President Taft, then Chief Justice presiding over the sitting that was there, a man of great jovial disposition and nature, and in his opening remarks, he found plenty of ways to entertain us. But when he got out into the cases, it was altogether a different situation. He created an atmosphere. He was carrying on his duty. You would feel proud of him.

I think when the fundamentals are really weighed, and the general character is considered there is the capacity to turn on the work, to do the work, and the willingness to do the work. When all of those things are measured carefully and impartially, I believe that this man will be counting particularly on these years of service, and that is what I find convincing. All those things add up to the fact that it would mean that this man is capable and competent. There may be a little thing back there when he was a young man coming along. That did not weigh much with me. I believe this man will measure up in character, honor, and experience far above the average.

I believe that he will make a capable, competent, satisfactory man filling the role of leadership there even more than his brethren, according to all the proof I have heard. And that this man will turn out, round out, and be a servant of the type that we need. And if he is finally chosen and goes on to these special duties, may I especially wish him godspeed, satisfaction, and the reward that comes to him from duty done well.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMPSON). The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Delaware for making this time available and the distinguished Senator from Mississippi for his remarks, particularly demonstrating the length of his service in this body. Not all of us can remember when William Howard Taft was Supreme Court Justice, and very, very few of us ever saw him in action. So it is an honor to hear his speech.

Mr. President, the nomination of William Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court is one of the most important questions to come before this Congress. The Chief Justice is not simply one of nine jurists. He is the very symbol of our Nation's dedication to fundamental fairness and equal justice for all.

The commitment of a Chief Justice in the area of civil rights must be beyond reproach, for the history of America has been shaped by racial minorities struggling to realize the promise of the Declaration of Independence "that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

America's efforts to put our most noble ideals into practice is not ancient history. Much of it happened just yesterday. Certainly it happened within our lifetime. Often within our children's lifetime. Yet we forget.

We forget that only 3 years ago, private schools that practiced racial discrimination had their bigotry subsidized by the Tax Code.

We forget the footdragging that persisted throughout the seventies in implementing the school desegregation that had been ordered 20 years before.

We forget that as recently as the sixties, blacks were still risking their necks for the right to share lunch counters, parks, hotels, and public transportation with their white compatriots.

We forget that until 1964, the right to vote was routinely denied by the imposition of poll taxes.

And, if we forget the history that happened in our own lifetime, how likely are we to remember the 400-year odyssey of black Americans' struggle for equality? Yet that history frames today's debate.

Even as the stirring words of the Declaration of Independence were being written, they were being dishonored. America was practicing slavery in a form as demeaning as any in recorded history. American slaves had no legal standing. They belonged to their white owners. They could take no action to control their sale. They could not swear a legally binding oath, nor make a binding contract, nor own any property to speak of. They had no freedom of speech or movement. They were subject to their owner's curfew. They had no privacy. Neither church nor State recognized their marriages. In sum, they were openly classified as the white man's property and required to do the white man's bidding.

The 13th amendment, which abolished slavery, technically changed this appalling state of affairs. Yet its promise, like the promise of the 14th and 15th amendments which followed, was systemically thwarted by the Government and the courts. The promise of equality was an illusion. Blacks were denied learning. They were denied access to political and social institutions. They were effectively disenfranchised and relentlessly ostracized. In practice, their newly won emancipation proved to be an empty husk. Except in isolated cases, the courts, instead of enforcing the Federal legislation of the Reconstruction Period, whittled away the protections it had tried to secure. By 1896, State-imposed segregation was almost the rule in the South and in some places in the North. In the two decades of the 19th century, 3,000 lynchings were recorded (and many surely went unreported). And they were carried out with impunity.

By 1900, the Supreme Court had nullified nearly every vestige of the Federal protection that had been extended to blacks to liberate them from their bondage. Once again, the black citizen had almost no rights that the white citizen was required to honor.

Jim Crow laws filled the books throughout the South. The first half of the 20th century was not much better. Nor was the Nation's Capitol immune. During William Howard Taft's presidency, the Post Office, the Census Bureau, the Treasury and the Bureau of Printing and Engraving all practiced segregation. Black men's desks were curtained off; cafeteria tables were assigned on the basis of race; toilets in Federal buildings were marked "whites only" and "colored." By the end of the Wilson administration, segregation had been extended to the galleries of the U.S. Senate and the lunchroom of the Library of Congress.

And, Mr. President, this was the law.

Blacks, though technically liberated from bondage and inferiority, were nonetheless denied education and opportunity. Black America, with the Supreme Court's acquiescence, was routinely degraded. Banished to the back of the bus. Placated with the fiction of separate but equal.

And, not until 1954, with the landmark case of Brown versus Board of Education, was the law finally changed.

In Brown, a unanimous Court found that:

> To separate negro children from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely to be undone."

Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal. Segregation deprives black people of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the 14th amendment.

Brown, and the cases that implemented it, reaffirmed that this Nation is dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal, that they are entitled to equal protection of the laws, that America lives up to its ideals of fairness and justice for all.

Since Brown, it is the law that white Americans can no longer humiliate black Americans by setting them apart. They can no longer legally relegate them to the status of official outcasts.

Brown ignited a mass movement to translate the law into fact. It began in Montgomery, AL, when Rosa Parks refused to move to the back of the bus. It lasted throughout the sixties and seventies. It goes on today. It brought black Americans greater freedom and opportunity and it gave white Americans self respect.

But, unfortunately, Justice Rehnquist, the man President Reagan asks us to make Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, was not a part of that movement to enforce and advance these hard-won civil rights. As far as I can tell, he derived no self-respect from America's significant attempt to shed the legal garb of racism. He sat on the sidelines disapproving and nitpicking as the sweep of history left him behind. He belongs in a different era and has a different view of America's destiny and America's historic responsibility. His confirmation as Chief Justice will signal to the vast majority of Americans, who have fought for, or who care about these rights that a dark cloud has descended over the Court.

Just this past weekend Justice Thurgood Marshall, long a warrior on the battleground of civil rights, declared that America has a very long way to go before we become a colorblind society. And if we are ever going to get there, we had better be sure that the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court is firmly at the helm.

And what specifically has Mr. Rehnquist done to make us doubt his commitment to civil rights? Well he opposed the Supreme Court ruling that desegregated the schools. He opposed the civil rights legislation of the 1960's. He opposed efforts in his home town to outlaw racial discrimination in public facilities. He opposed requiring cities to make their electoral systems fair to blacks. He supported the right of a prosecutor to prevent blacks from serving on a jury. And he, alone, supported tax exemptions for schools that practice racial discrimination.

His positions on civil liberties and racial justice betray his pinched view of the Constitution and his disdain for minorities and individual rights. He fails to grasp that America is still an idea becoming—becoming what its people would have it be. A land where men and women are judged not by color but stand equal in the eyes and practices of the State, just as they do in the eyes of God. William Rehnquist seems not to grasp that America is incomplete until we have eliminated the injustice, festering in our national soul, of a dual society of black and white.

People praise William Rehnquist for championing the rule of law. For practicing judicial restrain. For his brilliant legal mind. But I see nothing in Mr. Rehnquist's philosophy that offers redemption from our original sin. On the contrary, I see his stewardship of the Supreme Court leading us back to darker, more divisive times.

For Mr. Rehnquist believes that even where civil rights are at issue, the Court should adhere strictly to the literal words of the Constitution and the original intent of the framers. This belief harks back to another Chief Justice, Roger Taney, whose infamous Dred Scott opinion is one of the most shameful episodes in our history. Taney, too, sought to discover the intent of the framers—in this case the framers of the Declaration of Independence. The Declaration's ringing affirmation of life and liberty clearly did not include African slaves, Taney reasoned. For the framers of the Declaration knew that, given the mores of the day, including blacks would have subjected them to:

> Universal rebuke and reprebation. [The framers] perfectly understood the meaning of the language they used, and how it would be understood by others; and they knew that it would not in any part of the civilized world be supposed to embrace the negro race, which by common consent, had been excluded from civilized governments and the family of nations, and doomed to slavery * * *. The unhappy black race were separated from the white by indelible marks and laws long before established, and were never thought or spoken of except as property.

And since no citizen could be deprived of property without due process of law, he argued, that Congress could therefore not outlaw slavery.

Shocking as Justice Taney's conclusion is, I do not criticize the opinion because it is poorly reasoned, carelessly argued, or technically unsound. I dismiss it because it is wrong. Man's inhumanity to man, the subjugation of the black race by the white, cannot be transformed and made acceptable by a well-reasoned legal opinion.

It is unfashionable these days to question a Supreme Court nominee's philosophy. But where civil rights are at stake, such self-restraint is out of place. Civil rights, equal protection, freedom from racial discrimination. these guarantees are the heart, the soul, of the American system. They are the source of those "just powers" from whence the consent of the governed derives. Call into question the Supreme Court's commitment to civil rights and you put the integrity of the entire Government, the character of the whole Nation, on the line. If we confirm a Chief Justice whose commitment to civil rights is in doubt we betray our past, our future and ourselves.

Let us take a look at Mr. Rehnquist's civil rights record. It is impossible to exaggerate either the role of the 14th amendment in protecting civil rights or the degree to which Mr. Rehnquist's narrow view of that amendment explains why he consistently speaks in a manner contrary to the rights of minorities and women.

The prevailing view of the 14th amendment is that almost all elements of the Bill of Rights apply to the States in the same way they apply to the Federal Government. Mr. Rehnquist is alone among sitting Supreme Court Justices in rejecting this interpretation. His view is totally different. In the world, according to Rehnquist, the 14th amendment prohibits only race discrimination and only that discrimination flowing from deliberate, official policies of segregation. Moreover, he believes that equal protection applies only to those evils envisioned by the amendment's framers. Accordingly, he rejects the view that the amendment allows actions to overcome de facto, not just de jure, segregation. He rejects the view that it permits the courts to issue orders affecting an entire school system unless there was a formal, systemwide dual system of white and black schools. That is why he has dissented in many of the major school desegregation cases of the last 15 years.

Rehnquist, like those who opposed the plaintiffs in the Dred Scott case and Brown versus Board of Education, believes that racial discrimination can be viewed strictly as a legal matter. But remember, man's inhumanity to man, the subjugation of the black race by the white race, cannot be transformed or made acceptable by well-reasoned legal argument. He seems oblivious to the swirl of moral, political, and social events that affect the issue of racial discrimination.

That obliviousness is the only charitable explanation I can think of for his extraordinary statement in 1967 when he spoke out against a desegregation program on the grounds that we are no more dedicated to an integrated society than to a segregated society.

Well, let me make one thing absolutely clear, Mr. President. That is not my view. Nor, I beleive, is it the view of a majority of the U.S. Senate. And it certainly is not the view of a majority of the American people. Most of us have unequivocally and irrevocably rejected a segregated society. And we are just as unequivocally and irrevocably committed to an integrated one.

Before I finish, I wish to turn to one of Mr. Rehnquist's more recent opinion. Bob Jones University versus United States. Frankly, I was shocked by Justice Rehnquist's position.

As you remember, Bob Jones raised the question whether there should be tax exemptions for private schools that practice racial discrimination. This was a case that I had an intense interest in because, at the time, as a supporter of tutition tax credits, it was imperative for me to be certain that no tax benefit would flow to schools that practiced racial discrimination. The Supreme Court, by an 8-to-1 majority, affirmed my view. Justice Rehnquist was the only member of the Supreme Court who voted to grant tax-exempt status to racially discriminatory schools.

This case involved more than just how you interpret a technical tax provision. All the other Justices understood that what was at stake was whether the Internal Revenue Code should be interpreted to allow a public subsidy of racial bigotry. They also understood that granting tax exemptions to racially discriminatory schools involved more than narrow construction of congressional intent. On the contrary, as Chief Justice Burger recognized:

> Few social * * * issues in our history have been more * * * extensively ventilated than the issue of racial discrimination, particularly in education. Given the stress and anguish of the history of efforts to escape from the shackles of the "separate but equal" doctrine of Plessy v. Ferguson * * * it cannot be said that educational institutions that * * * practice racial discrimination, are institutions exercising "beneficial and stabilizing influences in community life" * * * or should be encouraged by having all taxpayers share in their support by way of special tax status * * *. Whatever may be the rationale for such private schools' policies, and however sincere the rationale may be, racial discrimination in education is contrary to public policy. Racially discriminatory educational institutions cannot be viewed as conferring a public benefit within the "charitable" concept * * * or within the underlying Congressional intent.

The Court found that:

There can no longer be any doubt that racial discrimination in education violates deeply and widely accepted views of elementary justice. Prior to 1954, public education in many places still was conducted under the pall of Plessy v. Ferguson; racial segregation in primary and secondary education prevailed in many parts of the country * * *. The Court's decision in Brown v. Board of Education signaled an end to that era. Over the past quarter of a century, every pronouncement of this Court and myriad Acts of Congress and Executive Orders attest a firm national policy to prohibit racial segregation and discrimination in public education.

An unbroken line of cases following Brown v. Board of Education establishes beyond doubt this Court's view that racial discrimination in education violates a most fundamental national public policy, as well as rights of individuals.

The Court appreciated that the mere existence of tax-supported segregated private schools was likely to frustrate Brown. It would provide a Government-subsidized, all-white haven for white parents who did not want their children to attend integrated public schools. And they held accordingly.

Justice Rehnquist was the lone dissenter. He reached the wrong result. Not because he does not understand the complexities of the tax code, but because he does not understand that race discrimination is simply unacceptable in today's America.

Nor is Bob Jones an isolated example. Since 1971, there have been 14 race discrimination cases in which Mr. Rehnquist cast the deciding vote. None of these cases, I might add, involved quotas. In every instance, Justice Rehnquist cast the deciding vote against the black complainant.

As each of us thinks about our vote on this confirmation, I ask you to think how you would have felt if your vote confirmed Chief Justice Taney, who later wrote the Dred Scott decision, or if your vote placed as Chief Justice, Justice Brown, who wrote the Plessy opinion legitimizing the segregation doctrine of separate but equal. My guess is that if you took your religion seriously or if you accepted wholeheartedly our noble national ideals you would be shocked and embarrassed. I ask each of you to ask yourself how you will feel in 5, 7, or 10 years from now if the Rehnquist Court in a series of decisions declares an end to 32 years of progress in civil rights and proclaims the second coming to Jim Crow. Most in this body would say it could never happen. I hope it will not but I believe that the chances of it happening are dangerously higher with a Rehnquist as Chief Justice. And I will not take the chance.

So, Mr. President, I cannot vote to confirm William Rehnquist. I vote against the nominee not because he is unqualified, not because I disapprove of some of his decisions, not because I oppose his ideology, and not because I question some of his past activities.

I vote against him because he does not have the commitment to individual rights and liberties which a Chief Justice should have, and because his appointment will be viewed as a rejection of those in our society who most need his support. Hs confirmation will retard, not advance, our quest for a truly colorblind society.

I yield the floor.

□ 1400

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I compliment the Senator from New Jersey on an obviously well prepared and well thought out statement. I would like to reiterate the point that some of us have made and made very eloquently by the Senator from New Jersey today that Justice Rehnquist has been able to engage through his intellectual dexterity in seizing upon a legal point to arrive at an unacceptable position, an unacceptable position in the eyes of the vast majority of the Senate and a vast majority of the American people. Let me give an example to reinforce that. Under the law as it has been, there used to be great questions about whether or not prosecutors could preemptively challenge jurors because of their race. As we all know, in my State and others throughout the South, the all-white jury system was a notorious vehicle by which black defendants found themselves in serious difficulty. And I do not wish to keep the Senator on the floor, but in Batson versus Kentucky, a State which engaged in similar practices historically, there was a challenge as to whether or not a prosecutor could preemptively challenge all blacks who were sought to be put on the jury because there was a black defendant. Because the person charged was black, did that mean that the prosecutor for the State of Kentucky had the right to automatically say, "We are not going to allow any blacks to sit on this jury because they will probably be prejudiced on behalf of the black defendant." A pretty racist notion but—but—it had been allowed.

Now, it came up to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court in Batson versus Kentucky, with Rehnquist and only one other dissenting, said, "You can do that; it's all right. It's all right to say because there is a black defendant, I, the prosecutor, am not going to allow any blacks to sit on the jury. You don't have to give any other reason other that I don't want them on the jury because they are black, not because they are smart, not because they don't pay attention, not because they're criminals, not because they're brother or sister of the defendant, not because they're related, just simply they are black, and I feel as prosecutor blacks should not be able to sit in judgment of blacks because they will not do anything other than favor the black defendant's position."

Justice Rehnquist said, "That is OK; it is all right to do that."

Now, listen to his reasoning. He said he dissented not on the grounds that no discrimination had occurred, he did not dissent saying that is not discriminatory. It is discriminatory. It is discriminatory to keep blacks off juries just because they are black, but he said he believed that such discrimination was entirely constitutional. The equal protection clause of the Constitution, the 14th amendment, he argued, simply did not prohibit a State from using its peremptory—and for those who are not lawyers it simply means an automatic challenge, the automatic right to say, "I don't want you in the jury; therefore, you can't be in the jury." That is a peremptory challenge. He says that the equal protection clause does not prohibit a State from using its automatic challenge to bar all black jurors from cases with a black defendant or from all cases with any black defendants. A prosecutor could reasonably conclude, Rehnquist argued, that all black jurors would be biased in favor of any black defendant and could in reliance on that belief strike all blacks from the jury.

Let me quote him. He says, "In my view there is simply nothing unequal about the State"—this is the equal protection clause he is interpreting. He says, "There is nothing unequal about the State using preemptory challenges to strike blacks from the jury in cases involving black defendants so long as such challenges are also used to exclude whites in cases involving white defendants, Hispanics in cases involving Hispanic defendants, Asians in cases involving Asian defendants," and so on.

That seems completely reasonable, does it not? He is saying I am allowing discrimination. You can discriminate against blacks as long as you also discriminate against whites, and also as long as you discriminate against Hispanics.

That sounds pretty fair, right? In a sense that is not discrimination. If you allow discrimination against blacks, if you exercise it against blacks on juries, it is OK as long as you exercise it against whites.

Well, that sounds reasonable. But let us look at the facts to show you how disingenuous I beleive that conclusion is. It provides I think a striking illustration of Justice Rehnquist's willingness to conjure up the most implausible suppositions to excuse discriminatory practices. Although, as Justice White noted, the use of preemptory challenges to strike all blacks in juries in widespread, there is simply no similar prosecution practice purging whites.

Whoever heard of prosecutors keeping a white persom from being on a jury because there was a white defendant? Whoever heard of that? But Justice Rehnquist has given us the right to do that, and that is his justification for saying you can keep black people off juries because there is a black defendant.

Everybody knows there is a long history of trying to keep black women and men off of juries throughout this country. It is a practice that has been engaged in shamefully, but he says it is OK to do that because if you want to do it for whites you can, too.

Who wants to do it for whites? Show me any point in history where that has been done. Point out to me any time when that has been abused. It is a red herring, as we used to say in law school, but it is part of that elegant reasoning of his.

The second point I would like to make: although a small number of black jurors often make it possible for a prosecutor to use his preemptory challenges to create an all-white jury, I wonder where—do you understand what I am saying? The overwhelming portion of the population is white. So obviously all you have to do in most jurisdictions is challenge a half a dozen blacks to end up with an all-white jury.

Now, how many jurisdictions are there where you could exercise a few preemptory challenges against whites and end up with an all-black jury? Justice Rehnquist says that it is discrimination, but it is legal discrimination. It is all right.

Why does he say it is all right? Keep in mind that he says it is all right because you could also discriminate against whites in the same way. But whoever heard of that happening? In what jurisdictions is it likely to be able to occur? How many people within the sound of my voice have ever heard of a circumstance where a prosecutor was able to produce, and could have reasonable prospects of producing, by opposing all whites who were in the pool of jurors, an all-black jury? It obviously would be discriminatory—a discriminatory practice he says would be all right.

Justice Rehnquist trades off that nonexistent possibility against a persistent practice, the practice being that there are a lot of jurisdictions, there are a lot of circumstances, there is a long history of 150 years of prosecutors saying, "We don't want a black man on this jury. We don't want a black woman on this jury. We want an all-white jury."

The only point I want to make is that that is what I meant and I think the Senator from New Jersey meant as examples where, on the surface, his argument seems to have some merit. It is legal and elegant but substantively bankrupt. He acknowledges that it is discriminatory to automatically keep all blacks off a jury because there is a black defendant. He acknowledges that that is discriminatory on its face. He says that kind of discrimination is all right as long as you do the same to whites.

"Ain't" that something? That is setting up a straw man that in fact is easily knocked down. That is like saying—Well, I will not go on any longer, because I know that the Senator from South Carolina was considering where we were going to go next. I will talk about it some more.

If you look at Justice Rehnquist's reasoning in a number of his cases, from Bob Jones to Batson, to the cases allowing for discrimination against women, he has the same kind of elegant reasoning to arrive at a conclusion that is incompatible with how far we think we have come in this country but which cannot be readily characterized as an automatic rejection to the vast body of civil rights laws and the vast body of civil rights changes that have occurred in this country.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I will not go into detail in responding to the remarks just made by the able and distinguished ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee.

I simply say that Justice Rehnquist, in all his testimony, said that he was opposed to discrimination, that he believed in equal rights for all. The record is clear in this matter, that that is his feeling, that those are his actions, and that he meets all the requirements to become Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. In the summary that is in the committee report—which I will go into on another day—it explains the situation on the part of the committee. If this committee had felt that he was in favor of discrimination in any way, shape, or form, I do not believe they would have confirmed him. I do not believe that even 1 member of the 18 members of the Judiciary Committee would favor any Justice or Chief Justice who favored discrimination or who opposed equal opportunity for all citizens.

Mr. President, if we continue this matter on Monday, I will have a few more remarks at that point.

Mr. President, Senator DOLE will be in the Chamber in a few minutes to make an announcement about the matter we are conducting now and to see if some agreement can be reached. In the meantime, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1420

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NICHOLAS DANILOFF

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I have very good news for my colleagues in the U.S. Senate and people in the country generally.

The daughter of Mr. Daniloff, Miranda, lives in the city of Chicago, and had requested that our office make some inquiries about the good health of her father.

I am delighted to tell the U.S. Senate and the country at large that I just had the pleasure a moment ago, not more than 10 minutes ago, of talking on the telephone with Mr. Daniloff in the American Embassy in Moscow.

We had a very pleasant conversation. He said he is in good health, in good spirits, very safe, and happy to be in the Embassy.

He asked me to convey his best wishes to his daughter, Miranda, in Chicago.

He hold me he had served about 5 years here covering the Senate and Congress on the Hill and said to express to all in the Senate his high regard for this institution and his pleasant experiences that he had here.

He asked me to particularly remember him to his personal friends, JOE BIDEN and PAUL SARBANES, with whom he apparently had a personal relationship here on the Hill. He assures everybody that he is feeling splendidly, he is being treated very well, he is in good health, his spirits are good, and he asked me to particularly express his warm appreciation to the Congress for the resolution we passed supportive of him and to tell everyone here that that news came to him in jail and nothing did more for his spirits than to know that the Congress of the United States and those in the Senate had remembered him and were sending out a message all over the world about our support for him.

So I think that is splendid news, Mr. President. I am delighted.

I do not have the pleasure of knowing this fine gentleman. I am delighted to have the personal experience of conveying this message to friends in the Congress and Senate and able to say to his daughter, Miranda, in Chicago, that he is in splendid health and good spirits and looks forward to the future with relish.

I thank the President for yielding to me. I thank my colleague from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I hope he did not acknowledge to the Soviets that he was a personal friend of SARBANES and me. That may have been the reason they arrested him in the first place.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Illinois for that firsthand report concerning Mr. Daniloff.

Many have indicated throughout the week that he should have been released and now he has been, at least in part.

I hope the Kremlin's decision to release Mr. Daniloff into the custody of the American Embassy is the first step in granting him the total freedom he deserves.

While he no longer is a prisoner in a Soviet jail, he is still a virtual hostage.

I am glad that while he is bound to remain in the Soviet Union it is in much friendlier confines.

It was patently clear from the moment of Mr. Daniloff's arrest that he was a pawn, a victim of Moscow's retaliation for the U.S. arrest of a Soviet citizen who was caught redhanded as a spy.

Mr. Daniloff is not a spy.

It seems the Kremlin now recognizes that the U.S. Government, the American people, will not sit still while an American is arrested and charged with cooked up crimes.

The Soviets have grossly understated and underestimated the global outrage the Daniloff kidnaping has engendered.

I hope the powers that be in the Soviet Union also recognize that the United States does not trade in human lives. There will be no swap, because a swap entails an even trade.

This administration, this Congress, and the American people will continue to keep the heat on, until Mr. Daniloff is allowed to return to the United States with no constraints.

We are all pleased that Nick Daniloff will be reunited with his wife, although this reunion represents a very conditional freedom. An apartment in Moscow is a far more desirable place to sleep than the prison in which he was detained.

I know Congress will not relent. The President will not relent. The American people will not relent until Mr. Daniloff is back in this country.

Again I thank my distinguished colleague, Senator DIXON, for the firsthand report.

NOMINATION OF WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST TO BE CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate resumed consideration of the nomination.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it is only about 2:25 p.m. on a Friday afternoon. I had hoped by now we could have had some agreement on when we might vote on the Rehnquist nomination.

As indicated earlier this morning when the Senate convened, I hoped that we could reach some time agreement, hopefully on Tuesday, and that we could, therefore, avoid filing cloture.

If we file cloture today, the vote would come on Tuesday.

I also indicated I knew that many Members want to make statements. They want to engage in a dialog and much of that has been done. I certainly commend Members, on both sides, because up until 10 minutes ago there has been almost continuous debate or statements on the nomination.

Again, I would urge that we come to some agreement. Because if we do intend to leave here on October 3, there is a mountain of work that we have to complete. It would seem to me that Thursday, Friday, and Monday and most of Tuesday would be enough time to debate the Rehnquist nomination, unless there is some bombshell that we are not aware of.

We need to complete action on the Rehnquist and Scalia nominations by next Tuesday so we can turn to reconciliation and a lot of other painful matters, and appropriations bills, the remainder of next week. We also need to start focusing, I hope, in a bipartisan way the following week on drug legislation. We need to respond to the demand, to the concern, to the problem, to the President's initiative, to the House action, to the initiatives of my Democratic colleagues in the Senate. And we hope to address that in the next couple of weeks.

I indicated to the distinguished minority leader earlier this morning that I would be visiting with him about an agreement to vote on the Supreme Court nominations Tuesday. I hope to have an opportunity to visit with the minority leader as soon as he has time. If we can reach that agreement then there will be no necessity of filing a cloture motion.

I would rather not file cloture. I would just rather not do it in this case. Although, I think we could probably obtain cloture.

I have to be visiting with the minority leader in the next few moments and can advise my colleagues. It is quite certain there will be no more votes the remainder of today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from the State of South Carolina, suggests the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The minority leader is recognized.

RELEASE OF NICHOLAS DANILOFF TO CUSTODY OF AMERICAN AMBASSADOR IN MOSCOW

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, a major development has occurred, which has just been announced, that Nicholas Daniloff was being released to the custody of the American Ambassador in Moscow. This is encouraging news. As a matter of fact, it is wonderful news. But I would rather say it is encouraging news.

I hope that the Soviets will now promptly take the next step, which would put it into the category of being truly wonderful: To give Mr. Daniloff his freedom to leave the Soviet Union—or to continue his reporting, which may constitute a little fantasizing on my part.

This would be an important gesture on the part of the Soviet leadership and it would help to clear the sour atmosphere.

Mr. President, I understand that the Soviet citizen accused of espionage in New York is also being released to the Soviet Ambassador here. I would hope that this is not going to be followed up by the unconditional release of Sakharov without a trial, which is entirely appropriate in his case.

If that is done, the Soviets will have accomplished too much of their purpose in originally snatching Mr. Daniloff.

Mr. Daniloff himself has said he does not want to be traded one for one with an accused spy. Everybody knows Daniloff is just a good, hard-working journalist, nothing more. He is no spy and everybody knows that.

I should think that the KGB ought to know it even more than anyone else.

The United States should not encourage hostage taking. It would be a dangerous precedent in a world in which terrorist prey on the weak.

So as I applaud the release from prison of Mr. Daniloff, I would deplore the accomplishment of a trade which would hand the Soviets a victory through the extortionist technique of hostage taking.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1520

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCONNELL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. President, only 6 years ago, a small but vocal group made the charges that Ronald Reagan was "too extreme" to lead this country, that he was "utterly outside the mainstream" of American politics. Well, two elections and a sound record of accomplishment have proven these allegations false. And I am proud to say that North Carolinians have defended the President against these charges on two occasions by reaffirming as true his vision of America and his philosophy of government.

Now a still smaller but even more political group is making these same charges against President Reagan's nominee for Chief Justice. I suggest these detractors pause and consider for a moment the true reason for their opposition to Justice Rehnquist. It is more an extreme reaction against his values and rejection of his philosophical views. Or is it a resolute belief that he is extremely lacking in qualification and skill? I submit that the reason underlying this vehement opposition has more to do with differences of opinion and philosophy than with qualification. In either case, this opposition can be characterized as nothing less than extreme.

Insisting that Justice Rehnquist does not pass its litmus test and rejecting as extreme President Reagan's considered judgment, this group also finds itself at odds with the majority view within the legal community. Chief Justice Burger, widely respected across the legal and political spectrum, is quoted by USA Today as calling the attacks on Justice Rehnquist "absolute utter nonsense." Is Chief Justice Burger therefore an extremist? Judge Griffin Bell, President Jimmy Carter's Attorney General, endorses Justice Rehnquist as suited for the post. Is Griffin Bell therefore an extremist? The American Bar Association, the largest lawyers' organization in this country, has conducted an extensive investigation. As we have heard, the ABA spoke with all of Justice Rehnquist's colleagues on the Supreme Court and with lawyers with whom he worked when in private practice. The ABA also critically reviewed his legal writings. Its conclusion: Justice Rehnquist is "among the best available for appointment" in the entire country. By giving the Justice its highest possible rating, is the ABA therefore an extremist organization?

Those who measure Supreme Court ratings against their own political views and values unavoidably will come to different answers on questions concerning qualification and professional fitness. But if the standard we apply to Supreme Court opinions is observance of the rule of law and obedience to the Constitution, there can be no doubt that Justice Rehnquist is a superb jurist.

Mr. Chairman, is it extremist to hold that the Constitution does not make victim's rights and society's rights inferior to the rights of the criminal defendant? Is it extremist to rule that the Constitution does not always guarantee a criminal a successful defense? Is it extremist to believe that a Constitution that provides for capital punishment should not be read as always prohibiting that penalty? Is it extremist, Mr. Chairman, to acknowledge that the 10th amendment does exist and is part of our Constitution? Is it extremist to believe in the separation of powers? More importantly, is it extremist, in our democratic society, to think that Federal judges should not make policy for the Nation without some warrant in the Constitution and the statutes of the United States? If we call this extremism, then we are telling a great many Americans that their principles are unacceptable.

I am not a legal scholar, but I am privileged to sit on the Judiciary Committee in the company of many fine legal minds. Perhaps I differ with some of my colleagues on that committee by believing that in the long run, individual rights are best advanced when our political process is allowed to work as the Constitution envisions. The Constitution gives some fundamental guidelines for deciding important matters, but leaves many questions to the people to resolve as they see fit. We should not call Justice Rehnquist an extremist for failing to make various policy choices that the Constitution may not permit.

The Justice was asked at some point in his testimony for which groups of people and for what kinds of litigants he considered himself a champion. His answer, I thought, was exactly right: He feels no prior obligation to favor one side over another, realizing that his duty is to judge each question on its own merits. He is not a champion for any interest group. Instead, as his carefully reasoned opinions demonstrate to me, he tries to champion the Constitution.

North Carolinians remember with fondness their great Senator, Sam Ervin, who was a noted scholar on the U.S. Constitution. I'm sure that if he were with us today he would highly commend Justice Rehnquist on his exercise of judicial restraint, his strict adherence to the Constitution, as well as on his intellect and professional values. And I know he would support this nomination.

Thank you.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

PROTECTIVE SERVICES FOR SUPREME COURT JUSTICES AND COURT PERSONNEL

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I send a bill to the desk on behalf of myself and Senator DOLE and ask that it be read for the first time.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there would certainly be no objection on my part to this, and I would simply like to know what the bill does.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, we passed a bill for 1 year to give the Supreme Court protection, the Supreme Court employees, and this bill extends that protection permanently.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no reservation and no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2814) to preserve the authority of the Supreme Court police to provide protective services for Justices and Court personnel.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be read a second time.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have not seen the bill. I may be very much in support of the bill. But in order that the Senator may be assisted in getting it on the calendar, which he is attempting to do, under rule XIV, I make the appropriate objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. THURMOND. As I understand it, the bill will be here——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the next legislative day.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, at the request of the Chief Justice of the United States, I am introducing legislation to preserve the authority of the Supreme Court Police to provide protective services for Justices and Court personnel off of Court premises.

In 1982, Congress formally recognized the authority of the Supreme Court Police to carry firearms and to provide a statutory basis for the protection of Court personnel off of Court premises. That legislation included a sunset provision which automatically terminated such authority on December 29, 1985. Last year, Congress extended the authority for 1 additional year, through December 26, 1986. This legislation I am introducing today would make the authority of the Supreme Court Police protection permanent. The increased need for off-premises protection of Justices and Court personnel, the efficient manner in which the police have handled security over the last 4 years, and the relatively low administrative cost of such protection indicate that this service should continue.

The enactment of this bill providing for the permanent legal status of police protection would be of great assistance in ensuring the continued efficient administration of the Supreme Court.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill, transmittal letter, and accompanying materials from the Supreme Court of the United States be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2814

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 9(c) of the Act entitled "An Act relating to the policing of the building and grounds of the Supreme Court of the United States," approved August 18, 1949 (40 U.S.C. § 13N(c)) is amended—(1) by striking the first sentence; and (2) in the second sentence by striking "such subsection" and inserting "subsection (a)(2)(A)."

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, August 4, 1986.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am transmitting, for your consideration, a draft bill to preserve the status and jurisdiction of the police force which serves the Supreme Court of the United States. This draft bill would continue the authority of the Supreme Court Police to protect Supreme Court Justices, personnel and official guests on and off the Supreme Court grounds as provided by 40 U.S.C. § 13n. The bill also continues the requirement that the Marshal of the Court annually file a special report with Congress on the administrative costs associated with providing protection outside the Court grounds.

The police officers of the Supreme Court have rendered outstanding protection for the Justices, employees and premises of the Supreme Court since it moved from quarters in the United States Capitol to the Supreme Court Building in 1935. In 1949, Congress accorded the Supreme Court Police legal recognition and established their jurisdiction as a special force to patrol the Supreme Court building and grounds, just as the Capitol Police provide similar services for your buildings and grounds.

In 1982, Congress amended 40 U.S.C. § 13n to formally recognize the authority of the Supreme Court Police to carry firearms and to provide an explicit statutory basis for the protection of Court personnel outside the Court premises. That legislation, however, included a provision which automatically terminated the Supreme Court Police's authority outside the Court grounds on December 29, 1985. In 1985, Congress extended the Supreme Court Police's authority for one additional year, through December 26, 1986.

The enclosed draft bill preserves the authority of the Supreme Court Police that was formally recognized by Congress in 1982, and extended in 1985, by eliminating the sunset provision and making the authority of the police force permanent. The proposal is supported by the increased need for off-premises protection of Justices and Court employees, the efficient manner in which the Police have handled security problems over the past four years, and the relatively low administrative cost of such protection. The draft bill continues the requirement that the Marshal submit annual reports to Congress on the cost of such protection. A memorandum is attached which explains the proposed draft bill. Also enclosed are copies of all four special annual reports filed to date.

The enactment of the proposed bill would be of great assistance in ensuring the continued efficient administration of the Supreme Court by according the Supreme Court Police the permanent legal status and recognition merited by the nature of its present duties. I would therefore be grateful for whatever consideration Congress might give this matter. The staff of the Supreme Court will, of course, provide any assistance the Congress may request in reviewing this proposal.

With warm personal regards, I am
Respectfully,

WARREN E. BURGER.

SUPPORTING MEMORANDUM FOR PROPOSED BILL TO CONTINUE THE AUTHORITY AND JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT POLICE TO PROTECT JUSTICES, COURT PERSONNEL AND GUESTS OUTSIDE THE COURT PREMISES

PURPOSE

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to continue the authority of the Supreme Court Police under 40 U.S.C. § 13n to protect Justices, Court employees and official visitors on and off the Supreme Court grounds.

BACKGROUND

In 1800, the Federal Government moved to Washington, D.C., a new city and permanent capital. Since no provisions were made for a Judiciary building, the Court was loaned space by Congress in the new Capitol building. At that time, the United States Capitol Police provided security for the Court. After numerous relocations of the Court within the Capitol, President William H. Taft persuaded Congress to authorize construction of a permanent "home" for the Court. Under the leadership of Chief Justice Hughes, construction proceeded from 1932 to 1935, when the Court was finally able to occupy its own building directly across the street from the United States Capitol.

In 1935, the United States Capitol Police detailed a small contingent of officers from the Capitol to provide security for the Justices and Court employees, as well as the new building and grounds. Those officers, who formed the nucleus for the security force of the Supreme Court, were appointed as special police officers by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia under 30 Stat. 1057. Their authority to enforce the law on the Supreme Court premises remained unquestioned until September 1948.

In September 1948, the Corporation Counsel of the District of Columbia, realizing that the statute was ambiguous with respect to appointment of special police officers, issued an order that all special police commissions were to expire December 31, 1948. By the request of Chief Justice Vinson, the expiration date was extended to provide time to pass legislation providing for "policing of the building and grounds of the Supreme Court of the United States." Under the direction of the Chief Justice, the Marshal of the Court, Thomas E. Waggerman, worked with the leadership of both houses of Congress and with Mr. Perley, Legislative Counsel to the House of Representatives, to formulate legislation and put it into effect. Their resulting bill was patterned after S. 2405—Public Law 570 of the 79th Congress (2nd Session)—the intention being "to place (the Supreme Court) police force, within its jurisdictional limitation, on practically the same 'power and authority' basis under which the United States Capitol Police operates."

In 1982, Congress formally recognized the authority of the Supreme Court Police to protect the Justices, Court personnel and official visitors outside the Court premises. The new legislation provided specific statutory authorization to carry firearms and expanded the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court Police to "any part of the United States." The legislation also included limitations, however. A provision was inserted which automatically terminated the Supreme Court Police's authority to protect the Justices outside Court grounds on December 29, 1985. Another provision requires a special annual report to Congress from the Marshal of the Supreme Court concerning the administrative cost of such protection.

In December, 1985 Congress extended through December 26, 1986, the authority of the Supreme Court Police to protect the Justices, Court personnel and official visitors, outside the Court premises.

NEED FOR UPDATED LEGISLATION

Since Congress recognized the Supreme Court Police's jurisdiction outside the Court grounds in 1982, threats of violence against the Justices and the Court have increased. These incidents have created an increased need for the Supreme Court Police to provide protection to Justices when they are away from the Court building.

Prior to 1982, arrangements were made to have certain Supreme Court Officers deputized as Special Deputy United States Marshals in order to ensure that they could carry firearms away from the Court. This arrangement, although only occasionally invoked, was not satisfactory to either the United States Marshal's Service or the Supreme Court. The present need for constant protection of the Justices and employees outside the Court grounds cannot be met by the ad hoc appointment of special United States Marshals.

Another factor contributing to the Supreme Court Police's need to carry firearms off Court premises is the location of the Court's parking lot for employees, approximately one-half block east of the Supreme Court building. Supreme Court Police officers have an obligation to protect employees going to and from the parking lot, particularly late at night. If the current authorization is allowed to lapse, officers would not have clear statutory authority to carry firearms as they walk the one-half block to and from the parking lot. The need for officers to carry weapons is supported by the fact that several years ago a Supreme Court employee was shot to death within a few blocks of the Supreme Court.

Over the last four years, the Supreme Court Police have provided the Justices and Court employees with the necessary protection at a minimal cost. Since the 1982 amendments to 40 U.S.C. § 13n, there have been only 30 requests for protection beyond the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area at a total additional cost of $2,711.30. Officers providing off-premise protection perform such duties in addition to their regularly assigned tasks on the Supreme Court grounds. In this way, most trips in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area are accommodated without the payment of overtime or the need to call on additional personnel. If the Supreme Court Police's present authorization is allowed to lapse, the Supreme Court Police may not be permitted to protect the Justices off Court premises. Nonetheless, the need for protection will remain and alternate arrangements for security are likely to be more expensive.

Over the last five years, the Supreme Court has made substantial changes in the procedures used to hire, train and educate its Police Officers to assure that the Justices, Court employees and official guests receive the best possible protection. All Police Officers receive basic training at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center (Glynco) in Brunswick, Georgia. After this eight (8) week program, Police Officers receive another 18 weeks of on-the-job field training, during which they are evaluated weekly. In addition, Police Officers receive 24 hours of in-service training every year and attend firearms training and recertification programs twice a year. Officers selected to transport Justices (within the limits defined by applicable appropriations) and official guests receive special training in safe driving and evasive driving techniques. The Supreme Court's training program was patterened after, and parallels, the training practices of the United States Capitol Police and the United States Secret Service (Uniform Division).

Finally, the Court has made every effort to ensure that proper security is provided at minimal cost. In light of the increase in the number of reported threats to Court personnel, the fact that off-permises security expenditure has only cost $2,711.30 in four years indicates that the authority has been sparingly invoked. In any event, the annual reports provide a more than adquate safeguard.

SPECIFIC STATUTORY CHANGES PROPOSED

The proposed legislation would eliminate the first sentence of 40 U.S.C. § 13n(c) which automatically terminates as of December 26, 1986, the authority of the Supreme Court Police to protest Justices, Court personnel and official guests outside the court premises. The provision for a separate annual report on the administrative cost of such protection is retained to allow for Congressional oversight.

CONCLUSION

This proposed bill is necessary to ensure the continued protection of the Justices, employees and official visitors of the Supreme Court. The Court's experience over the last four years reveals that the Supreme Court Police have provided the requisite security at a minimal cost and that there has been no abuse of the authority. The enactment of this proposed legislation would be of great assistance in ensuring the continued efficient administration of the Supreme Court Police by according to Supreme Court Police the permanent legal status and recognition merited by the nature of its present duties.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, February 28, 1983.

Re: Annual Report of the Marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States Regarding Administrative Cost of Carrying Out Duties Under 40 U.S.C. 13n(c).

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I hereby transmit, pursuant to 40 U.S.C. 13n(c), the Annual Report to Congress on the cost of the protective function provided by the Supreme Court police to Justices, official guests and employees of the Supreme Court. This report is required by section 9(c) of H.R. 6204, which was passed by the 97th Congress and enacted into law on December 29, 1982, as Public Law 97-390. H.R. 6204 amended 40 U.S.C. 13 to clarify the jurisdiction and authority of the Supreme Court Police.

The subcommittee discussion surrounding the enactment of this bill and the legislative history indicated that only incremental protective costs resulting from the enactment of this new legislation need to be reported. In other words, the cost of routine protection provided by the Supreme Court Police prior to the enactment of this new legislation need not be reported. Only additional activity resulting from the enactment of this bill which is not routine and which is outside of the Washington, D.C., vicinity need be reported.

Therefore, we have implemented an accounting system to record all protection provided outside a fifteen mile radius of Washington, D.C., excluding Dulles and Baltimore International airports. A fifteen mile radius has been selected because the Chief Justice of the United States suggested the fifteen mile radius in his September 29, 1982 letter to Senator Thurmond, which appeared in the October 1, 1982 issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on p. S 13012 along with the amendment requiring this annual report. Because all Justices currently reside within fifteen miles of the court, that radius was selected to avoid incorporating routine costs into the reporting system that predated the bill. For the same reason, transportation to and from Dulles and Baltimore-Washington International airports was similarly excluded. Should the Congress have a different interpretation of this new legislation please advise and I will try to accommodate your needs. Absent instructions to the contrary, we shall assume that our reporting system comports with the intent of Congress.

A breakdown of the cost of the protective function is contained in the enclosed report. As you will note, there were no incremental costs resulting from the protective function during the reporting period from December 29, 1982, to February 15, 1983, and protective services were not provided outside of a 15 mile radius of the Supreme Court (excluding Dulles and Baltimore International airports) during that period of time.

Sincerely,

ALFRED WONG,
Marshal of the Court.

Re Annual Report of the Marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States Regarding Administrative Cost of Carrying Out Duties Under 40 U.S.C. 13n(c).

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I hereby transmit, pursuant to 40 U.S.C. 13n(c), the Annual Report to Congress on the cost of the protective function provided by the Supreme Court police to Justices, official guests and employees of the Supreme Court. This report is required by section 9(c) of H.R. 6204, which was passed by the 97th Congress and enacted into law on December 29, 1982, as Public Law 97-390. H.R. 6204 amended 40 U.S.C. 13 to clarify the jurisdiction and authority of the Supreme Court Police.

The subcommittee discussion surrounding the enactment of this bill and the legislative history indicated that only incremental protective costs resulting from the enactment of this new legislation need to be reported. In other words, the cost of routine protection provided by the Supreme Court Police prior to the enactment of this new legislation need not be reported. Only additional activity resulting from enactment of this bill which is not routine and which is outside of the Washington, D.C., vicinity need be reported.

As you are aware, in our February 28, 1983 report, we implemented an accounting system to record all protection provided outside a fifteen mile radius of Washington, D.C., excluding Dulles and Baltimore International airports. A fifteen mile radius was selected because Chief Justice of the United States suggested the fifteen mile radius in the September 29, 1982 letter to Senator Thurmond, which appeared in the October 1, 1982 issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on p. 13012 along with the amendment requiring this annual report. Because all Justices currently reside within fifteen miles of the court, that radius was selected to avoid incorporating routine costs into the reporting system that predated the bill. For the same reason, transportation to and from Dulles and Baltimore-Washington International airports was similarly excluded. Absent any information to the contrary, we shall assume that our previous report comported with the intent of Congress.

A breakdown of the cost of the protective function is contained in the enclosed report. As you will note, there were only minor incremental costs resulting from the protective function during the reporting period from February, 16, 1983, to February 15, 1984.

Sincerely,

ALFRED WONG,
Marshal of the Court.

PROCEDURE ON NOMINATIONS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, no cloture motion will be filed today. We do not have an agreement to vote on Tuesday, but I hope we can vote on Tuesday on both the Rehnquist and Scalia nominations.

We will have debate again on Monday, and I hope there will be an appropriate number of hours on Monday for particularly those who oppose the nomination to make their case.

I know that the distinguished chairman of the committee, Senator THURMOND, will be present on Monday—or his designee will be here, in any event—if there should be a request or need for a dialog or debate concerning allegations, or whatever might be made. It is my hope that we will have a vote on Tuesday.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, in response to the statement of the able majority leader, I will say that I will be here every day next week, and we hope this matter can be disposed of on Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the distinguished chairman.

ORDERS FOR MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1986

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes on Monday, September 15, the reading of the Journal be dispensed with; that no resolutions come over under the rule; that the call of the calendar be dispensed with; that following the recognition of two leaders under the standing order, there be special orders in favor of Senators PROXMIRE and LEVIN, to be followed by a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond 12 noon, with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each; provided, further, that the morning hour be deemed to have expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CALENDAR

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I inquire of the distinguished minority leader if he is in a position to pass any or all of the following calendar items: Calendar Nos. 768, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, and 905.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, all the measures on the Legislative Calendar that have just been identified by the distinguished majority leader have been cleared by all Members on this side, and we are ready to proceed to action thereon.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar items just identified.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS SERVICE AUTHORIZATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2397) to authorize appropriations for the Public Buildings Service of the General Services Administration for fiscal year 1987, which had been reported from the Committee on Environment and Public Works, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Public Buildings Authorization Act of 1986".

SEC. 2. No appropriation, including any appropriation from the fund established pursuant to section 210(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, shall be made by Congress or obligated by the Administrator unless it has been authorized by Congress in accordance with this Act.

SEC. 3. (a) No public building construction, renovation, repair, or alteration shall be commenced unless an appropriation has first been made in the same fiscal year for which such appropriation is authorized and for the estimated cost of completion of such construction, renovation, repair, or alteration.

(b) Beginning in fiscal year 1988, no lease shall be entered into unless the authority to enter into contracts has first been made for the maximum cost of such lease over the entire term in such amounts as are specified in annual appropriations Acts and in the fiscal year for which such lease is authorized.

SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1987 not to exceed in the aggregate the amount of $2,404,437,000 from revenues and collections deposited into the fund pursuant to section 210(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended (40 U.S.C. 490(f)), for the real property management and related activities of the Public Buildings Service of which:

SEC. 6. Ten per centum of the funds made available pursuant to this Act to the Public Buildings Service for renovation, alteration, and repair of public buildings and for payment of leases on buildings shall be available for repair or alteration projects and leases, respectively, not otherwise authorized by this Act, if the Administrator certifies that the space to be repaired, altered, or leased resulted from emergency building conditions or changing or additional programs of Federal agencies. Funds for such projects may not be obligated until thirty days after the submission by the Administrator of an explanatory statement to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate and the Committee on Public Works and Transportation of the House of Representatives. The explanatory statement shall, among other things, include a statement of the reasons why such project or lease cannot be deferred for authorization in the next succeeding fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL ALOPECIA AREATA AWARENESS WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 299) to designate the week of December 7, 1986, through December 13, 1986, as "National Alopecia Areata Awareness Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 299

Whereas alopecia areata is a serious disease affecting approximately two million people;

Whereas alopecia areata, which usually afflicts children and young adults, causes severe and often permanent hair loss;

Whereas the coordinated efforts of support groups in forty-two States have helped thousands of people cope with the physical and emotional problems caused by alopecia areata;

Whereas much of the trauma associated with alopecia areata could be reduced through greater public awareness, understanding, and education; and

Whereas the cause of alopecia areata is unknown, and promising research efforts to find a cure for the disease should be promoted: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of December 7, 1986, through December 13, 1986, is designated as "National Alopecia Areata Awareness Week" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL FETAL ALCOHOL SYNDROME AWARENESS WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 373) designating the week beginning May 19, 1987, as "National Fetal Alcohol Syndrome Awareness Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 373

Whereas fetal alcohol syndrome is one of the three major known causes of birth defects with accompanying mental retardation in the United States, and the only preventable one;

Whereas fetal alcohol syndrome can result in such serious health problems as: deficiencies in prenatal and postnatal growth that are associated with mental retardation; developmental disabilities that may cause an infant to experience delays in learning to walk and speak; and heart defects, including defects in the wall between the pumping chambers of the heart;

Whereas in cases in which fetal alcohol syndrome is avoided, infants may still experience alcohol-related birth effects, known as fetal alcohol effects, which are a series of health problems that include increased irritability during the newborn period and hyperactivity;

Whereas the discovery of fetal alcohol syndrome as a major health problem is a recent occurrence, and many questions regarding the illness remain unanswered;

Whereas there has never been an infant born with fetal alcohol syndrome whose mother did not consume alcohol during pregnancy;

Whereas fetal alcohol syndrome can be prevented if pregnant women and women considering pregnancy abstain from alcohol consumption; and

Whereas the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service has issued an advisory stating that pregnant women and women considering pregnancy should not consume alcohol: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning May 10, 1987, hereby is designated "National Fetal Alcohol Syndrome Awareness Week", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate activities.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MONTH OF DEVELOPMENTALLY DISABLED PERSONS

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 389) to designate March 1987 as the "Month of Developmentally Disabled Persons," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 389

Whereas there are 3,900,000 children and adults with developmental disabilities in the United States;

Whereas such persons have severe chronic disabilities attributed to mental or physical impairment which begin early in life and result in substantial limitations in major life activities such as self care, mobility, language, learning, and self direction;

Whereas persons with developmental disabilities need interdisciplinary or generic service and treatment for extended periods of their lives;

Whereas persons with developmental disabilities have the capability to become more independent and economically self-sufficient;

Whereas the services and expertise provided by professional personnel, parents, and concerned citizens enable persons with developmental disabilities to participate more freely in education, employment and community living;

Whereas increasingly more persons with developmental disabilities are living in the community enabling them to live less restricted lives; and

Whereas through increased national awareness of such programs, the public will better understand the potential and needs of persons with developmental disabilities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That March 1987 is designated as the "Month of Developmentally Disabled Persons" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States and all Federal, State, and local government officials to observe the month with appropriate programs and activities.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMERICAN INDIAN WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 390) to authorize and request the President to proclaim the week of November 23, 1986, to November 30, 1986, as "American Indian Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and the preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 390

Whereas American Indians were the original inhabitants of the lands that now constitute the United States;

Whereas American Indians have made a unique and essential contribution to the United States;

Whereas the people of the United States should be reminded of the assistance American Indians provided to the Founding Fathers of our Nation;

Whereas the people of the United States should consider the present relationship between American Indians and the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to proclaim the week of November 23, 1986, to November 30, 1986, as "American Indian Week" and to call upon Federal, State, and local governments, interested groups and organizations, and the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MADE IN AMERICA MONTH

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 392) to designate the month of December 1986 as "Made in America Month," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 392

Whereas the trade deficit in our country in 1985 reached a record level of $148,500,000,000;

Whereas the 1986 trade deficit is predicted to increase still further;

Whereas over 1,661,000 jobs have been lost in the manufacturing sector since 1972 as a direct result of imports;

Whereas imports now account for more than 20 per centum of all manufactured products sold in the United States;

Whereas imports continue to grow at an increasing rate and constitute a larger and larger percentage of all manufactured goods sold in this Nation;

Whereas the manufacturing sector of the United States economy is shrinking dramatically as a result of imports;

Whereas a continuing flood of imports of manufactured goods could permanently reduce the manufacturing capacity of our Nation and, as a direct result, threaten our ability to respond to a national emergency and make the United States highly vulnerable to embargoes of a wide range of products necessary for the national defense and the smooth functioning of the national economy;

Whereas there is little awareness of the country of origin of most products sold in the United States; and

Whereas United States consumers should be aware of the impact that their purchase decisions could have on their own jobs and the economy as a whole: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating the month of December 1986, "Made in America Month" and to call upon Federal, State, and local government agencies, and the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL CHILDREN'S TELEVISION AWARENESS WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 394) to designate the week of October 6, 1986, through October 12, 1986, as "National Children's Television Awareness Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 394

Whereas children spend an average of four hours of each day watching television and will have spent almost fifteen thousand hours watching television by the time they finish high school;

Whereas television can create an intellectual and emotional environment which can play a critical role in shaping the development and perception of the world of a child;

Whereas television has the power to promote and reinforce the pro-social values parents try to teach children regarding health and safety;

Whereas television often serves as a companion and babysitter for children with working parents;

Whereas many people do not realize the great potential of television for enriching family life and for improving the education of children;

Whereas families need to be shown how to use television as an educational resource;

Whereas national attention must be focused on the positive role that television can play in child development to insure that broadcasters uphold the obligation to serve the child audience;

Whereas schools, libraries, religious institutions, and community groups need to work with broadcasters in helping parents and children take advantage of the potential of television as an educational and learning device; and

Whereas greater awareness must be achieved regarding how television can be effectively utilized and further developed to enhance the education of children: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of October 12, 1986, through October 18, 1986, is designated as "National Children's Television Awareness Week" and the President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to designate the week of October 12, 1986, through October 18, 1986, as "National Children's Television Awareness Week.".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UNITED STATES-CANADA DAYS OF PEACE AND FRIENDSHIP

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 402) designating July 2 and 3, 1987, as the "United States-Canada Days of Peace and Friendship," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 402

Whereas, since the War of 1812, the people of the United States and Canada have peacefully shared and extended the longest border in the world;

Whereas more cultural and economic exchanges are made between the United States and Canada than any other two countries;

Whereas the United States and Canada have welcomed immigrants from all nations everywhere, resulting in rich and similar cultures in each country;

Whereas the United States and Canada share common ideals and institutions, including freedom, democracy, human rights, justice under law, and an ardent desire for a peaceful world;

Whereas the United States and Canada have been allies against tyranny in two World Wars;

Whereas the United States and Canada have confronted differences between the two countries with diplomacy and goodwill;

Whereas the United States and Canada are rich in resources and, together, represent an ever-more-powerful prospect for world economic progress;

Whereas the United States and Canada demonstrate the dynamism of democracy and, together, contribute to establishing lasting peace in the world;

Whereas a similar resolution commemorating continued peace and friendship between the United States and Canada has been proposed in the Canadian Parliament;

Whereas in Canada July 1 is Canada Day;

Whereas in the United States July 4 is Independence Day; and

Whereas the days between Canada Day and Independence Day are appropriate annual days on which to commemorate the friendship between the United States and Canada: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That July 2 and 3, 1987, are designated as "United States-Canada Days of Peace and Friendship", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such days with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL OUTREACH TO THE RURAL DISABLED DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 406) to designate October 4, 1986, as "National Outreach to the Rural Disabled Day" was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 406

Whereas there are approximately eight million five hundred thousand disabled persons in rural America;

Whereas, in 1984, farm residents suffered approximately two hundred and ninety thousand disabling injuries and approximately five hundred and sixty thousand agricultural workers were hindered in their farming operations because of permanent disabilities;

Whereas disability is proportionately more prevalent in rural areas than in urban areas and the rural disabled are more disadvantaged than their urban counterparts;

Whereas little attention has been given to the unique problems faced by the rural disabled in the United States; and

Whereas there is a need to focus attention on the unmet needs of the rural disabled, to underscore their potential, and to encourage outreach programs by rural communities to their disabled members: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 4, 1986, is hereby designated "National Outreach to the Rural Disabled Day", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe this day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL CIVIL RIGHTS DAY

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 686) to designate August 12, 1986, as "National Civil Rights Day," which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment:

On page 2, line 3, strike "1986", and insert "1987".

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The amendment to the preamble was agreed to.

The preamble, as amended, was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, as amended, is as follows:

H.J. RES. 686

Whereas the people of the United States are the heirs and beneficiaries of the courageous men and women who have struggled to achieve legal and social equality in the United States for men and women of every race, religion, and country;

Whereas such men and women include Martin Luther King Jr., Susan B. Anthony, and Mary McLeod Bethune;

Whereas the people of the United States should not forget that constant vigilance is necessary to ensure that civil rights are protected;

Whereas the people of the United States should not forget that much yet remains to be accomplished with respect to securing civil rights for all the people of the United States;

Whereas, in August 1963, Martin Luther King Jr. led a march in Washington, D.C., to demonstrate the need for legislation to protect the civil rights of the people of the United States;

Whereas August 12, 1987, is an appropriate date on which to commemorate the progress made in securing civil rights and the need for continued progress;

Whereas, at noon on such date, it would be appropriate for the people of the United States to pause for a moment of silence to pay tribute to the men and women who have struggled to secure civil rights for all the people of the United States;

Whereas, during the moment of silence, it would be appropriate for all church bells to ring 11 times as a reminder that the hour is late with respect to continuing progress in securing civil rights for all the people of the United States; and

Whereas the National Civil Rights Museum and Hall of Fame will be constructed in Gary, Indiana, to pay continued tribute to the fallen national heroes of civil rights and the cause which they embraced: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That August 12, 1987, is designated "National Civil Rights Day", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution to designate August 12, 1987, as 'National Civil Rights Day.' "

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL HOUSING WEEK

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 692) to designate the week of October 19, 1986, through October 26, 1986, "National Housing Week," was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ANTI-KICKBACK ENFORCEMENT ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 890, S. 2250, to strengthen the prohibition of kickbacks relating to subcontracts under Federal Government contracts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2250) to strengthen the prohibition of kickbacks relating to subcontracts under Federal Government contracts.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Governmental Affairs, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Anti-Kickback Enforcement Act of 1986".

SEC. 2. (a) The Act entitled "An Act to eliminate the practice by subcontractors, under cost-plus-a-fixed fee or cost reimbursable contracts of the United States, of paying fees or kick-backs, or of granting gifts or gratuities to employees of a cost-plus-fixed-fee or cost reimbursable prime contractors or of higher tier subcontractors for the purpose of securing the award of subcontracts or orders", approved March 8,

1946 (41 U.S.C. 51-54), is amended to read as follows:

"SHORT TITLE

"SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the 'Anti-Kick-back Act of 1986'.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 2. As used in this Act:

"(1) 'Contracting agency', when used with respect to a prime contractor, means any department, agency, or establishment of the United States which enters into a prime contract with a prime contractor.

"(2) 'Kickback' means any money, fee, commission, credit, gift, gratuity, thing of value, or compensation of any kind which is provided, directly or indirectly, to any prime contractor, prime contractor employee, subcontractor, or subcontractor employee for the purpose of obtaining or acknowledging favorable treatment in connection with a prime contract or in connection with a subcontract relating to a prime contract.

"(3) 'Person' means a corporation, partnership, business association of any kind, trust, joint-stock company, or individual.

"(4) 'Prime contract' means a contract or contractual action entered into by the United States for the purpose of obtaining supplies, materials, equipment, or services of any kind.

"(5) 'Prime contractor' means a person who has entered into a prime contract with the United States.

"(6) 'Prime contractor employee means any officer, partner, employee, or agent of a prime contractor.

"(7) 'Subcontract' means a contract or contractual action entered into by a prime contractor or subcontractor for the purpose of obtaining supplies, materials, equipment, or services of any kind under a prime contract.

"(8) 'Subcontractor'—

"(A) means any person, other than the prime contractor, who offers to furnish or furnishes any supplies, materials, equipment, or services of any kind under a prime contract or a subcontract entered into in connection with such prime contract; and

"(B) includes any person who offers to furnish or furnishes general supplies to the prime contractor or a higher tier subcontractor.

"(9) 'Subcontractor employee' means any officer, partner, employee, or agent of a subcontractor.

"PROHIBITED CONDUCT; PRESUMPTION THAT PROHIBITED CONDUCT OCCURRED

"SEC. 3. (a) It is prohibited for any person—

"(1) to pay, attempt to pay, or offer to pay any kickback;

"(2) to solicit, accept, or attempt to accept any kickback; or

"(3) to include, directly or indirectly, the amount of any kickback prohibited by clause (1) or (2) in the contract price charged by a subcontractor to a prime contractor or a higher tier subcontractor or in the contract price charged by a prime contractor to the United States.

"(b) In a civil suit or administrative action commenced under this Act, there shall be a conclusive presumption that the amount of any kickback paid or accepted in connection with a prime contract or subcontract in violation of subsection (a)(1) or (a)(2) has been included in the price of such contract and has been ultimately borne by the United States.

"CRIMINAL PENALTIES

"SEC. 4. (a) Any individual who knowingly engages in conduct prohibited by section 3(a) shall be fined not more than $250,000 or be imprisoned for not more than 10 years or both.

"(b) Any person (other than an individual) which knowingly engages in conduct prohibited by section 3(a) shall be fined not more than $1,000,000.

"CIVIL ACTIONS

"SEC. 5. (a)(1) The United States may bring a civil suit against any person who violates section 3(a).

"(2) In a civil suit brought under paragraph (1) the United States may recover—

"(A) in the case of a person who knowingly engages in conduct prohibited by section 3(a), an anount equal to the sum of—

"(i) twice the amount of each kickback involved in the violation; and

"(ii) not more than $10,000 for each occurrence of prohibited conduct; or

"(B) in any other case, the amount of each kickback involved in the violation.

"(b) A civil action under this section shall be barred unless the action is commenced within 6 years after the later of (1) the date on which the prohibited conduct establishing the cause of action occurred, and (2) the date on which the United States should reasonably have become aware that the prohibited conduct had occurred.

"TERMINATION OF CONTRACTS

"SEC. 6. If a violation of section 3(a) has occurred in connection with a prime contract, as determined by the head of the contracting agency, the head of such agency may, by written notice to the prime contractor, terminate the prime contract for default. Any such termination shall be governed by the Contract Disputes Act of 1978.

"ADMINISTRATIVE OFFSETS

"SEC. 7. (a) The United States may recover the amount of any kickback paid, accepted, or charged in violation of section 3(a) by offsetting such amount against any moneys owed by the United States—

"(1) to the prime contractor, prime contractor employee, subcontractor, or subcontractor employee which included such amount in a contract price; or

"(2) to the recipient or recipients of such kickback.

"(b)(1) Upon the written directions of the contracting officer for a prime contract, the prime contractor shall withhold from sums the prime contractor owes any subcontractor the amount of any kickback found to have been paid, accepted, or charged in violation of section 3(a).

"(2) Upon the written direction of the contracting officer for a prime contact, the prime contractor (A) shall pay all sums withheld under paragrph (1) to the contracting agency, or (B) shall retain such sums, if the United States has, by administrative offset under subsection (a), collected such sums from the prime contractor, and shall notify the contracting officer of the retention and the reasons for the retention.

"CONTRACTOR RESPONSIBILITIES

"SEC. 8. (a) Each contracting agency shall include in each prime contract awarded by such agency a requirement that the prime contractor shall have in place and follow reasonable procedure designed to prevent and detect violations of section 3(a).

"(b) Each contracting agency shall include in each prime contact awarded by such agency a requirement that the prime contractor shall cooperate fully with any Federal Government agency investigating a violation of section 3(a).

"(c)(1)(A) Whenever a prime contractor or subcontractor has reasonable grounds to believe that a violation of section 3(a) may have occurred, the prime contractor or subcontractor shall promptly report the potential violation in writing.

"(B) A contractor shall make the reports required by subparagraph (A) to the inspector general of the contracting agency, the head of the contracting agency if the agency does not have an inspector general, or the Department of Justice.

"(2) In the case of an administrative or contractual action to suspend or debar any person who is eligible to enter into contracts with the Federal Government, evidence that such person has supplied information to the United States pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be favorable evidence of such person's responsibility for the purposes of Federal procurement laws and regulations.

"INSPECTION AUTHORITY

"SEC. 9. For the purpose of ascertaining whether there has been a violation of section 3(a) with respect to any prime contract, the General Accounting Office and the inspector general of the contracting agency, or a representative of such contracting agency designated by the head of such agency if the agency does not have an inspector general, may inspect the facilities and audit the books and records of any prime contractor or subcontractor under a prime contract awarded by such agency.".

(b) The title of such Act is amended to read as follows: "An Act to prohibit the paying or offering of kickbacks to any contractor or contractor employee in connection with Federal Government contracting actions.".

SEC. 3. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the Anti-Kickback Act of 1986 (as set out in section 2(a)) shall take effect with respect to conduct described in section 3(a) of such Act which occurs on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

AMENDMENT NO. 2800

(Purpose: To make clarifying amendments)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senators COHEN and LEVIN to the committee substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], for Mr. LEVIN and Mr. COHEN, proposes an amendment numbered 2800.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 11, line 2, insert "improperly" after "of".

On page 14, line 1, insert "became aware or" after "States".

On page 14, strike out lines 3 through 9.

On page 14, line 11, strike out "Sec. 7." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 6.".

On page 15, line 5, strike out "of" and all that follows through "retention" on line 6 and insert in lieu thereof "when the retention of funds has actually occurred.".

On page 15, line 8, strike out "Sec. 8." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 7.".

On page 15, line 12, insert "in its own operations and direct business relationships" after "section 3(a)".

On page 16, line 9, strike out "Sec. 9." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 8.".

On page 16, line 14, insert "shall have access to and" after "general,".

On page 16, line 15, insert ", including any electronic data or records," after "records".

On page 17, line 1, strike out "8" and insert in lieu thereof "7".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2800) was agreed to.

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, S. 2250, the Anti-Kickback Enforcement Act of 1986, is a bill designed to strengthen existing law on subcontractor kickbacks. I introduced it with the unanimous, bipartisan support of the members of the Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management. An amended version was approved by the Governmental Affairs Committee members also on a unanimous and bipartisan basis. The cosponsors of the bill are Senators COHEN, RUDMAN, CHILES, DURENBERGER, BOREN, BINGAMAN, NUNN, and WILSON. I want to thank in particular Senator COHEN, my good friend from Maine, for his leadership on this issue and for the long hours and hard work that he and his excellent staff have spent on behalf of this legislation. I also want to thank my friend from Delaware, Senator ROTH, for his help and support in this matter.

The impetus for the bill is the shocking story of subcontractor kickbacks in the defense industry. It is a table of widespread corruption where what counts in the award of too many defense subcontracts is not the price or the performance or the product but the payoff.

Just this summer, reports of kickback scandals in the defense industry have made the news across the country. In California, 19 individuals and 1 supplier were indicted for kickbacks affecting the space shuttle rocket booster, the B-1 bomber, the F-16 and F-18 fighter airplanes, tactical communications satellites, radar surveillance systems, several classified weapons programs, and other defense procurements. In Massachusetts, officers of one of the largest privately owned machine shops on the east coast were indicted for compiling a "slush fund" of more than $750,000 to pay kickbacks to the employees of a major defense firm. In Virginia, a senior buyer at a shipbuilding firm pleaded guilty to demanding kickbacks from two subcontractors, one of which had reportedly paid him more than $150,000 over a 2-year period.

Subcontractor kickback schemes span the width of this country, undermining legitimate competition in the Federal procurement system. They push honest subcontractors out of the marketplace, inflate contract costs by at least the amount of the kickbacks being paid, and may lead to the procurement of shoddy goods. Unless we take action to stop them, kickback schemes will continue to corrupt Government purchasing.

The legislation before us today, the Anti-Kickback Enforcement Act of 1986, is an attempt to meet the kickback problem head on. It is the product of our investigation into the scope of kickback fraud in the defense industry and the need for new legislation to stop it. This investigation, conducted by the Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, resulted in two hearings in February and June of this year.

In the hearing held on February 27, witness after witness told our subcommittee that subcontractor kickbacks were a nationwide, well-entrenched problem in the defense industry. The U.S. attorney from Los Angeles testified that kickback schemes had:

> Corrupted the subcontracting process at most, if not all, defense contractors, and most, if not all, defense procurement programs within the Central District of California.

He estimated that, in California, "up to 50 percent of the buyers or frontline procurement personnel at prime contractors take kickbacks in return for issuing subcontracts." The U.S. attorney from New Orleans testified that subcontractor kickbacks were "a way of life" at a nearby shipyard and described 26 convictions obtained to date. Representatives from the FBI, IRS, DOD Inspector General's Office, and Defense Contract Audit Agency provided additional facts, figures and descriptions of kickback schemes taking place throughout the United States.

We heard, for example, about a subcontractor whose president had to pay $5,000 cash to get his company on a list of bidders for Navy subcontracts. The same gentleman was later forced to take out a second mortgage on his home to meet the kickbacks demands placed on his company. In another case, a prime contractor employee was so brazen about his kickback collections that he instructed a subcontractor to give him a promissory note for certain overdue payoffs so that, if the vendor died, the employee could collect from his estate. We also heard about an employee who set up a dummy corporation to launder his kickback payments—it was appropriately named "Profit Maker Enterprises."

Witnesses also described kickbacks affecting key defense procurement programs such as the Stealth bomber program. When my fellow Senators asked whether the quality and integrity of our weapon programs were being compromised by this corruption, no witness could say with certainty that they were not.

At the June 11 hearing, the subcommittee traced the employment histories of 25 prime contractor employees who had been strongly suspected or convicted of taking kickbacks. We learned that at least one-third of these employees had found new defense procurement positions even when under investigation by the FBI, a grand jury or their employer, and that many had taken kickbacks at more than one job.

The hearings also exposed the dissatisfaction law enforcement officials have with respect to the only Federal law now on the books designed to deal with the problem—the Anti-Kickback Act of 1946. This statute, first enacted after World War II, hasn't been amended in 25 years. Instead of using it to punish wrongdoers or to recover kickback costs, prosecutors turn to more general laws—like the mail fraud statute or the criminal sections of the Tax Code—to obtain appropriate prison sentences and fines.

When we asked why they don't use the existing statute, we were told that it was a defective law, filled with loopholes, restrictive provisions, and antiquated terms. We were told, for example, that the law applies to only "negotiated contracts" instead of to all types of contracts; that it prohibits completed kickbacks but not attempted kickbacks; and that it prohibits kickbacks paid to induce the award of a subcontract but not kickbacks paid for other, equally invalid purposes. Witnesses described its criminal penalties as weak and its civil recovery provisions as wholly inadequate. The legal community emphasized that they want a law designed specifically to stop subcontrator kickbacks, but that the existing Anti-Kickback Act didn't meet this need.

The bill before you today, the Anti-Kickback Enforcement Act of 1986, meets the criticisms levelled at the existing statute. It was introduced, as I said earlier, with the unanimous, bipartisan support of the members of the Oversight Subcommittee. Representatives from industry, the law enforcement community and government poured over it and offered numerous suggestions to improve its provisions. The Aerospace Industries Association of America provided detailed and thoughtful comments. The Senate Subcommittee staff accepted many of the suggestions it received and labored to iron out the remaining differences on the legislation.

An amendment in the nature of a substitute was drafted and, on August 12, 1986, this amended version of the bill was unanimously approved by the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee and reported to the full Senate for further action. The committee report states that the committee "strongly supports" its enactment into law.

During the course of the Senate proceedings, Members of the House of Representatives also began to look at the legislation. Congressman JOHN BRYANT introduced a companion bill in the House, H.R. 4783, which he has worked diligently to bring to the attention of his colleagues. In consultation with them and others. Mr. BRYANT has suggested several changes to the bill. His suggestions make up the majority of the amendments which I and my colleague, Senator COHEN, are today proposing. The result is that the final bill is a carefully crafted piece of legislation which enjoys widespread support by Members of Congress, the Department of Justice, the Department of Defense, and others.

Now let me describe the bill. S. 2250 improves existing anti-kickback law in a number of ways. First, it strengthens the criminal penalties for kickback activities, increasing the maximum prison sentence from 2 years to 10 and the maximum fine from $10,000 to $250,000 for individuals and $1 million for corporations. Second, it closes two obvious loopholes in current law by prohibiting kickbacks on any type of Federal contract, not just for "negotiated contracts," and by prohibiting attempted kickbacks, not just completed kickbacks. The bill also beefs up the civil recovery provisions in current law by allowing the United States, in cases of knowing misconduct, to recover double the kickback amount plus a civil forfeiture.

One of the bill's most important improvements to current law is its expanded definition of prohibited conduct. Current law prohibits payoffs made to induce or acknowledge the award of a subcontract, but doesn't affect payoffs made for other improper purposes. For example, current law doesn't apply to kickbacks paid to obtain unfair information about a competitor's bid or to induce the prime contractor to accept substandard goods. The Senate bill addresses this problem by defining a "kickback" as a payoff provided for the purpose of improperly obtaining or acknowledging any type of favorable treatment in connection with a prime contract.

Another important feature of the bill is that it requires prime contractors to institute reasonable procedures to detect and prevent kickbacks within their operations, to cooperate fully with kickback investigations, and to report kickback activities to Federal authorities. These measures require prime contractors to participate actively in the fight against subcontractor kickbacks. The bill requires prime contractors to implement thoughtful, self-policing measures and to take an active role in the battle against subcontractor fraud.

In this era of budget cuts and huge deficits, Federal dollars have to be wisely spent. Subcontractor kickbacks increase procurement costs and foster corruption within the Federal procurement system. With commonsense improvements to existing law, the Anti-Kickback Enforcement Act of 1986 can strengthen the legal deterrent to this type of procurement fraud.

The summary of S. 2250 follows:

SUMMARY OF S. 2250

The Anti-Kickback Enforcement Act of 1986 amends the existing Anti-Kickback Act, 41 U.S.C. 51-54, by reorganizing its provisions and adding new language. In particular, the bill:

(1) adds a definition section to the Act;

(2) clarifies language prohibiting the payment of kickbacks, the acceptance of kickbacks, and the inclusion of kickbacks costs in contract prices charged to the United States;

(3) makes it clear that the Act applies to kickbacks paid by independent sales representatives and by companies that furnish general supplies to prime contractors;

(4) expands the Act to prohibit attempted as well as completed kickbacks;

(5) expands the Act to prohibit kickbacks paid in connection with any government contract, removing the Act's current restriction to "negotiated contracts";

(6) expands the Act to prohibit kickbacks paid to obtain any type of favorable treatment in connection with a government contract, removing the Act's current restriction to kickbacks paid to induce or acknowledge the award of a subcontract;

(7) increases the Act's criminal penalities from a maximum of 2 years' imprisonment and a $10,000 fine to a maximum of 10 years' imprisonment and a $250,000 fine for individuals and a $1 million fine for corporations;

(8) expands the Act's civil remedies, now limited to the recovery of kickbacks charged to the United States, to permit the recovery, in cases of knowing violations, of twice the amount of any kickback plus a $10,000 civil forfeiture for each occurrence of prohibited conduct;

(9) clarifies the statute of limitations for filing civil actions, specifying a period of 6 years;

(10) clarifies language allowing the United States to use administrative offsets to recover the cost of kickbacks charged to the government;

(11) imposes new requirements on contracts to implement reasonable procedures to prevent and detect kickbacks, to cooperate fully with kickback investigations, and to report possible violations of the Act to the government; and

(12) maintains a provision authorizing GAO to conduct audits to investigate violations of the Act and extends the same authorization to other federal agencies.

The committee report contains a detailed analysis of each of the provisions of S. 2250.

AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY MR. LEVIN AND MR. COHEN TO S. 2250

Several amendments have been proposed to perfect S. 2250. Most derive from suggestions offered by Congressman Bryant and industry representatives. In general, the amendments refine the definition of "kickback"; tighten up language concerning the statute of limitations for civil actions, administrative offsets, and the right to conduct inspections and audits for kickback purposes; delete as unnecessary a provision to codify a Supreme Court case on the Anti-Kickback Act; and clarify the duty of prime contractors to try to keep their operations free of kickback activities. The text of each amendment is reprinted in full below and following that is an explanation of the purpose and effect of each change in the bill.

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENTS

SECTION 2

The first amendment modifies subsection 2(2) of the bill which defines "kickback." This subsection has been amended by adding the word "improperly" to it so that the definition of "kickback" refers to valuable items provided for the "purpose of improperly obtaining or acknowledging favorable treatment in connection with a prime contract. * * *" This amendment emphasizes that the bill prohibits only conduct designed to improperly influence procurement decisions and does not reach business transactions, such as the exchange of de minimums gifts or business meals, which are engaged in for legitimate purposes.

SECTION 5

The next amendment is a technical change which causes the bill's 6-year statute of limitations for civil actions to run from the date on which the relevant prohibited conduct occurred, from the date on which the United States should reasonably have become aware of the prohibited conduct, or from the date on which the United States actually became aware of the prohibited conduct.

SECTION 6

The third amendment strikes the section of the bill which attempted to codify United States v. Acme Process Equipment Co., 385 U.S. 138 (1966), because the section represents a potential restriction of that case which is neither necessary nor appropriate.

Acme holds that the existing Anti-Kickback Act authorizes the United States to cancel a prime contract tainted by subcontractor kickbacks. The sponsors of S. 2250 wholeheartedly supports that holding, and the amendment striking codification of it from the Anti-Kickback Enforcement Act should not be interpreted, under any circumstances, as an attempt to nullify or overrule the case. To the contrary, the Senate believes not only that the United States is authorized by the existing Anti-Kickback Act to terminate prime contracts tainted by subcontractor kickbacks, but also that a refurbished Anti-Kickback Act, strengthened by this bill, will continue to authorize that kickback remedy. The amendment simply signifies that Congress is content to allow the agencies to continue to employ the Acme rule without elaboration in the United States Code.

SECTION 7

The next two amendments are technical ones. The first renumbers the section, because the preceding amendment deletes the sixth section of the bill. The next amendment clarifies the intent of subsection (b)(2)(B) to rquire that a prime contractor who has been instructed to retain certain sums by a contracting officer, under the administrative offset procedures, notify the contracting officer when the retention of funds actually takes place. The amendment deletes as unnecessary and confusing the requirement that the prime contractor also specify the "reasons" for the retention of funds, since the reason will always be that the prime contractor had been so instructed.

SECTION 8

The next two amendments are also technical in nature. The first merely renumbers the section. The following amendment clarifies the responsibility of Government contractors, as described in subsection (a), to institute reasonable procedures designed to prevent and detect kickbacks.

The purpose of this subsection is to cause prime contractors to police their operations for illegal kickback schemes by, for example, monitoring the persons with whom they do business. These persons include, for example, the prime contractor's own employees, their subcontractors and any independent sales representatives with whom they have direct dealings. Some persons expressed the concern that the provision's wording was too broad and would make prime contractors responsible for detecting and preventing kickbacks wherever they occur—at every level of subcontracting, no matter how remote, and perhaps even among companies with whom the prime contractors have no direct dealings. For example, some prime contractors expressed worries that this provision would require them to develop procedures to stop kickbacks among fourth and fifth tier subcontractors even though, as a practical matter, they have no contacts with these companies and may not even be aware of their role in the subcontracting process.

These concerns fail to take into account the section's requirement that the prime contractors institute "reasonable procedures." The key word is "reasonable." It would not be reasonable to require prime contractors to police unrelated companies or lower tier subcontractors with whom they have no direct contact.

To further clarify the intended reach of the section, however, we have agreed to add language stating that prime contractors need to institute reasonable procedures designed to detect and prevent kickbacks "in their own operations and direct business relationships." This language makes it clear that the bill does not require prime contractors to make a superhuman effort or to become kickback troubleshooters for an entire business community; they have only to make a reasonable effort to keep their own business dealings free of kickback activity.

SECTION 9

The next three amendments are technical corrections to the section of the bill authorizing specified Federal agencies to inspect facilities and audit materials in the course of a kickback investigation. The first amendment merely renumbers the section. The second makes it clear that the agencies have the right to enter the facilities they want to inspect and to obtain physical access to the books and records they want to audit. This amendment clarifies the right of access that was only implied by the existing language. The final amendment clarifies the agencies' right, in this modern age, to audit electronic data and records as well as hard copy materials. The terms are intended to be interpreted broadly to include databases, mocrofiche, computer tapes and other electronic materials.

We have also been asked to state for the record that the rights of access, inspection and audit provided in this bill are, of course, in addition to any other rights that the agencies have to investigate contract matters and fraud, and they are in no way intended to limit other statutes or regulations.

SECTION 3

The final amendment is a technical one which corrects a reference to a section which has been renumbered.

In closing, I would like to thank Senator COHEN, Senator ROTH, Congressman BRYANT, Congressman BROOKS, Congressman GLICKMAN, the bill's cosponsors, and all the other persons who have demonstrated the bipartisan interest and support this bill deserves.

I particularly want to thank Elise Bean of my staff for her extraordinary dedication to this effort. She has made this cause her cause, working effectively with others, and putting in the countless hours necessary for us to get to this threshold of success.●

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is considering legislation that Senator LEVIN and I have introduced, the Anti-Kickback Enforcement Act of 1986, which would strengthen existing statutory sanctions against subcontractor kickbacks.

As Senator LEVIN has explained in detail, S. 2250 would revise the current law by increasing the criminal penalties, authorizing civil recovery of double damages and forfeitures, covering all types of contracts, extending coverage to attempted as well as completed kickbacks, and prohibiting kickbacks to obtain any type of favorable treatment in connection with a Federal contract.

This legislation stems from hearings held by the Governmental Affairs Oversight Subcommittee earlier this year to examine the prevalence of subcontractor kickbacks in the defense industry and to determine what could be done to stop this illicit activity.

The testimony from these hearings confirmed our worst fear that kickbacks aren't the exception, but rather the rule, in defense contracting across the country. For example, Robert Bonner, the U.S. attorney for the central district of California, estimated that "up to 50 percent of the buyers or front-line procurement personnel at prime contractors take kickbacks in return for issuing subcontracts" in southern California.

Just 2 months ago, in fact, 19 current or former officials of southern California defense contractors were indicted for alleged kickback violations.

Subcontractor kickbacks, however, are by no means restricted to the west coast. Federal indictments for kickback activities have recently been handed down in New Jersey, Massachusetts, and South Carolina. Moreover, according to the U.S. attorney for the eastern district of Louisiana, kickbacks were a "way of life" at a New Orleans shipyard, where 26 employees and suppliers have been indicted over the past 2 years.

The list of companies which have had employees either indicted or convicted for subcontractor kickback violations reads like a veritable "who's who" of Fortune 500 companies: Hughes Aircraft, Northrop, General Electric, Raytheon, TRW, and Teledyne. Kickbacks have been uncovered in contracts involving major weapons systems, including contracts for the B-1 bomber, the Stealth bomber, the F-16 and F-18 jets, the A-6 aircraft, the Blackhawk helicopter, and the M-1 tank.

Contributing to the problem is the fact that the Anti-Kickback Act, the statute enacted in 1946 to provide sanctions against subcontractor kickbacks, is riddled with loopholes, contains antiquated provisions, and has a relatively light penalty structure. According to Victoria Toesing, the Deputy Assistant Attorney General of the Criminal Division, the "limited applicability of the statute * * * precludes prosecution of many kickback situations." As a result, the law is rarely used. According to the Justice Department, there have been only eight convictions under the Anti-Kickback Act during the past 5 years. Federal prosecutors often resort to other laws, such as the mail fraud and conspiracy statutes, to prosecute individuals involved in kickback schemes.

Mr. President, S. 2250 would make the Anti-Kickback Act a far more effective sanction against subcontractor kickbacks. Senator LEVIN is to be commended for taking the initiative to focus on this serious and pervasive problem and for drafting legislation to strengthen the penalties against the corrupt practice of subcontractor kickbacks. I urge my colleagues to lend their support to this much-needed reform of the Federal anti-kickback law.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was in order to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (S. 2250), as amended, was passed as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Anti-Kickback Enforcement Act of 1986".

SEC. 2. (a) The Act entitled "An Act to eliminate the practice by subcontractors, under cost-plus-a-fixed-fee or cost reimbursable contracts of the United States, of paying fees or kick-backs, or of granting gifts or gratuities to employees of a cost-plus-fixed-fee or cost reimbursable prime contractors or of higher tier subcontractors for the purpose of securing the award of subcontracts or orders", approved March 8, 1946 (41 U.S.C. 51-54), is amended to read as follows:

"SHORT TITLE

"SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the 'Anti-Kickback Act of 1986'.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 2. As used in this Act:

"(1) 'Contracting agency', when used with respect to a prime contractor, means any department, agency, or establishment of the United States which enters into a prime contract with a prime contractor.

"(2) 'Kickback' means any money, fee, commission, credit, gift, gratuity, thing of value, or compensation of any kind which is provided, directly or indirectly, to any prime contractor, prime contractor employee, subcontractor, or subcontractor employee for the purpose of improperly obtaining or acknowledging favorable treatment in connection with a prime contract or in connection with a subcontract relating to a prime contract.

"(3) 'Person' means a corporation, partnership, business association of any kind, trust, joint-stock company, or individual.

"(4) 'Prime contract' means a contract or contractual action entered into by the United States for the purpose of obtaining supplies, materials, equipment, or services of any kind.

"(5) 'Prime contractor' means a person who has entered into a prime contract with the United States.

"(6) 'Prime contractor employee' means any officer, partner, employee, or agent of a prime contractor.

"(7) 'Subcontract' means a contract or contractual action entered into by a prime contractor or subcontractor for the purpose of obtaining supplies, materials, equipment, or services of any kind under a prime contract.

"(8) 'Subcontractor'—

"(A) means any person, other than the prime contractor, who offers to furnish or furnishes any supplies, materials, equipment, or services of any kind under a prime contract or a subcontract entered into in connection with such prime contract; and

"(B) includes any person who offers to furnish or furnishes general supplies to the prime contractor or a higher tier subcontractor.

"(9) 'Subcontractor employee' means any officer, partner, employee, or agent of a subcontractor.

"PROHIBITED CONDUCT; PRESUMPTION THAT PROHIBITED CONDUCT OCCURRED

"SEC. 3. (a) It is prohibited for any person—

"(1) to pay, attempt to pay, or offer to pay any kickback;

"(2) to solicit, accept, or attempt to accept any kickback; or

"(3) to include, directly or indirectly, the amount of any kickback prohibited by clause (1) or (2) in the contract price charged by a subcontractor to a prime contractor or a higher tier subcontractor or in the contract price charged by a prime contractor to the United States.

"(b) In a civil suit or administrative action commenced under this Act, there shall be a conclusive presumption that the amount of any kickback paid or accepted in connection with a prime contract or subcontract in violation of subsection (a)(1) or (a)(2) has been included in the price of such contract and has been ultimately borne by the United States.

"CRIMINAL PENALTIES

"SEC. 4. (a) Any individual who knowingly engages in conduct prohibited by section 3(a) shall be fined not more than $250,000 or be imprisoned for not more than 10 years or both.

"(b) Any person (other than an individual) which knowingly engages in conduct prohibited by section 3(a) shall be fined not more than $1,000,000.

"CIVIL ACTIONS

"SEC. 5. (a)(1) The United States may bring a civil suit against any person who violates section 3(a).

"(2) In a civil suit brought under paragraph (1), the United States may recover—

"(A) in the case of a person who knowingly engages in conduct prohibited by section 3(a), an amount equal to the sum of—

"(i) twice the amount of each kickback involved in the violation; and

"(ii) not more than $10,000 for each occurrence of prohibited conduct; or

"(B) in any other case, the amount of each kickback involved in the violation.

"(b) A civil action under this section shall be barred unless the action is commenced within 6 years after the later of (1) the date on which the prohibited conduct establishing the cause of action occurred, and (2) the date on which the United States became aware or should reasonably have become aware that the prohibited conduct had occurred.

"ADMINISTRATIVE OFFSETS

"SEC. 6. (a) The United States may recover the amount of any kickback paid, accepted, or charged in violation of section 3(a) by offsetting such amount against any moneys owed by the United States—

"(1) to the prime contractor, prime contractor employee, subcontractor, or subcontractor employee which included such amount in a contract price; or

"(2) to the recipient or recipients of such kickback.

"(b)(1) Upon the written direction of the contracting officer for a prime contract, the prime contractor shall withhold from sums the prime contractor owes any subcontractor the amount of any kickback found to have been paid, accepted, or charged in violation of section 3(a).

"(2) Upon the written direction of the contracting officer for a prime contract, the prime contractor (A) shall pay all sums withheld under paragraph (1) to the contracting agency, or (B) shall retain such sums, if the United States has, by administrative offset under subsection (a), collected such sums from the prime contractor, and shall notify the contracting officer when the retention of funds has actually occurred.

"CONTRACTOR RESPONSIBILITIES

"SEC. 7. (a) Each contracting agency shall include in each prime contract awarded by such agency a requirement that the prime contractor shall have in place and follow reasonable procedures designed to prevent and detect violations of section 3(a) in its own operation and direct business relationships.

"(b) Each contracting agency shall include in each prime contract awarded by such agency a requirement that the prime contractor shall cooperate fully with any Federal Government agency investigating a violation of section 3(a).

"(c)(1)(A) Whenever a prime contractor or subcontractor has reasonable grounds to believe that a violation of section 3(a) may have occurred, the prime contractor or subcontractor shall promptly report the potential violation in writing.

"(B) A contractor shall make the reports required by subparagraph (A) to the inspector general of the contracting agency, the head of the contracting agency if the agency does not have an inspector general, or the Department of Justice.

"(2) In the case of an administrative or contractual action to suspend or debar any person who is eligible to enter into contracts with the Federal Government, evidence that such person has supplied information to the United States pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be favorable evidence of such person's responsibility for the purposes of Federal procurement laws and regulations.

"INSPECTION AUTHORITY

"SEC. 8. For the purpose of ascertaining whether there has been a violation of section 3(a) with respect to any prime contract, the General Accounting Office and the inspector general of the contracting agency, or a representative of such contracting agency designated by the head of such agency if the agency does not have an inspector general, shall have overs to and may inspect the facilities and audit the books and records, including any electronic data or records, of any prime contractor or subcontractor under a prime contract awarded by such agency.".

(b) The title of such Act is amended to read as follows: "An Act to prohibit the paying or offering of kickbacks to any contractor or contractor employee in connection with Federal Government contracting actions.".

SEC. 3. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the Anti-Kickback Act of 1986 (as set out in section 2(a)) shall take effect with respect to conduct described in section 3(a) of such Act which occurs on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 7 of the Anti-Kickback Act of 1986 (as set out in section 2(a)) shall take effect with respect to contract solicitations issued by an agency, department, or other establishment of the Federal Government on or after the date which is 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

WILDLIFE AND SCENIC RIVERS ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Energy Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 4350, a Wild and Scenic Rivers Act, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4350) to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 2801

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator MCCLURE in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], for Mr. MCCLURE, proposes an amendment numbered 2801.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof:

"TITLE I—CACHE LA POUDRE, COLORADO

"SEC. 101. Section 3(a) of the Wild and Scenic River Act (16 U.S.C. 1274) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"'(56) CACHE LA POUDRE, COLORADO.—The following segments as generally depicted on the proposed boundary map number FS-56 and dated March 1986, published by the United States Department of Agriculture, each to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture; except that those portions of the segments so designated which are within the boundary of Rocky Mountain National Park shall continue to be administered by the Secretary of the Interior:

"'(A) Beginning at Poudre Lake downstream to the confluence of Joe Wright Creek, as a wild river. This segment to be designated the "Peter H. Dominick Wild River Area".

"'(B) Downstream from the confluence of Joe Wright Creek to a point where the river intersects the easterly north-south line of the west half southwest quarter of section 1, township 8 north, range 71 west of the sixth principal meridian, as a recreational river.

"'(C) South Fork of the Cache la Poudre River from its source to the Commanche Peak Wilderness Boundary, approximately four miles, as a wild river.

"'(D) Beginning at the Commanche Peak Wilderness Boundary to a point on the South Fork of the Cache la Poudre River in section 1, township 7 north, range 73 west of the sixth principal meridian, at elevation 8050 mean sea level, as a recreational river.

"'(E) South Fork of the Cache la Poudre River from its intersection with the easterly section line of section 30, township 8 north, range 72 west of the sixth principal meridian, to confluence of the main stem of the Cache la Poudre River, as a wild river.

"'With respect to the portions of the river segments designated by this paragraph which are within the boundaries of Rocky Mountain National Park, the requirements of section 102 shall be fulfilled by the Secretary of the Interior through appropriate revisions to the general management plan for the park, and the boundaries, classification, and development plans for such portions need not be published in the Federal Register. Such revisions to the general management plan for the park shall assure that no development or use of parklands shall be undertaken that is inconsistent with the designation of such river segments as a wild river. For the purposes of the segments designated by this paragraph, there are authorized to be appropriated $500,000 for development and $2,500,000 for land acquisition.'.

"SEC. 102. Inclusion of the designated portions of the Cache la Poudre River and the Wild and Scenic Rivers system under section 101 of this title shall not interfere with the exercise of existing decreed water rights to water which has heretofore been stored or diverted by means of the present capacity of storage, conveyance, or diversion structures that exist as of the date of enactment of this title, or operation and maintenance of such structures. Nor shall inclusion of the designated portions of the Cache la Poudre River in the Wild and Scenic Rivers System be utilized in any Federal proceeding, whether concerning a license, permit, right-of-way, or other Federal action, as a reason or basis to prohibit the development or operation of any water impoundments, diversion facilities, and hydroelectric power and transmission facilities below Poudre Park located entirely downstream from and potentially affecting designated portions of the Cache la Poudre River, or relocation of highway 14 to any point east of the north-south half section line of section 2, township 8 north, range 71 west of the sixth principal meridian, as necessary to provide access to Poudre Park around such facilities: Provided, That due consideration shall be given to reasonable measures for minimizing the impact of such facilities and road relocation on the designated segments. Congress finds that development of water impoundments, diversion facilities, and hydroelectric power and transmission facilities located entirely downstream from the designated portions of the Cache la Poudre River below Poudre Park, in accordance with the provisions of this section, is not incompatible with the designation of portions of the Cache la Poudre River in the Wild and Scenic Rivers system under section 101 of this title. The reservation of water established by the inclusion of portions of the Cache la Poudre River in the Wild and Scenic Rivers System shall be subject to the provisions of this title, shall be adjudicated in Colorado Water Court, and shall have a priority date as of the date of enactment of this title.

"SEC. 103. (a) GRANTS AND ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary of Agriculture, acting through the Chief of the Forest Service, shall provide grants and technical assistance to the City of Fort Collins, Colorado, to carry out a study regarding the designation of the following area as a national recreation area: the 18.5-mile segment of the Cache la Poudre River Corridor from the northwest boundary of the city of Fort Collins urban growth area to the Weld-Larimer County line.

"(b) STUDY.—The study under this section shall include each of the following:

"(A) a comprehensive evaluation of the public recreation opportunities and flood plain management options which are available with respect to the river corridor involved;

"(B) an evaluation of the natural, historical, and recreational values of such corridor;

"(C) patterns for possible land acquisition within the corridor which are deemed necessary for the purpose of resource protection, scenic and integrity, or management and administration of the corridor area;

"(D) cooperative management proposals for the administration of the corridor area;

"(E) the number of visitors and types of public use within the corridor area that can be accommodated in accordance with the full protection of its resources; and

"(F) the facilities deemed necessary to accommodate and provide access for such visitors and uses, including the location and estimated costs of such facilities.

"(c) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Within three years of the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary of Agriculture shall transmit to the Congress a comprehensive report containing the results of the study conducted pursuant to this section.

"(d) FUNDING.—There are hereby authorized to be appropriated up to $150,000 to carry out the provisions of this section.

"(e) COST SHARING.—Not more than 75 per centum of the cost of the study carried out under this section shall be paid by the United States: Provided, That in no event shall the contribution of the United States exceed $150,000. The remaining portion of such costs shall be contributed by interested parties. The portion contributed by such interested parties may consist of appropriated funds or contributed services.

"SEC. 104. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior shall, within 30 days of the enactment of this title, complete the exchange as described in the Decision Notice and Finding of No Significant Impact, Trust For Public Land Proposed Land-for-Land Exchange, signed by the Rocky Mountain Regional Forester, on August 22, 1985, to acquire certain private lands in the portion of the Cache La Poudre River designated in section 3(a)(56)(B) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1274(a)(56(B)).

"TITLE II—FARMINGTON, WEST BRANCH, CONNECTICUT AND MASSACHUSETTS

"SEC. 201. This title may be cited as the 'Farmington Wild and Scenic River Study Act'.

"SEC. 202(a). Congress finds that—

"(1) the West Branch of the Farmington River and related land areas possess resource values of national significance, such as significant white water rapids, undeveloped lands, scenic and cultural areas, important sport fisheries, and prime agricultural lands;

"(2) based on the National Rivers Inventory by the National Park Service, published in January 1982, this portion of the Farmington River is eligible for study for inclusion in the wild and scenic rivers system;

"(3) there is strong support among local, State, and Federal officials, area residents, and river users for a concerted cooperative effort to manage the river in a productive and meaningful way; and

"(4) in view of the longstanding Federal practice of assisting States and local governments in protecting, conserving, and enhancing rivers of national significance, the United States has an interest in assisting the State of Connecticut and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the appropriate local governments in managing the river.

"(b) Section 5(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1276(a)) is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"'(92) FARMINGTON, WEST BRANCH, CONNECTICUT AND MASSACHUSETTS.—The segment from the intersection or the New Hartford-Canton, Connecticut, town line upstream to the base of the West Branch Reservoir in Hartland, Connecticut; and the segment from the confluence with Thorp Brook in Sandisfield, Massachusetts, to Hayden Pond in Otis, Massachusetts.'.

"(c) Section 5(b) of such Act (16 U.S.C. 1276(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(7) The study of the West Branch of the Farmington River identified in paragraph (92) of subsection (a) shall be completed and the report submitted thereon not later than the end of the third fiscal year beginning after the enactment of this paragraph. Such report shall include a discussion of management alternatives for the river if it were to be included in the national wild and scenic river system.'.

"(d)(1) At the earliest practicable date following the enactment of this title, but not later than forty-five days after enactment, the Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Secretary') shall establish the Farmington River Study Committee (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Committee'). The Secretary shall consult with the Committee on a regular basis during the conduct of the study. Membership on the Committee shall consist of seventeen members appointed by the Secretary as follows:

"(A) One member shall be appointed by the Secretary.

"(B) Two members shall be appointed by the Secretary from a list of candidates supplied to the Secretary by the Governor of the State of Connecticut.

"(C) Two members shall be appointed by the Secretary from a list of candidates supplied to the Secretary by the Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

"(D) Two members shall be appointed by the Secretary from a list of candidates supplied to the Secretary by the Farmington River Watershed Association.

"(E) One member shall be appointed by the Secretary from each of the eight towns located along the West Branch of the river. The governing body of each of the eight towns shall provide a list of candidates to the Secretary from which the eight appointments under this paragraph shall be made.

"(F) Two members shall be appointed by the Secretary from a list of candidates supplied to the Secretary by the Metropolitan District Commission of Hartford, Connecticut.

"(2) The members of the Committee shall elect a chairman, vice chairman, and recording secretary from the membership at the first official meeting of the Committee. Official minutes shall be kept of each regular and special meeting of the Committee and shall be open for public inspection.

"(3) Any vacancy on the Committee shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made. Any member appointed to fil a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term. Vacancies in the membership of the Committee shall not affect its power to function if there remain sufficient members to constitute a quorum under paragraph (4) of this subsection.

"(4) A majority of the members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum for all meetings.

"(5) The Committee shall advise the Secretary in conducting the study of the Farmington River segment specified in section 5(a)(92) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act. The Committee also shall advise the Secretary concerning management alternatives should the river be included in the wild and scenic rivers system.

"(6) Members of the Committee shall serve without compensation but may be compensated for reasonable and necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties as members of the Committee.

"(7) The Committee may accept and utilize the services of voluntary, uncompensated personnel.

"(8) The Committee shall terminate on the later of the following:

"(A) the completion of the river study of the Farmington River described in section 5(a)(92) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act; or

"(B) the publication of managment alternatives should the river be included in the wild and scenic rivers system.

"(e) As used in this title (other than in subsection (b)) the term 'River' means the segments of the Farmington River described in paragraph (92) of section 5(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1275(a)).

"(f) There are authorized to be appropriated up to $150,000 to carry out the purposes of this title.

"TITLE III—GREAT EGG HARBOR, NEW JERSEY

"SEC. 301. (a) STUDY.—Section 5(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1271-1287) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(93) Great Egg Harbor River, New Jersey: The entire river.'.

"(b) COMPLETION DATE.—Section 5(b)(3) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: 'The study of the river named in paragraph (93) of subsection (a) shall be completed not later than three years after the date of the enactment of this sentence.'.

"(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Paragraph (4) of section 5(b) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: 'Effective October 1, 1986, there are authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of conducting the study of the river named in paragraph (93) not to exceed $150,000.'.

"TITLE IV—SALINE BAYOU, LOUISIANA

"SEC. 401. Section 3(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1274(a)) is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"'(57) SALINE BAYOU, LOUISIANA.—The segment from Saline Lake upstream to the Kisatchie National Forest, as generally depicted on the Proposed Boundary Map, numbered fs-57, and dated March, 1986; to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture. For the purposes of the segment designated by this paragraph, there are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years commencing after September 30, 1986, not to exceed $1,000,000 for the acquisition of lands and interests in lands and for development.'.

"TITLE V—GENERIC AMENDMENTS

"SEC. 501. (a) Section 3(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1274(a)) is amended by redesignating the paragraphs relating to the Au Sable River, the Tuolumne River, the Illinois River, and the Owyhee River as paragraphs (52) through (55) respectively.

"(b)(1) The first sentence of section 3(b) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended as follows:

"(A) Strike out 'one year from the date of this Act' and substitute 'one year from the date of designation of such component under subsection (a)'.

"(B) Strike out the second parenthetical statement, '(which boundaries shall include an average of not more than 320 acres of land per mile measured from the ordinary high water mark on both sides of the river)'.

"(C) Strike out the seimcolon and the remainder of the sentence after the words 'its various segments' and substitute a period.

"(2) The second sentence of section 3(d) of such Act is amended by striking out 'Said boundaries, classification, and development plans' and substituting the words 'Notice of the availability of the boundaries and classification, and of subsequent boundary amendments'.

"(3) Section 3 of such Act is amended by adding the following new subsections at the end:

"'(c) Maps of all boundaries and descriptions of the classifications of designated river segments, and subsequent amendments to such boundaries, shall be available for public inspection in the offices of the administering agency in the District of Columbia and in locations convenient to the designated river.

"'(d)(1) For rivers designated on or after January 1, 1986, the Federal agency charged with the administration of each component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System shall prepare a comprehensive management plan for such river segment to provide for the protection of the river values. The plan shall address resource protection, development of lands and facilities, user capacities, and other management practices necessary or desirable to achieve the purposes of this Act. The plan shall be coordinated with and may be incorporated into resource management planning for affected adjacent Federal lands. The plan shall be prepared, after consultation with State and local governments and the interested public within three full fiscal years after the date of designation. Notice of the completion and availability of such plans shall be published in the Federal Register.

"'(2) For rivers designated before January 1, 1986, all boundaries, classifications, and plans shall be reviewed for conformity within the requirements of this subsection within 10 years through regular agency planning processes.'.

"SEC. 502. Section 4 of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by adding a new subsection (d) after subsection (c):

"'(d) The boundaries of any river proposed in section 5(a) of this Act for potential addition to the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System shall generally comprise that area measured within one-quarter mile from the ordinary highwater mark on each side of the river. In the case of any designated river, prior to publication of boundaries pursuant to section 3(b) of this Act, the boundaries also shall comprise the same area. This subsection shall not be construed to limit the possible scope of the study report to address areas which may lie more than one-quarter mile from the ordinary high water mark on each side of the river.'.

"SEC. 503. Section 5 of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended as follows:

"(a) In subsection (a) paragraph (90) relating to the North Umpqua is redesignated as paragraph (91).

"(b) At the end of subsection (b)(1) add: 'Studies of the rivers named in paragraph (38), (55), (83), and (87) shall be completed and the reports transmitted to the Congress not later than January 1, 1987.'.

"(c) Amend paragraph (4) of subsection (b) to read as follows:

"'(4) For the purposes of conducting the studies of rivers named in subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as necessary.'.

"SEC. 504. (a) Section 6(e) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by striking out 'Congress in authorized' and substituting 'Congress is authorized'.

"(b) Section 6(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by striking out 'donation, and lands' in the second sentence and substituting 'donation or by exchange in accordance with subsection (d) of this section. Lands'.

"(c) Section 6(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by inserting '(1)' after '(a)' and by adding the following at the end:

"'(2) When a tract of land lies partially within and partially outside the boundaries of a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System, the appropriate Secretary may, with the consent of the landowners for the portion outside the boundaries, acquire the entire tract. The land or interest therein so acquired outside the boundaries shall not be counted against the average one-hundred-acre-per-mile fee title limitation of subsection (a)(1). The lands or interests therein outside such boundaries, shall be disposed of, consistent with existing authorities of law, by sale, lease, or exchange.'.

"(d) Section 6(b) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended as follows:

"(1) Insert in the first sentence 'outside the ordinary highwater mark on both sides of the river' after the word acreage'.

"(2) Insert 'in fee title' after the word 'owned'.

"SEC. 505. (a) The second sentence of section 7(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by deleting 'approval of this Act' and substituting 'designation of a river as a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System'.

"(b) Section 7(b) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended as follows:

"(1) In the first sentence after clause (i) insert a new clause (ii) as follows:

"'(ii) during such interim period from the date a report is due and the time a report is actually submitted to the Congress; and'.

"(2) Redesignate existing clause (ii) as clause (iii).

"(3) At the end of the second sentence, delete 'approval of this Act' and insert in lieu thereof the words, 'designation of a river for study as provided for in section 5 of this Act'.

"SEC. 506. Section 8(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: 'This subsection shall not be construed to limit the authorities granted in section 6(d) or section 14A of this Act.'.

"SEC. 507. Section 9(b) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by striking out 'issuance or leases,' in the second sentence and substituting 'issuance of leases,'.

"SEC. 508. Section 11 of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by deleting the second sentence in subsection (a) and by amending section (b) to read as follows:

"'(b)(1) The Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, or the head of any Federal agency, shall assist, advise, and cooperate with States or their political subdivisions, landowners, private organizations, or individuals to plan, protect, and manage river resources. Such assistance, advice, and cooperation may be through written agreements or otherwise. This authority applies within or outside a federally administered area and applies to rivers which are components of the Wild and Scenic Rivers System and to other rivers. Any agreement under this subsection may include provisions for limited financial or other assistance to encourage participation in the acquisition, protection, and management of river resources.

"'(2) Wherever appropriate in furtherance of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior are authorized and encouraged to utilize the following:

"'(A) For activities on federally owned land, the Volunteers in the Parks Act of 1969 (16 U.S.C. 18g-j) and the Volunteers in the Forest Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 558a-558d).

"'(B) For activities on all other lands, section 6 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (relating to the development of statewide comprehensive outdoor recreation plans).

"'(3) For purposes of this subsection, the appropriate Secretary or the head of any Federal agency may utilize and make available Federal facilities, equipment, tools and technical assistance to volunteers and volunteer organizations, subject to such limitations and restrictions as the appropriate Secretary or the head of any Federal agency deems necessary or desirable.

"'(4) No permit or other authorization provided for under provision of any other Federal law shall be conditioned on the existence of any agreement provided for in this section.'.

"SEC. 507. Section 12(c) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by deleting the words 'Secretary of the Interior, and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'Administrator, Environmental Protection Agency'.

"SEC. 510. Section 14 of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by inserting '(a)' after '14' and adding a new subsection (b) as follows:

"'(b) For the conservation purposes of preserving or enhancing the values of components of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System, and environs thereof as determined by the appropriate Secretary, landowners are authorized to donate or otherwise convey qualifed real property interests to qualified organizations consistent with section 170(h)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. Such interest may include, but shall not be limited to, rights-of-way, open space, scenic, or conservation easements, without regard to any limitation on the nature of the estate or interest otherwise transferable within the jurisdiction where the land is located. The conveyance of any such interest in land in accordance with this subsection shall be deemed to further a Federal conservation policy and yield a significant public benefit for purposes of section 6 of Public Law 96-541.'.

"SEC. 511. Section 16(c) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by adding at the end thereof: "For any designated wild and scenic river, the appropriate Secretary shall treat the acquisition of fee title with the reservation of regular existing uses to the owner as a scenic easement for purposes of this Act. Such an acquisition shall not constitute fee title ownersip for purposes of section 6(b).

"TITLE VI

"SEC. 601. Section 3(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1274(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(58) BLACK CREEK MISSISSIPPI.—The segment from Fairley Bridge Landing upstream to Moody's Landing as generally depicted on a map entitled "Black Creek Wild and Scenic River", numbered fs-58 and dated March 1986, to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture as a scenic river area under section 2(b)(2). For the purposes of the segment designated by this paragraph, there are authorized to be appropriated up to $300,000 for the acquisition of lands and interests in lands and for deployment.'.

"TITLE VII—HENRY'S FORK OF THE SNAKE RIVER, IDAHO

"SEC. 701. This title may be cited as the 'Henry's Fork of the Snake River Protection Act of 1986'.

"SEC. 702. Except as set forth in section 703 and section 704 of this title, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) is prohibited from taking any action, other than denial, on any application for a license, preliminary permit, or exemption or any further action on an issued preliminary permit pursuant to sections 4(e), 4(f), and 30 of the Federal Power Act, as amended (16 U.S.C. 797(e-f), and 823), for any project proposed to be sited on or adjacent to that portion of Henry's Fork of the Snake River, Idaho (including that segment originating at Big Springs), or its tributaries within one-half mile of their confluence with Henry's Fork of the Snake River, from its point of origin at Henry's Lake, Idaho to the point of its confluence with the backwaters of Ashton Reservoir, Idaho.

"SEC. 703. The prohibition in section 702 of this title shall not apply to the application for license filed for the Island Park Dam Hydropower project (FERC project numbered 2973) or the subsequent relicensing of said project: Provided, That such license may be approved only if FERC determines that significant and permanent alteration of streamflow, habitat, water temperature, and quality will not occur as a result of the project.

"SEC. 704. The prohibition in section 702 of this title shall not apply to the relicensing of the Ponds Lodge Hydropower project (FERC project numbered 1413).

"SEC. 705. (a) Nothing in this title shall be construed as authorizing (either expressed or implied) the appropriation or reservation of water by any Federal, State, or local agency, Indian tribe, or any other entity or individual. Nor shall any provision of this title (1) affect the rights or jurisdictions of the United States, the States, Indian tribes, or other entities over waters of any river or stream or over any ground water resource, (2) alter, amend, repeal, interpret, modify, or be in conflict with any interstate compact made by the States, (3) be construed to alter or establish the respective rights of States, the United States, Indian tribes, or any person with respect to any water or water-related right, or (4) otherwise be construed to affect the validity of any existing license, permit, or certificate (other than as set forth in section 702) issued by any Federal agency pursuant to any other Federal law.

"(b) For the purposes of any Federal law authorizing an express or implied appropriation or reservation of water for any Federal purpose, the provisions of this title (other than this subsection) shall be deemed not to exist.".

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I am pleased to support the amendment to H.R. 4350 which, in effect, attaches S. 1819, the Cache La Poudre Wild and Scenic River bill, to this legislation. This is a historic moment for Colorado, as this represents the first such designation in our State. Moreover, this bill represents the product of extensive negotiations among affected citizens of northern Colorado and expresses their agreement for protection of the river with options for water project development.

This legislation has been in the making for a number of years. In fact, as early as 1963, the Colorado Governor's Conference on Parks and Recreation recommended that Colorado preserve the mountainous portion of the Poudre River. In that spirit, the late Senator Peter H. Dominick of Colorado added an amendment to the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act of 1968, directing that the river be studied for possible designation. The Forest Service began studying the river for designation in 1977. The draft environmental impact statement and proposed recommendations, covering 83 miles of the upper reaches of the river, were issued for public comment in early 1980 and resulted in over 1,300 comments. In the spring of 1985, the White House recommended that 62 miles of the Cache La Poudre be designated. The bill, before the Senate today, which was worked out by a consensus of northern Colorado long-term interests, would designate 75 miles of the river.

The Cache la Poudre River is a marvelous unique, free-flowing body of water representing the largest remaining stretch of undeveloped river in the United States east of the Rocky Mountains. Beginning at the Continental Divide in Rocky Mountain National Park, the river flows east through Roosevelt National Forest and the Colorado cities of LaPorte, Fort Collins, and Greeley, before joining the South Platte River. Beginning at the river's source at Poudre Lake in Rocky Mountain National Park, the legislation would preserve the river through the town of Poudre Park. In honor of the late Senator Dominick's contribution to this designation, the bill would declare the first 18 miles of the river as the "Peter H. Dominick Wild River Area." Overall, the legislation will designate 31 miles of river as wild and 44 miles as recreational.

The legislation also expressly provides that nothing in it would affect storage and hydroelectric projects downstream of the designated portions of the river, and also includes authorization for land acquisition from willing sellers along the designated portions of the river. Private property rights are protected by the bill, with acquisitions of public rights-of-way and scenic easements occurring only where necessary and only when owners wish to sell. The legislation would additonally grandfather existing water developments to insure that conflicts in the maintenance and management of those projects will not occur.

This amendment is identical to H.R. 3547, which was introduced in the House by my colleague Congressman HANK BROWN, on October 10, 1985. I commend him in particular and all of the parties involved in the negotiations for their spirit of cooperation and success in balancing the unique environmental values of the Poudre River with Colorado's need to conserve and manage its limited water supplies. This is the kind of cooperative attitude that can resolve many basic differences that we now confront on natural resource management issues.

I believe that we, in the West, are at a crossroads in defining the position of the Federal Government in our water management systems, particularly when it comes to the creation or noncreation of reserved water rights for purposes of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act or any designation that may be interpreted by a court to confer a Federal right to stream flow. In the past, we, the Congress, have not expressed ourselves on the subject of court inferred Federal reserved water rights to attend a Federal reservation of lands. The history of this judicial creature dates back to the United States versus Winter dispute over reserve rights for the benefit of Indian reservations. Today, Federal reserved water rights are adjudicated in State water courts and have been strictly interpreted in the West. The subject, however, has been clouded by the recent Federal court decision in the Sierra Club versus Block case regarding wilderness—where water rights have been inferred to exist for the purposes of wilderness designations. Like wild and scenic river protections, such rights are not like the earlier Winter's rights, viewed solely as diversionary rights. They are by their very nature a water right for asthetics—or in other terms a right to flow levels. By their very nature, such rights will have major impacts on existing and future privately held water rights in Western States like Colorado.

These long-established private rights are rights to divert water from a stream and put it to beneficial use, which is diametrically opposed to a Federal right to maintain certain levels of stream flow. Therefore, it is important, for the Congress to not leave the issue to judicial inference, but to spell out exactly what Federal reserved water rights are created by virtue of the designation, as we are doing here in this designation of the Cache La Poudre River. The water experts involved in the negotiation process have assured me that adequate provision has been expressly made to address this and that the legislation will prevent unexpected and unintended effects on existing water rights and future development on this river. This legislation will provide an example for others that environment and water interests can be balanced, and I urge other communities with rivers being considered as candidates for a wild and scenic river designation to look at its particular set of circumstances and expressly craft legislative language to address their particular needs and conflicts. Whatever they work out, I suggest that the issue of Federal reserved water rights needs to be expressly addressed and not left to interference by some court of law.

I recommend this legislation for passage by the Senate today as a sincere effort to resolve the conflicts that surround this proposed designation. This proposal has been drafted with a precise effect in mind and what is not expressly said in the bill is not intended. Moreover, I trust that Congress' intent is clear enough in the bill that it shall never even become the subject of litigation.

Also incorporated in this amendment is language to authorize an exchange of the trust for public lands. This provision agreed to by all parties involved. It has the support of the trust for Public Lands and the Forest Service, as I understand. It would direct consummation of a land exchange which would place in Federal ownership a private inholding along the river.

This exchange has been analyzed in a Forest Service environmental assessment, wildlife report, and decision document. It was found to be environmentally beneficial and in the public interest. It has undergone the congressional review required by Forest Service regulations. It is also supported by the House sponsors of the Cache La Poudre Wild and Scenic River bill. Finally, the diverse interests which have helped to shape this bill—including landowners, water districts and environmental groups—reviewed, and either endorsed or did not object to, this exchange.●

PROTECTION FOR THE WEST BRANCH OF THE FARMINGTON RIVER,

● Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I am pleased to note the passage today of H.R. 4350, legislation to designate the West Branch of the Farmington River as a study area for inclusion in the National Wild and Scenic River System. The passage of H.R. 4350 represents 6 years of hard work by the members of the Connecticut congressional delegation to obtain protection for the Farmington, a magnificient natural resource that is treasured by the entire State.

The passage of this bill, which is cosponsored by my colleague from Connecticut, Senator DODD, demonstrates congressional recognition of the outstanding qualities of the West Branch of the Farmington River. The West Branch is an essentially free-flowing 23-mile long segment of the 600-square-mile Farmington River watershed. The river supports Connecticut's largest trout fishery and is part of the Federal Atlantic salmon restoration program. The river's corridor includes natural areas that support a variety of rare and endangered species, agricultural lands, two State parks, and five State forests.

Upon passage of H.R. 4530, the National Park Service will convene a study committee composed of representatives of State and local government and citizens groups to prepare a study management plan. This plan will define long-term goals and objectives to guide future decisions affecting the river. During the study period, the river will be protected by a moratorium on federally initiated, licensed or funded activities and projects having a negative impact on the river. The study process should take less than 36 months.

Once the management plan is complete, the Governors and the Legislatures in Connecticut and Massachusetts will vote on whether to send the river on for Federal consideration for inclusion in the Wild and Scenic River System. It is my hope that the West Branch of the Farmington River will be included in the National System within a few years.

Mr. President, I would also like to take this opportunity to thank the chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Lands, Reserved Water and Resource Conservation, Mr. WALLOP, for his assistance in moving this bill through the Senate Energy Committee. His cooperation was invaluable to our efforts to bring this bill to final passage in the Senate this year. The State of Connecticut sincerely appreciates his help.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment (No. 2801) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (H.R. 4350) was passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DOLE. I am pleased to yield.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES—H.R. 5233

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate insist on its amendment to H.R. 5233, the fiscal year 1987 Labor-Health and Human Services, Education, and related agencies appropriation bill, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The authority has previously been granted.

Mr. WEICKER. Is the Chair in a position to announce the names of the conferees.

There being no objection, the Chair appointed Mr. WEICKER, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. BYRD, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. CHILES, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. HARKIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WEICKER. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

I yield the floor.

NATIONAL SCHOOL-AGE CHILD CARE AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee be discharged from further consideration of House Joint Resolution 60, to designate National School-Age Child Care Awareness Week, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 60) to designate the week beginning September 1, 1985, as "National School-Age Child Care Awareness Week."

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

AMENDMENT NO. 2802

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator HAWKINS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] for Mrs. HAWKINS proposes an amendment numbered 2802.

On page 2 line 3 delete "September 1, 1985" and insert in lieu thereof, "September 15, 1986"

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, the amendment that I am offering to House Joint Resolution 60 would designate the week beginning September 15, 1986 as "National School-Age Child Care Awareness Week." This designation is particularly timely not only because millions of latchkey children will be entering school during the week of September 15 but also because legislation to authorize a program to encourage the development of school-age child care programs in the States will be sent to the President for his signature that week. That legislation, H.R. 2241, provides for authorization of $20 million a year for 4 years for the State Dependent Care Development Grants Act.

The limited Federal funding that is available through this act is not intended to fund all the before- and after-school child care programs that are needed to care for this Nation's latchkey children. The legislation is a modest attempt to stimulate public and private agencies to develop and finance school-age child care programs in their communities. I am hopeful that this resolution will increase the public's awareness of the plight of latchkey children and the need for school-age child care programs.

Mr. President, I urge my Senate colleagues to accept this amendment and pass this resolution.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2802) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The joint resolution is to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 60) was passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment to the title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read "To designate the week beginning September 15, 1986, as National School-Age Child Care Awareness Week."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

The title was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDING THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1985

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to H.R. 4530, to amend the Department of Defense Authorization Act of 1985, now being held at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4530) to amend the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985, to provide that members of the Commission on Merchant Marine and Defense shall not be considered to be Federal employees for certain purposes, to extend the deadline for reports of the Commission, and to extend the availability of funds appropriated to the Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 4530) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I inquire of the minority leader if he is in a position to confirm any or all of the following Executive Calendar nominations: Calendar No. 1010, Calendar No. 1011, Calendar No. 1012, Calendar No. 1013, Calendar No. 1014, Calendar No. 1015, Calendar No. 1016, Calendar No. 1017, Calendar No. 1018, Calendar No. 1019, Calendar No. 1020, Calendar No. 1021, Calendar No. 1022, Calendar No. 1023, Calendar No. 1024, and Calendar No. 1025, the State-Justice Institute.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, all of the nominations that have been enumerated by the majority leader have been cleared by all Members on this side of the aisle and we are ready to proceed with the confirmation thereof.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished minority leader.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now go to executive session in order to consider the nominations just identified and that the nominations be considered en bloc and confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominees are considered en bloc and confirmed en bloc.

The nominations considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

Alan C. Kay, of Hawaii, to be U.S. district judge for the district of Hawaii.

Richard B. McQuade, Jr., of Ohio, to be U.S. district judge for the northern district of Ohio.

Joel F. Dubina, of Alabama, to be U.S. district judge for the middle district of Alabama.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Stephen S. Trott, of California, to be associate attorney general.

William F. Weld, of Massachusetts, to be an assistant attorney general.

Thomas C. Kelly, of Texas, to be deputy administrator of drug enforcement.

Joseph S. Cage, Jr., of Louisiana, to be U.S. attorney for the western district of Louisiana for the term of 4 years, reappointment.

Joseph P. Russoniello, of California, to be U.S. attorney for the northern district of California for the term of 4 years, reappointment.

James L. Fyke, of Illinois, to be U.S. Marshal for the central district of Illinois for the term of 4 years, reappointment.

Thomas A. O'Hara, Jr., of Nebraska, to be U.S. Marshal for the district of Nebraska for the term of 4 years, reappointment.

Arthur David Borinsky, of New Jersey, to be U.S. Marshal for the district of New Jersey for the term of 4 years.

Richard L. Cox, Jr., of Florida, to be U.S. Marshal for the middle district of Florida for the term of 4 years, reappointment.

Wallace L. McLendon, of Florida, to be U.S. Marshal for the northern district of Florida for the term of 4 years, reappointment.

Sherman L. Hansford, of Kentucky, to be U.S. Marshal for the eastern district of Kentucky for the term of 4 years.

Gene G. Abdallah, of South Dakota, to be U.S. Marshal for the district of South Dakota for the term of 4 years, reappointment.

STATE JUSTICE INSTITUTE

The following-named persons to be members of the board of directors of the State Justice Institute for the terms indicated:

For terms of 2 years from the date of the first meeting of the board:

Lawrence H. Cooke, of New York.
John F. Daffron, Jr., of Virginia.
Daniel John Meador, of Virginia.
Rodney A. Peeples, of South Carolina.
Clement Clay Torbert, Jr., of Alabama.

For terms of 3 years from the date of the first meeting of the board:

James Duke Cameron, of Arizona.
Janice L. Gradwohl, of Nebraska.
Sandra D. O'Connor, of Maryland.
Larry P. Polansky, of Virginia.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the various nominations were confirmed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified that the Senate has given its consent to these nominations.

NOMINATION OF JOEL FREDRICK DUBINA TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF ALABAMA

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it is with a sense of pride and satisfaction that I rise today to speak in favor of Joel Dubina who has been nominated by the President to be a Federal district court judge for the middle district of Alabama. There has been much discussion in recent months concerning the need for excellence in our Federal judiciary. With this nomination, the President has met the high standards of excellence which we must require of those who are to sit for life on the Federal bench.

I have personally known Joel Dubina for many years. I believe that he will bring to the bench not only a solid knowledge of the law but also a strong sense of the purpose of a judge—to administer justice fairly and equitably to all.

Joel was a dean's-list student at the University of Alabama where he graduated in 1970. He continued his education at Cumberland Law School where he graduated in 1973. Upon graduation from Cumberland, Joel served as a law clerk to District Court Judge Robert Varner. Judge Varner trained him well since he has been nominated to fill the vacancy Judge Varner will leave upon retirement—after a long and distinguished career.

Joel was in private practice from 1974 until 1983. During that time he gained the reputation of being a well-prepared and articulate lawyer. He handled both criminal and civil cases and his practice was equally balanced between Federal and State courts. Since 1983, Joel has served with distinction as the U.S. magistrate for the middle district of Alabama, and his experience with the Federal court system should prove invaluable.

While he has devoted a large amount of time to his legal career, Joel is also a devoted family man and has served the Montgomery community in many ways. Joel Dubina's work with the YMCA, the Lion's Club, and the Leukemia Foundation has brought him into contact with a broad spectrum of the community and should give him a better understanding of those who will appear before him.

On behalf of all Alabamians I would wish Joel Dubina well as he begins a new career as U.S. Federal judge.

NOMINATION OF ARTHUR BORINSKY TO BE U.S. MARSHAL FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEW JERSEY

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, New Jersey is fortunate that today the Senate will confirm the appointment of Arthur D. Borinsky as U.S. marshal for New Jersey. Mr. Borinsky has had a distinguished record of community and public service in our State and I look forward to his continuing that record in this important new position.

Mr. Borinsky has served in the criminal justice system as undersheriff of Essex County and as a commissioner of the New Jersey State Police Training Commission. In addition to more traditional academic training, Mr. Borinsky is a graduate of the Essex County Police Academy.

The criminal justice system has not been the only beneficiary of Arthur Borinsky's community involvement. He has served as chairman of the United Jewish Federation of Metro West, chairman of the Century Division of Israel Bonds, chairman of the Expansion Committee of the Daughters of Israel Home for the Aged in West Orange, NJ, and many other civic projects too numerous to mention.

And in addition to his distinguished criminal justice experience, Mr. Borinsky headed a successful business for almost 20 years in New Jersey, as chairman and chief executive officer of Tuscan Dairy Farms.

Mr. President, New Jersey is fortunate that Arthur Borinsky has agreed to continue his public service and I am pleased to endorse his nomination today.

NOMINATION OF CHIEF JUSTICE TORBERT TO THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE STATE JUSTICE INSTITUTE

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I would like to recognize and congratulate Chief Justice Clement Clay, "Bo", Torbert, Jr., of Alabama, on his nomination to the board of directors for the State Justice Institute. This institute was created to aid State and local governments in strengthening and improving their judicial systems.

After obtaining his bachelor of science degree from Auburn University in Auburn, AL, and his law degree from the University of Alabama School of Law, Chief Justice Torbert began his illustrious legal career by practicing law with Congressman BILL DICKINSON of Alabama and serving as a municipal court judge. Chief Justice Torbert was elected to the Alabama State Legislature in 1958 and served until 1962, and he also served a total of 7 years in the Alabama State Senate. Chief Justice Torbert is a member of the American Bar Association, the Alabama State Bar Association, the Federal Bar Association, the National Center for State Courts, the Conference of Chief Justices, where he is first vice president and on the board of directors, and the Alabama Judicial Study Commission, where he serves as chairman.

Chief Justice Torbert began his tenure as chief justice in 1977. While serving as chief justice, Mr. Torbert has made significant contributions to the Alabama court system in the areas of case management, juror management, and financial management. In the area of case management, the Alabama courts have experienced no case delay, except in isolated situations. In the area of juror management, the Alabama courts meet or exceed the ABA national juror standards in the areas of juror summons and juror orientation. Also, in the area of financial management, the Alabama courts have an automated expense account that allows them to know how much money the judges and clerks spend each day.

I believe all these accomplishments qualify Chief Justice Torbert for the position on the board of directors for the State Justice Institute. He has gained a wealth of experience as chief justice that can only benefit the Nation as he serves in this position. He is a good friend and I wish Justice Torbert and all the other nominees to this State justice board of directors congratulations on their nominations.

The State Justice Institute has been many years in coming. At this time I would like to recognize the efforts of the National Center for State Courts and the work of the Conference of Chief Justices for their assistance and their years of perseverance. I would also like to thank Harry Swegle, the Washington liaison for the national center, because it is largely through his dedication and tireless efforts that the institute will now become a reality.

NOMINATION OF HON. CLEMENT CLAY TORBERT, JR., CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE ALABAMA SUPREME COURT, TO BE A MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE STATE JUSTICE INSTITUTE

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I offer my strongest support for the nomination of Hon. Clement Clay Torbert, Jr., chief justice of the Alabama Supreme Court, to be a member of the board of directors of the State Justice Institute.

Chief Justice Torbert has a most distinguished background. After graduating from the University of Alabama Law School in 1954, he practiced law in Opelika, AL, until 1977, when he was elected as Alabama's 25th chief justice. He was reelected without opposition for a second 6-year term beginning January 18, 1983.

Chief Justice Torbert has also served as a municipal judge and in both houses of the Alabama State legislature. He is an active member of the Lee County, AL, and American Bar Associations. He serves as a member of the board of commissioners of the Alabama State Bar and is a member of the Farrah Law Society. He was elected to the Alabama Academy of Honor in 1979. Further, he is the president of the Alabama Judicial Study Commission, a member of the board of directors of the American Judicature Society, and first vice president and a member of the board of directors of the Conference of Chief Justices.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support his nomination.

NOMINATION OF JOEL FREDRICK DUBINA TO SERVE AS JUDGE FOR THE U.S. DISTRICT COURT, MIDDLE DISTRICT OF ALABAMA

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I offer my strongest support for Joel Fredrick Dubina, who is President Reagan's nominee to serve as district court judge for the middle district of Alabama. Mr. Dubina comes to us highly qualified to serve as a district court judge.

Mr. President, Joel Dubina is a graduate of the University of Alabama, where he was on the dean's list for 2 years. He went on to the Cumberland School of Law at Samford University and was graduated in 1973. After graduation, he served as a clerk to the man he is now nominated to succeed, Judge Robert E. Varner.

Joel Dubina served in private law practice for the next 9 years with the Montgomery firm of Jones, Murray,

Steward & Yarbrough. During that time, he worked in varied areas of the law including criminal defense work, real estate, corporate law, domestic relations, civil litigation, civil rights, antitrust and securities fraud. Later in his law practice, he concentrated his efforts in civil litigation, primarily in the Federal courts.

In 1983, he was appointed U.S. magistrate for the middle district of Alabama, which is the position in which he now serves.

Mr. President, this committee has taken an exceedingly close look at all the facets that make an excellent Federal judge. In particular, we have stressed a nominee's professional competence, personal integrity, and fidelity to the Constitution. Joel Dubina has all of these.

Our analysis of a nominee's professional competence has covered such areas as length, breadth and depth of legal experience, writing skills, and contributions to legal scholarship. Joel Dubina's record is a stellar one in terms of his legal experience, and is exemplary of the kind of background we look for in Federal judicial nominees.

In his 9 years of private practice, Joel Dubina has served as counsel or associate counsel for approximately 375 cases, half of which were heard in Federal courts. Many of these cases involved various types of litigation, covering hundreds of depositions, thousands of hours of discovery, and numerous briefs, motions and pleadings.

In the cases which he reported as the 10 most significant litigated matters which he has personally handled, Joel Dubina has represented to this committee the benchmarks of legal professionalism. In one case, State of Alabama versus Coffee County Abstract and Title Co., Joel Dubina successfully argued his client's case before the full Alabama Supreme Court. This was also a case which the legal profession terms as one of first impression, in which the court set a precedent regarding what nonlawyer title company employees could and could not do in conducting real estate closings.

In another case, Vanguard Security Life Insurance Company versus Alabama State Insurance Commissioner, Mr. Dubina argued against the constitutionality of an Alabama statute which allowed the insurance commissioner to place an insurance company under an order of supervision. In this, his first argument before a three-judge Federal panel, Joel Dubina was successful in overturning the State statute as an unconstitutional infringement on 14th amendment due process guarantees.

The high regard for which his colleagues hold Joel Dubina became most apparent when a Federal district judge appointed Mr. Dubina as legal guardian to represent mental patients in the case of Lynch versus Baxley. Here Mr. Dubina represented the patients at recommitment hearings ordered by the judge.

The writing skills portrayed by Mr. Dubina in the questionnaire he prepared for this committee are to be admired and even envied. His case descriptions and essay responses reflect a clear, thoughtful, and tightly worded writing style which will serve him well as a district court judge.

Mr. Dubina's contribution to legal scholarship is also worth noting as we consider his qualifications. As a U.S. magistrate, he had his opinion in the case of Burnett versus Kindt published. Furthermore, he delivered a speech to the 11th Circuit Judicial Conference in May, 1984, entitled, "What can lawyers and judges do to expedite cases in the Federal courts?"Certainly this is a subject of particular interest to this committee.

Mr. President, a nominee's personal integrity must also be closely measured when being considered for a Federal judgeship. In word and in deed, Joel Dubina's integrity is of the highest. His integrity is reflected in his attitude and desire to serve as a judge without interference or conflict of interest.

The third and certainly not the least criterion by which we should evaluate a candidate for a judgeship is that person's fidelity to the Constitution and to legal precedent. Joel Dubina is committed to an even application of the law without imposing his personal views on a decision. Furthermore, he believes in the principle of judicial restraint, realizing that a balance of power can only be maintained when the judicial branch adheres to its job as interpreter of the law and avoids the temptation of legislating.

Mr. President, apart from his distinguished service at the bar and on the bench, Joel Dubina has given much of his time to community service both in the law and in civic activities. As a private practitioner, he offered free legal representation to disadvantaged persons through the "Lighthouse," an organization funded through private contributions to aid individuals who cannot afford legal counsel. He also represented disadvantaged persons, without charge, based on referrals from the Montgomery County Bar Association.

Joel Dubina has been active in county, State and Federal bar associations. He was the president of the Montgomery chapter of the Federal Bar Association in 1982 and 1983.

His civic activities are exemplary. Joel Dubina has given a great deal of his time to his local YWCA, and served on the board of trustees of the Alabama Leukemia Foundation for 4 years. He and his family are active in Trinity Presbyterian Church, where Joel is a member of the board of deacons.

Mr. President, it is with great pride that I recommend this extraordinary and highly qualified young man to the committee for our approval as a U.S. district judge for the middle district of Alabama. I urge my colleagues to support the nomination.

NOMINATION OF JUDGE LAWRENCE H. COOKE

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I have already advised the Committee on the Judiciary of my support for Judge Lawrence H. Cooke's appointment to the Board of Directors of the State Justice Institute, but, as we have now confirmed his nomination, I should like to, if only briefly, reiterate my confidence in Judge Cooke for the full Senate.

Judge Cooke, until his retirement in 1984, served as chief judge for the New York State Court of Appeals, an office in which he served with the greatest distinction. Previously, he served on both the New York State Supreme Court and the New York State Appellate Division. And Judge Cooke has been an active and recognized leader in the cause of legal reform in his State.

Judge Cooke has been of special and valued assistance to this Senator as a member of my judicial screening panel, which advises me on appointments to the Federal bench in New York.

There are, in short, Mr. President, few jurists in the State of New York possessing the tremendous experience and ability of Lawrence H. Cooke. I commend the decision of the Senate, and send Judge Cooke my great congratulations on the honor of this newest office. It is richly deserved.●

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TIME FOR COMMITTEES TO FILE REPORTS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that committees have until the hour of 5 p.m. today, Friday, September 12, 1986, for the purpose of filing reports only.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. There is no objection on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DOLE. Just to recap for Monday, we will convene at 11 a.m. and under the standing order the leaders will have 10 minutes each. There will be two special orders in favor of Senator PROXMIRE and Senator LEVIN for not to exceed 5 minutes each. There will be morning business until 12 noon, and following morning business we will resume consideration of the Rehnquist nomination. It could be later on Monday that we could have an appropriation bill, if we can find one that is not controversial.

I would guess though if any votes are ordered on that particular bill they would be put over until Tuesday. I think it is fair to say there will be no votes on Monday.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 4 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TELEVISION COVERAGE OF IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, the proceedings of the Special Committee for Impeachment under rule XI will be televised live on channel 2 on the congressional cable system. Thus, those Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives who are not directly participating in this part of the proceeding will be able to follow these evidentiary hearings from their respective offices and elsewhere in the Capitol and the House and Senate Office Buildings.

As previously announced, these sessions are scheduled from 9 a.m. to noon and 2 to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday of next week, September 15, 1986, through September 19, 1986, in the Caucus Room of the Senate Russell Office Building, Room SR 325.

I want to express my appreciation to Congressman ROSE, chairman of the Speaker's broadcast committee, for his assistance in arranging for this coverage.●

COLLECTION AGENCIES ARE WRONG APPROACH FOR FARMERS

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, at a time when thousands of farmers are caught in a serious financial crisis, it is absolutely incredible that the Farmers Home Administration [FmHA] has retained a private debt collection agency to collect delinquent payments from FmHA borrowers.

The recent decision by the FmHA concerning delinquent loans has created much anxiety among farmers in my home State of Illinois. The Administration reportedly has this new practice under review. Farmers have never before had to contend with collection agencies in connection with Farmers Home loans, and I am very concerned about the financial and psychological impact this approach will have on thousands of farmers.

Last January, I wrote to Vance Clark, the Administrator of the Farmers Home Administration, to urge forbearance and compassion for those farmers who are behind in repaying their loans.

I believe that the FmHA should again work to restructure these loans, and give farmers the time they need to work out their significant financial problems. For this reason, I strongly support the action taken by the Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations on Tuesday, September 9. The subcommittee adopted an amendment which provided that no funds appropriated by H.R. 5177, the fiscal year 1987 appropriation bill for agriculture, may be used by the Farmers Home Administration to contract with private debt collection agencies to collect delinquent payments from FmHA borrowers. I believe it is time for the Farmers Home Administration to seriously review their lending practices. It is my hope that this amendment will force them to begin the process.

Mr. President, I am also concerned about the health of the Farm Credit System. The Farm Credit System is made up of 37 banks in 12 districts around the country, as well as a variety of other agencies important to farmers. The system holds approximately a third of the Nation's farm debt. Farmers look to the system to provide short-term loans for spring planting and longer-term loans for purchasing equipment and land.

The Administration has had since December 23, 1985, to appoint a three-member Board of Directors for the Farm Credit System, which is farmer owned and the largest source of loans for farmers. However, the Administration has only appointed two of the three members. I believe that this delay in making the last appointment may affect the availability and terms of farm loans, as well as the effectiveness of the Farm Credit Administration Board. We have the responsibility to maintain public confidence in our Farm Credit System. Farmers have enough to worry about already. It is vital that our Farm Credit System be fully staffed, and prepared to handle the present serious farm credit crisis.

At this time of great crisis in our agricultural sector, I believe that the Administration's policies should stress forbearance and compassion, as our farmers continue to work hard in order to cope with the depression in the agricultural sector of our economy.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DANFORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

FORECAST FOR REAL CAPITAL SPENDING—1986

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, yesterday, September 11, the Commerce Department's Bureau of Economic Analysis issued its updated forecast on real capital spending for 1986.

The Commerce Department's estimate, which was an adjustment downward from a prior survey, indicates that in 1986 there will be a 2.5-percent reduction in real capital spending.

The 2.5-percent reduction that is forecast for 1986 as compared with 1985 is made up of a variety of component parts.

The Commerce Department estimates that the manufacturing sector of American business will reduce its capital spending not by 2.5 percent but by 6.2 percent, and, further, that the durable goods industry will reduce its capital spending by 6.9 percent.

By way of further refinement of these estimates, the Commerce Department forecasts that the blast furnace steelw_rks industry will reduce its capital spending by 10.5 percent; electrical machinery by 6.3 percent; machinery except electrical by 16.9 percent; motor vehicles by 12.4 percent; stone, glass, and clay by 6.8 percent; textiles by 7 percent; and petroleum by 27.5 percent.

□ 1550

Mr. President, in articles that appeared in several papers today, there were some comments on the projections by the Department of Commerce. The Washington Post reported, quoting in part from the article:

> Many analysts said they believed the investment decline will be even worse than the survey plans indicate, casting further doubt on the Reagan administration's forecast for revived economic growth in the second half of the year.

The article goes on to say:

> Michael Evans, head of Evans Economics, a Washington consultng firm, said he believed investment spending will decline by 5 percent this year, double the 2.5 percent survey prediction. "This has been a bad year for business spending. We got an extra wallop from the tax changes and the problems in oil country which came on top of an already weak economy," he said.
> Economists said the overhaul of the tax law, which shifts $120 billion in taxes from individuals to businesses, forced companies to scale back investment plans. Many provisions that favored business investment have either been eliminated or scaled back in the overhaul, which is awaiting final congressional approval.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the Washington Post and an article from the Wall Street Journal be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 12, 1986]

BUSINESS INVESTMENT SPENDING DROPS

(By Martin Crutsinger)

U.S. businesses, beset by a sluggish economy and tax-law uncertainty, have reduced their investment spending plans by 2.5 percent this year, the biggest cut since the last recession, the government reported yesterday.

The Commerce Department said a survey completed in August found that businesses, after adjusting for inflation, plan to spend $376.47 billion this year on capital improvement projects, down from $386.32 billion actually spent in 1985.

It would be the first decline in business investment since 1983 and the biggest drop since a 7.9 percent plunge in 1982. Business spending on expansion and modernization rose 8.7 percent in 1985 after surging 15.8 percent in 1984.

Economists blamed the weak economy, cutbacks in oil and gas drilling and uncertainty about changes in the tax law for the steep decline in capital investment plans.

Many analysts said they believed the investment decline will be even worse than the survey plans indicate, casting further doubt on the Reagan administration's forecast for revived economic growth in the second half of the year.

The new estimate of spending plans represented a downward revision from the previous survey taken in April and May. At that time, businesses were planning a somewhat smaller 1.3 percent cut in investment this year.

"The downward revision from an already dismal figure certainly isn't encouraging for economic growth for the rest of the year," said David Wyss, economist with Data Resources Inc. of Lexington, Mass.

The administration is forecasting that the economy, as measured by the gross national product, will expand at a robust annual rate of 4 percent in the last six months of this year, up substantially from the 2.2 percent growth rate turned in from January through June.

But Michael Evans, head of Evans Economics, a Washington consulting firm, said he believed investment spending will decline by 5 percent this year, double the 2.5 percent survey prediction. "This has been a bad year for business spending. We got an extra wallop from the tax changes and the problems in oil country which came on top of an already weak economy," he said.

Economists said the overhaul of the tax law, which shifts $120 billion in taxes from individuals to businesses, forced companies to scale back investment plans. Many provisions that favored business investment have either been eliminated or scaled back in the overhaul, which is awaiting final congressional approval.

"The numbers reflect the reality that businesses have little incentive to invest today," said Jerry Jasinowski, chief economist for the National Association of Manufacturers. "The combination of lousy economic conditions and confusion over taxes throws a lot of cold water on capital investment spending plans."

Before adjusting for inflation, the survey said, industry will spend $379.6 billion on new plant and equipment this year, a drop of 1.9 percent from 1985.

After removing the effects of inflation, the Commerce Department said, manufacturers are planning to cut back capital spending by 7 percent this year. Factories making durable goods, items expected to last three or more years, forecast a 6 percent reduction and businesses making nondurable goods expect to reduce spending by 7.9 percent.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 12, 1986]

WASHINGTON WIRE: A SPECIAL WEEKLY REPORT

Stopping Terrorism is once again a growing U.S. worry:

Officials fear more terrorist attacks may be on the way and concede that they are still on the defensive. They say terrorist groups are relying more on small cells recruited for only one mission, on couriers and on counterfeit or stolen passports. Such tactics make it tougher to track down the sponsors of terrorist attacks.

U.S. strategists seek ways to move the Army's anti-terrorist forces more swiftly to incidents such as the Pakistan hijacking. They cringe at a Bush aide's public comments about seeking permission from allies to base commandos in Europe. "The only way they would agree to this," complains an administration official, "is if it were kept secret."

U.S. officials expect Israel to bomb Palestinian strongholds in retaliation for the attack on a Turkish synagogue.

Lawmakers scramble for ways to meet the deficit-reduction target:

House Democrats consider some previously discarded GOP proposals for selling certain government assets, such as the naval petroleum reserve. The Senate takes another look at about $1 billion of savings that it rejected in a House budget bill. Election-year pressures for action grow, but lawmakers face a struggle to stay within the fiscal 1987 deficit target of $144 billion. Some worry that the impasse may force a post-election, lame-duck session.

Many proposed cuts stir skepticism. Sales of government assets, such as Conrail, would reap only temporary savings. Lawmakers may try to count a first-year, $11 billion revenue bulge from passage of the tax-overhaul law. But doing that without also making major spending cuts, argues Colorado Sen. Armstrong, would be "transparent and phony."

Republicans rush to take the offensive on the anti-drug issue:

In a GOP survey, 76 percent of those polled favored drug testing for elected officials. Some Republican candidates challenge Democrats to submit to tests, Reps. Wolpe of Michigan, McCloskey of indiana and Perkins of Kentucky decline, Democrats cite evidence that drug tests are unreliable but worry about the political risk of refusing.

Both sides attack past support for decriminalizing marijuana. Republicans mail post cards citing Louisiana House candidate Tommy Hudson's votes as a state lawmaker, while Democrats note Colorado Rep. Strang's sponsorship of such a state bill. But one democratic pollster predicts drugs will fade soon as a political issue.

The U.S. Education Department advances release of a report on "schools without drugs" to coincide with Reagan's anti-drug TV talk on Sunday.

A Kemp clash with a Buffalo TV news director is jumped on by the Democrats. They accuse the New York GOP congressman of "losing his cool" by jabbing the newsman in the chest during an argument. A Kemp spokesman says that the incident has been blown out of proportion.

Aids aid would be increased 34 percent to $471 million in the next budget from $351 million in fiscal 1987 under proposals sent by the Health and Human Services Department to the White House. Officials are optimistic that the rise will be approved as part of growing efforts to fight the fatal disease.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, within the next week or two, we will be taking up the conference report on the tax bill on the floor of the Senate. The executive branch, the Commerce Department, has estimated a decline of 2.5 percent in capital spending. We are on the brink of enacting tax legislation which begins from this base of a declining investment in new equipment by American business and we in Congress are going to pass a tax bill which eliminates the investment tax credit and which takes some $1 billion out of depreciation.

In other words, what we will be saying if we pass this conference report is that we are in a position to exacerbate the problem of declining investment in new plant and equipment in the United States.

We will pass a tax bill that will make matters worse, not better, for U.S. competitiveness and for U.S. plant modernization. I point this out because this is a matter that is in the news today. My hope is that, as we proceed to address the question of tax reform, we shall be raising questions on the floor of the Senate on whether tax reform cannot be accomplished short of throwing major monkey wrenches into the American economy. The test of tax reform, I submit, is not simply how much individual rates will be reduced but the effect on the total economy of the United States. If capital investment in new plant and equipment is already on the decline, why should we in Congress want to make things worse and not better?

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

At 11:12 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

S. 2462. An act to provide for the awarding of a special gold medal to Aaron Copland;

H.R. 1529. An act for the relief of Gerald M. Hendley;

H.R. 1783. An act for the relief of Mary E. Stokes;

H.R. 2316. An act for the relief of Paulette Mendes-Silva; and H.J. Res. 580. Joint resolution to designate the week beginning September 7, 1986, as "National Freedom of Information Act Awareness Week".

The bills and joint resolution, except S. 2462, were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

The bill S. 2462 was signed by the Vice President.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. MURKOWSKI, from the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and an amendment to the title:

H.R. 4345: A bill to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to establish a national cemetery in or near Cleveland, Ohio (Rept. No. 99-439).

By Mr. HEINZ, from the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, without amendment:

DRUG PARAPHERNALIA BAN AND IMMIGRATION AMENDMENT

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, today I am proud to introduce two bills to resolve some gray areas of law and forge substantial inroads toward winning the war on drugs. Drug abuse by America's youth is a perennial problem that grows more severe each year despite progressively better understanding of the grave dangers involved. In spite of the well-publicized and tragic deaths of sports stars Len Bias and Don Rogers from illicit drugs, the popularity and use of "crack" and other deadly substances continues to mount. Rather than prospering in the promise of youth, some of tomorrow's potential leaders are instead wallowing in the devastation of addiction to illegal drugs.

Why does this menace continue to rear its ugly head, in the face of the best efforts of educators and law enforcement officials? It seems as though our Federal and State laws banning drugs of every conceivable type should be enough to behead this beast. But somehow those who abuse drugs are not getting the message.

Perhaps it's because of the inconsistencies in our laws. Maybe it's the institutional hypocrisy our young people see. They see that it's OK to buy the pipes, screens, and accessories that drug users need, but patently illegal to have the substances that are used with this paraphernalia.

What should we expect them to think? How should we expect younger citizens to behave when we threaten incarceration on the one hand for possessing cocaine, but allow them to purchase a "free base kit" over the counter and legally carry it home from the store in the same pocket as the controlled substances they have to hide? Perhaps they think we're not serious? Maybe it appears that drug use is the 1980's version of the little white lie. The elders speak out against drug use, but do little or nothing to really control it.

This legislation puts the Congress squarely on track with the young, and most important, it changes our message about drug abuse. This law shows that we're serious.

It's time to correct the impression that the lawmakers of the land speak out of both sides of their mouths. This bill will eliminate the mixed message that drug use is bad but items specifically made to manufacture and ingest drugs are OK.

Today 38 States have wisely chosen to outlaw open sale of drug paraphernalia in one way or another. But States are still powerless to regulate the open advertising of these contraband items through the mail and have no jurisdiction over the initial importation of these products.

This is an area in which States are asking for our help. This bill helps. It controls the availability of drug paraphernalia in four ways. It would make it a criminal act to: Use the mails to sell drug paraphernalia; sell or transport these items interstate; advertise; import or export these items; and, it provides for the seizure and forefeiture of contraband.

Let's strip away the double standard that has come to symbolize our system of laws to many young Americans. I support this legislation with pride and conviction. I urge my colleagues to join me in this long overdue solution to the most serious of legal dilemmas.

A second piece of legislation I am introducing today would empower our immigration authorities to turn away known drug users and sellers. This bill would broaden the discretion of our immigration officers to exclude and deport those persons known to have possessed and used illegal drugs. It would also enlarge the class of drugs to be covered.

I have long thought that the way to keep drugs out of the hands of our young people is to keep the drugs themselves out of this country. The way to do that is to keep the drug users and dealers out in the first place.

Current law allows immigration officers to exclude only those who are "traffickers," but that seems too high a standard, too difficult to define and prove. My bill would expand the existing law to keep out those who are known users of or who possess illegal drugs.

This legislation is a step forward whose time has surely come. I urge my colleagues to join me in enthusiastically supporting this bill.●

Affiliates of bank holding companies may deal in and underwrite such industrial development bonds, the interest on which is exempt from Federal income tax under section 103(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, if (A) a State, territory, possession of the United States, or any political subdivision of the foregoing, or the District of Columbia pledges its full faith and credit for the payment of all principal and interest on such bonds, or (B) the issuer, or the State or local governmental unit on behalf of which the industrial development bonds were issued, is considered the sole owner, for Federal income tax purposes, of the facility with respect to which financing is to be provided from the proceeds of such industrial development bonds.".

AMENDMENT No. 2798

At the end of the bill, add the following new title:

TITLE III—MORATORIUM ON ACTIONS REGARDING NONBANK BANKS CHARTERS, INSURANCE, AND ACQUISITIONS

SEC. 301. (a) Prior to August 13, 1987, the Comptroller of the Currency shall not grant final approval of any application for a charter, for amendment of an institution's articles of association to eliminate restrictions on powers, or for the exercise of banking powres pursuant to section 26103(b) of the District of Columbia Code, by any association or entity that is not (or upon the commencement of business, will not be) a bank within the meaning of section 2(c) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841(c)).

(b) Prior to August 13, 1987, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall not grant final approval of any application under section 5(a) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act by a State bank which is not a bank within the meaning of section 2(c) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841(c)) to become an insured bank, unless the bank is required by State law to obtain Federal deposit insurance and, if controlled by a company, was controlled by such company on August 13, 1986.

(c) Prior to August 13, 1987, the appropriate Federal banking agency shall disapprove any notice under section 7(j) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(j)) involving the acquisition or control of an insured bank which is not, or upon consummation will not be, operated as a bank within the meaning of section 2(c) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841(c)).

(c) Prior to August 13, 1987, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall not approve any application by a bank holding company under section 4 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843), to acquire or expand the activities of an insured bank that is not a bank within the meaning of section 2(c) of that Act, unless such insured bank engages solely in activities permissible for bank holding companies by regulation adopted pursuant to section 4(c)(8) of that Act on or before August 13, 1986.

(e) This section shall not apply to an insured bank that—

(1) engages exclusively in credit operations;

(2) does not accept demand deposits or deposits the depositor may withdraw by check or similar means for payment to third parties or others and is not in the business of making commercial loans;

(3) does not accept any savings or time deposits unless such deposit is in an amount of more than $100,000; and

(4) maintains only one office.

(f) For purposes of this section, the term "insured bank" has the same meaning as in section 3(h) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(h)).

ACTIVITIES OF NONBANKS

SEC. 302. The Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841 et seq.), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"RESTRICTIONS ON INSURED BANKS

"SEC. 13. (a) Prior to August 13, 1987, an insured bank that is controlled by a company that is not a bank holding company may not—

"(1) offer or market the products of services of an affiliate engaged in an activity not permissible for bank holding companies under this Act or permit its products or services to be offered to or marketed by or through any such affiliate;

"(2) engage in activities that would make it a bank as defined in this Act;

"(3) increase the number of locations from which it conducts business after August 13, 1986; or

"(4) permit any overdraft, including an intra-day overdraft, on behalf of an affiliate, unless such overdraft is the result of a computer error, inadvertent accounting error, or unanticipated delivery of book-entry government securities against payment, and is beyond the control of the bank and affiliate.

"(b) For purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'insured bank' has the same meaning as in section 3(h) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(h)); and

"(2) The term 'affiliate' means any company that directly or indirectly controls an insured bank and any subsidiary of such company.".

On page 11, line 2, insert "improperly" after "of".

On page 14, line 1, insert "became aware or" after "States".

On page 14, strike out lines 3 through 9.

On page 14, line 11, strike out "Sec. 7." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 6."

On page 15, line 5, strike out "of" and all that follows through "retention." on line 6 and insert in lieu thereof "when the retention of funds has actually occurred.".

On page 15, line 8, strike out "Sec. 8." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 7.".

On page 15, line 12, insert "in its own operations and direct business relationships" after "section 3(a)".

On page 16, line 9, strike out "Sec. 9." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 8.".

On page 16, line 14, insert "shall have access to and" after "general,".

On page 16, line 15, insert ", including any electronic data or records," after "records".

On page 17, line 1, strike out "8" and insert in lieu thereof "7".

WILD AND SCENIC RIVERS ACT AMENDMENTS

McCLURE AMENDMENT NO. 2801

Mr. DOLE (for Mr. McCLURE) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4350) to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act, and for other purposes; as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof:

"TITLE I—CACHE LA POUDRE, COLORADO

"SEC. 101. Section 3(a) of the Wild and Scenic River Act (16 U.S.C. 1274) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"'(56) CACHE LA POUDRE, COLORADO.—The following segments as generally depicted on the proposed boundary map number FS-56 and dated March 1986, published by the United States Department of Agriculture, each to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture; except that those portions of the segments so designated which are within the boundary of Rocky Mountain National Park shall continue to be administered by the Secretary of the Interior:

"'(A) Beginning at Poudre Lake downstream to the confluence of Joe Wright Creek, as a wild river. This segment to be designated the "Peter H. Dominick Wild River Area".

"'(B) Downstream from the confluence of Joe Wright Creek to a point where the river intersects the easterly north-south line of the west half southwest quarter of section 1, township 8 north, range 71 west of the sixth principal meridian, as a recreational river.

"'(C) South Fork of the Cache la Poudre River from its source to the Commanche Peak Wilderness Boundary, approximately four miles, as a wild river.

"'(D) Beginning at the Commanche Peak Wilderness Boundary to a point on the South Fork of the Cache la Poudre River in section 1, township 7 north, range 73 west of the sixth principal meridian, at elevation 8050 mean sea level, as a recreational river.

"'(E) South Fork of the Cache la Poudre River from its intersection with the easterly section line of section 30, township 8 north, range 72 west of the sixth principal meridian, to confluence of the main stem of the Cache la Poudre River, as a wild river.

"'With respect to the portions of the river segments designated by this paragraph which are within the boundaries of Rocky Mountain National Park, the requirements of section 102 shall be fulfilled by the Secretary of the Interior through appropriate revisions to the general management plan for the park, and the boundaries, classification, and development plans for such portions need not be published in the Federal Register. Such revisions to the general management plan for the park shall assure that no development or use of parklands shall be undertaken that is inconsistent with the designation of such river segments as a wild river. For the purposes of the segments designated by this paragraph, there are authorized to be appropriated $500,000 for development and $2,500,000 for land acquisition.'.

"SEC. 102. Inclusion of the designated portions of the Cache la Poudre River and the Wild and Scenic Rivers system under section 101 of this title shall not interfere with the exercise of existing decreed water rights to water which has heretofore been stored or diverted by means of the present capacity of storage, conveyance, or diversion structures that exist as of the date of enactment of this title, or operation and maintenance of such structures. Nor shall inclusion of the designated portions of the Cache la Poudre River in the Wild and Scenic Rivers System be utilized in any Federal proceeding, whether concerning a license, permit, right-of-way, or other Federal action, as a reason or basis to prohibit the development or operation of any water impoundments, diversion facilities, and hydroelectric power and transmission facilities below Poudre Park located entirely downstream from and potentially affecting designated portions of the Cache la Poudre River, or relocation of highway 14 to any point east of the north-south half section line of section 2, township 8 north, range 71 west of the sixth principal meridian, as necessary to provide access to Poudre Park around such facilities: Provided, That due consideration shall be given to reasonable measures for minimizing the impact of such facilities and road relocation on the designated segments. Congress finds that development of water impoundments, diversion facilities, and hydroelectric power and transmission facilities located entirely downstream from the designated portions of the Cache la Poudre River below Poudre Park, in accordance with the provisions of this section, is not incompatible with the designation of portions of the Cache la Poudre River in the Wild and Scenic Rivers system under section 101 of this title. The reservation of water established by the inclusion of portions of the Cache la Poudre River in the Wild and Scenic Rivers System shall be subject to the provisions of this title, shall be adjudicated in Colorado Water Court, and shall have a priority date as of the date of enactment of this title.

"SEC. 103. (a) GRANTS AND ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary of Agriculture, acting through the Chief of the Forest Service, shall provide grants and technical assistance to the City of Fort Collins, Colorado, to carry out a study regarding the designation of the following area as a national recreation area: the 18.5-mile segment of the Cache la Poudre River Corridor from the northwest boundary of the city of Fort Collins urban growth area to the Weld-Larimer County line.

"(b) STUDY.—The study under this section shall include each of the following:

"(A) a comprehensive evaluation of the public recreation opportunities and flood plain management options which are available with respect to the river corridor involved;

"(B) an evaluation of the natural, historical, and recreational values of such corridor;

"(C) patterns for possible land acquisition within the corridor which are deemed necessary for the purpose of resource protection, scenic and integrity, or management and administration of the corridor area;

"(D) cooperative management proposals for the administration of the corridor area;

"(E) the number of visitors and types of public use within the corridor area that can be accommodated in accordance with the full protection of its resources; and

"(F) the facilities deemed necessary to accommodate and provide access for such visitors and uses, including the location and estimated costs of such facilities.

"(c) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Within three years of the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary of Agriculture shall transmit to the Congress a comprehensive report containing the results of the study conducted pursuant to this section.

"(d) FUNDING.—There are hereby authorized to be appropriated up to $150,000 to carry out the provisions of this section.

"(e) COST SHARING.—Not more than 75 per centum of the cost of the study carried out under this section shall be paid by the United States: Provided, That in no event shall the contribution of the United States exceed $150,000. The remaining portion of such costs shall be contributed by interested parties. The portion contributed by such interested parties may consist of appropriated funds or contributed services.

"SEC. 104. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior shall, within 30 days of the enactment of this title, complete the exchange as described in the Decision Notice and Finding of No Significant Impact, Trust For Public Land Proposed Land-for-Land Exchange, signed by the Rocky Mountain Regional Forester, on August 22, 1985, to acquire certain private lands in the portion of the Cache La Poudre River designated in section 3(a)(56)(B) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1274(a)(56(B)).

"TITLE II—FARMINGTON, WEST BRANCH, CONNECTICUT AND MASSACHUSETTS

"SEC. 201. This title may be cited as the 'Farmington Wild and Scenic River Study Act'.

"SEC. 202(a). Congress finds that—

"(1) the West Branch of the Farmington River and related land areas possess resource values of national significance, such as significant white water rapids, undeveloped lands, scenic and cultural areas, important sport fisheries, and prime agricultural lands;

"(2) based on the National Rivers Inventory by the National Park Service, published in January 1982, this portion of the Farmington River is eligible for study for inclusion in the wild and scenic rivers system;

"(3) there is strong support among local, State, and Federal officials, area residents, and river users for a concerted cooperative effort to manage the river in a productive and meaningful way; and

"(4) in view of the longstanding Federal practice of assisting States and local governments in protecting, conserving, and enhancing rivers of national significance, the United States has an interest in assisting the State of Connecticut and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the appropriate local governments in managing the river.

"(b) Section 5(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1276(a)) is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"'(92) FARMINGTON, WEST BRANCH, CONNECTICUT AND MASSACHUSETTS.—The segment from the intersection or the New Hartford-Canton, Connecticut, town line upstream to the base of the West Branch Reservoir in Hartland, Connecticut; and the segment from the confluence with Thorp Brook in Sandisfield, Massachusetts, to Hayden Pond in Otis, Massachusetts.'.

"(c) Section 5(b) of such Act (16 U.S.C. 1276(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(7) The study of the West Branch of the Farmington River identified in paragraph (92) of subsection (a) shall be completed and the report submitted thereon not later than the end of the third fiscal year beginning after the enactment of this paragraph. Such report shall include a discussion of management alternatives for the river if it were to be included in the national wild and scenic river system.'.

"(d)(1) At the earliest practicable date following the enactment of this title, but not later than forty-five days after enactment, the Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Secretary') shall establish the Farmington River Study Committee (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Committee'). The Secretary shall consult with the Committee on a regular basis during the conduct of the study. Membership on the Committee shall consist of seventeen members appointed by the Secretary as follows:

"(A) One member shall be appointed by the Secretary.

"(B) Two members shall be appointed by the Secretary from a list of candidates supplied to the Secretary by the Governor of the State of Connecticut.

"(C) Two members shall be appointed by the Secretary from a list of candidates supplied to the Secretary by the Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

"(D) Two members shall be appointed by the Secretary from a list of candidates supplied to the Secretary by the Farmington River Watershed Association.

"(E) One member shall be appointed by the Secretary from each of the eight towns located along the West Branch of the river. The governing body of each of the eight towns shall provide a list of candidates to the Secretary from which the eight appointments under this paragraph shall be made.

"(F) Two members shall be appointed by the Secretary from a list of candidates supplied to the Secretary by the Metropolitan District Commission of Hartford, Connecticut.

"(2) The members of the Committee shall elect a chairman, vice chairman, and recording secretary from the membership at the first official meeting of the Committee. Official minutes shall be kept of each regular and special meeting of the Committee and shall be open for public inspection.

"(3) Any vacancy on the Committee shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made. Any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term. Vacancies in the membership of the Committee shall not affect its power to function if there remain sufficient members to constitute a quorum under paragraph (4) of this subsection.

"(4) A majority of the members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum for all meetings.

"(5) The Committee shall advise the Secretary in conducting the study of the Farmington River segment specified in section 5(a)(92) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act. The Committee also shall advise the Secretary concerning management alternatives should the river be included in the wild and scenic rivers system.

"(6) Members of the Committee shall serve without compensation but may be compensated for reasonable and necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties as members of the Committee.

"(7) The Committee may accept and utilize the services of voluntary, uncompensated personnel.

"(8) The Committee shall terminate on the later of the following:

"(A) the completion of the river study of the Farmington River described in section 5(a)(92) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act; or

"(B) the publication of managment alternatives should the river be included in the wild and scenic rivers system.

"(e) As used in this title (other than in subsection (b)) the term 'River' means the segments of the Farmington River described in paragraph (92) of section 5(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1275(a)).

"(f) There are authorized to be appropriated up to $150,000 to carry out the purposes of this title.

"TITLE III—GREAT EGG HARBOR, NEW JERSEY

"SEC. 301. (a) STUDY.—Section 5(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1271-1287) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(93) Great Egg Harbor River, New Jersey: The entire river.'.

"(b) COMPLETION DATE.—Section 5(b)(3) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: 'The study of the river named in paragraph (93) of subsection (a) shall be completed not later than three years after the date of the enactment of this sentence.'.

"(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Paragraph (4) of section 5(b) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: 'Effective October 1, 1986, there are authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of conducting the study of the river named in paragraph (93) not to exceed $150,000.'.

"TITLE IV—SALINE BAYOU, LOUISIANA

"SEC. 401. Section 3(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1274(a)) is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"'(57) SALINE BAYOU, LOUISIANA.—The segment from Saline Lake upstream to the Kisatchie National Forest, as generally depicted on the Proposed Boundary Map, numbered fs-57, and dated March, 1986; to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture. For the purposes of the segment designated by this paragraph, there are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years commencing after September 30, 1986, not to exceed $1,000,000 for the acquisition of lands and interests in lands and for development.'.

"TITLE V—GENERIC AMENDMENTS

"SEC. 501. (a) Section 3(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1274(a)) is amended by redesignating the paragraphs relating to the Au Sable River, the Tuolumne River, the Illinois River, and the Owyhee River as paragraphs (52) through (55) respectively.

"(b)(1) The first sentence of section 3(b) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended as follows:

"(A) Strike out 'one year from the date of this Act' and substitute 'one year from the date of designation of such component under subsection (a)'.

"(B) Strike out the second parenthetical statement, '(which boundaries shall include an average of not more than 320 acres of land per mile measured from the ordinary high water mark on both sides of the river)'.

"(C) Strike out the semicolon and the remainder of the sentence after the words 'its various segments' and substitute a period.

"(2) The second sentence of section 3(d) of such Act is amended by striking out 'Said boundaries, classification, and development plans' and substituting the words 'Notice of the availability of the boundaries and classification, and of subsequent boundary amendments'.

"(3) Section 3 of such Act is amended by adding the following new subsections at the end:

"'(c) Maps of all boundaries and descriptions of the classifications of designated river segments, and subsequent amendments to such boundaries, shall be available for public inspection in the offices of the administering agency in the District of Columbia and in locations convenient to the designated river.

"'(d)(1) For rivers designated on or after January 1, 1986, the Federal agency charged with the administration of each component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System shall prepare a comprehensive management plan for such river segment to provide for the protection of the river values. The plan shall address resource protection, development of lands and facilities, user capacities, and other management practices necessary or desirable to achieve the purposes of this Act. The plan shall be coordinated with and may be incorporated into resource management planning for affected adjacent Federal lands. The plan shall be prepared, after consultation with State and local governments and the interested public within three full fiscal years after the date of designation. Notice of the completion and availability of such plans shall be published in the Federal Register.

"'(2) For rivers designated before January 1, 1986, all boundaries, classifications, and plans shall be reviewed for conformity within the requirements of this subsection within 10 years through regular agency planning processes.'.

"SEC. 502. Section 4 of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by adding a new subsection (d) after subsection (c):

"'(d) The boundaries of any river proposed in section 5(a) of this Act for potential addition to the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System shall generally comprise that area measured within one-quarter mile from the ordinary highwater mark on each side of the river. In the case of any designated river, prior to publication of boundaries pursuant to section 3(b) of this Act, the boundaries also shall comprise the same area. This subsection shall not be construed to limit the possible scope of the study report to address areas which may lie more than one-quarter mile from the ordinary high water mark on each side of the river.'.

"SEC. 503. Section 5 of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended as follows:

"(a) In subsection (a) paragraph (90) relating to the North Umpqua is redesignated as paragraph (91).

"(b) At the end of subsection (b)(1) add: 'Studies of the rivers named in paragraph (38), (55), (83), and (87) shall be completed and the reports transmitted to the Congress not later than January 1, 1987.'.

"(c) Amend paragraph (4) of subsection (b) to read as follows:

"'(4) For the purposes of conducting the studies of rivers named in subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as necessary.'.

"SEC. 504. (a) Section 6(e) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by striking out 'Congress in authorized' and substituting 'Congress is authorized'.

"(b) Section 6(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by striking out 'donation, and lands' in the second sentence and substituting 'donation or by exchange in accordance with subsection (d) of this section. Lands'.

"(c) Section 6(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by inserting '(1)' after '(a)' and by adding the following at the end:

"'(2) When a tract of land lies partially within and partially outside the boundaries of a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System, the appropriate Secretary may, with the consent of the landowners for the portion outside the boundaries, acquire the entire tract. The land or interest therein so acquired outside the boundaries shall not be counted against the average one-hundred-acre-per-mile fee title limitation of subsection (a)(1). The lands or interests therein outside such boundaries, shall be disposed of, consistent with existing authorities of law, by sale, lease, or exchange.'.

"(d) Section 6(b) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended as follows:

"(1) Insert in the first sentence 'outside the ordinary highwater mark on both sides of the river' after the word acreage'.

"(2) Insert 'in fee title' after the word 'owned'.

"SEC. 505. (a) The second sentence of section 7(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by deleting 'approval of this Act' and substituting 'designation of a river as a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System'.

"(b) Section 7(b) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended as follows:

"(1) In the first sentence after clause (i) insert a new clause (ii) as follows:

"'(ii) during such interim period from the date a report is due and the time a report is actually submitted to the Congress; and'.

"(2) Redesignate existing clause (ii) as clause (iii).

"(3) At the end of the second sentence, delete 'approval of this Act' and insert in lieu thereof the words, 'designation of a river for study as provided for in section 5 of this Act'.

"SEC. 506. Section 8(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: 'This subsection shall not be construed to limit the authorities granted in section 6(d) or section 14A of this Act.'.

"SEC. 507. Section 9(b) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by striking out 'issuance or leases,' in the second sentence and substituting 'issuance of leases,'.

"SEC. 508. Section 11 of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by deleting the second sentence in subsection (a) and by amending section (b) to read as follows:

"'(b)(1) The Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, or the head of any Federal agency, shall assist, advise, and cooperate with States or their political subdivisions, landowners, private organizations, or individuals to plan, protect, and manage river resources. Such assistance, advice, and cooperation may be through written agreements or otherwise. This authority applies within or outside a federally administered area and applies to rivers which are components of the Wild and Scenic Rivers System and to other rivers. Any agreement under this subsection may include provisions for limited financial or other assistance to encourage participation in the acquisition, protection, and management of river resources.

"'(2) Wherever appropriate in furtherance of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior are authorized and encouraged to utilize the following:

"'(A) For activities on federally owned land, the Volunteers in the Parks Act of 1969 (16 U.S.C. 18g-j) and the Volunteers in the Forest Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 558a-558d).

"'(B) For activities on all other lands, section 6 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (relating to the development of statewide comprehensive outdoor recreation plans).

"'(3) For purposes of this subsection, the appropriate Secretary or the head of any Federal agency may utilize and make available Federal facilities, equipment, tools and technical assistance to volunteers and volunteer organizations, subject to such limitations and restrictions as the appropriate Secretary or the head of any Federal agency deems necessary or desirable.

"'(4) No permit or other authorization provided for under provision of any other Federal law shall be conditioned on the existence of any agreement provided for in this section.'.

"SEC. 507. Section 12(c) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by deleting the words 'Secretary of the Interior, and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'Administrator, Environmental Protection Agency'.

"SEC. 510. Section 14 of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by inserting '(a)' after '14' and adding a new subsection (b) as follows:

"'(b) For the conservation purposes of preserving or enhancing the values of components of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System, and environs thereof as determined by the appropriate Secretary, landowners are authorized to donate or otherwise convey qualifed real property interests to qualified organizations consistent with section 170(h)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. Such interest may include, but shall not be limited to, rights-of-way, open space, scenic, or conservation easements, without regard to any limitation on the nature of the estate or interest otherwise transferable within the jurisdiction where the land is located. The conveyance of any such interest in land in accordance with this subsection shall be deemed to further a Federal conservation policy and yield a significant public benefit for purposes of section 6 of Public Law 96-541.'.

"SEC. 511. Section 16(c) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by adding at the end thereof: "For any designated wild and scenic river, the appropriate Secretary shall treat the acquisition of fee title with the reservation of regular existing uses to the owner as a scenic easement for purposes of this Act. Such an acquisition shall not constitute fee title ownersip for purposes of section 6(b).

"TITLE VI

"SEC. 601. Section 3(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1274(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(58) BLACK CREEK MISSISSIPPI.—The segment from Fairley Bridge Landing upstream to Moody's Landing as generally depicted on a map entitled "Black Creek Wild and Scenic River", numbered fs-58 and dated March 1986, to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture as a scenic river area under section 2(b)(2). For the purposes of the segment designated by this paragraph, there are authorized to be appropriated up to $300,000 for the acquisition of lands and interests in lands and for deployment.'.

"TITLE VII—HENRY'S FORK OF THE SNAKE RIVER, IDAHO

"SEC. 701. This title may be cited as the 'Henry's Fork of the Snake River Protection Act of 1986'.

"SEC. 702. Except as set forth in section 703 and section 704 of this title, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) is prohibited from taking any action, other than denial, on any application for a license, preliminary permit, or exemption or any further action on an issued preliminary permit pursuant to sections 4(e), 4(f), and 30 of the Federal Power Act, as amended (16 U.S.C. 797(e-f), and 823), for any project proposed to be sited on or adjacent to that portion of Henry's Fork of the Snake River, Idaho (including that segment originating at Big Springs), or its tributaries within one-half mile of their confluence with Henry's Fork of the Snake River, from its point of origin at Henry's Lake, Idaho to the point of its confluence with the backwaters of Ashton Reservoir, Idaho.

"SEC. 703. The prohibition in section 702 of this title shall not apply to the application for license filed for the Island Park Dam Hydropower project (FERC project numbered 2973) or the subsequent relicensing of said project: Provided, That such license may be approved only if FERC determines that significant and permanent alteration of streamflow, habitat, water temperature, and quality will not occur as a result of the project.

"SEC. 704. The prohibition in section 702 of this title shall not apply to the relicensing of the Ponds Lodge Hydropower project (FERC project numbered 1413).

"SEC. 705. (a) Nothing in this title shall be construed as authorizing (either expressed or implied) the appropriation or reservation of water by any Federal, State, or local agency, Indian tribe, or any other entity or individual. Nor shall any provision of this title (1) affect the rights or jurisdictions of the United States, the States, Indian tribes, or other entities over waters of any river or stream or over any ground water resource, (2) alter, amend, repeal, interpret, modify, or be in conflict with any interstate compact made by the States, (3) be construed to alter or establish the respective rights of States, the United States, Indian tribes, or any person with respect to any water or water-related right, or (4) otherwise be construed to affect the validity of any existing license, permit, or certificate (other than as set forth in section 702) issued by any Federal agency pursuant to any other Federal law.

"(b) For the purposes of any Federal law authorizing an express or implied appropriation or reservation of water for any Federal purpose, the provisions of this title (other than this subsection) shall be deemed not to exist.".

NATIONAL SCHOOL-AGE CHILD CARE AWARENESS WEEK

HAWKINS AMENDMENT NO. 2802

Mr. DOLE (for Mrs. HAWKINS) proposed an amendment to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 60) to designate the week beginning September 1, 1985, as "National School-Age Child Care Awareness Week;" as follows:

On page 2 line 3 delete "September 1, 1985" and insert in lieu thereof, "September 15, 1986"

OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION

QUAYLE (AND EXON) AMENDMENT NO. 2803

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. QUAYLE (for himself and Mr. EXON) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 2706) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 2 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1987 (S. Con. Res. 120, 99th Congress) as follows:

At the appropriate place in the text of the bill insert the following: (Section) that (a) the President may, within 3 days of the time the President approves any appropriation bill, transmit to both Houses of Congress, one or more special messages in accordance with subsection (b) proposing to rescind all or part of any item of appropriation provided in the appropriation bill, such special messages shall be considered in accordance with the provisions of this resolution.

(b)(1) Each special message transmitted under subsection (a) shall specify, with respect to each item of appropriation (or part thereof) proposed by the message to be rescinded, the matters referred to in paragraphs (1) through (5) of section 1012(a) of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 683(a)).

(2) Each special message transmitted under subsection (a) shall be accompanied by a draft bill or joint resolution that would, if enacted, rescind each item of appropriation (or part thereof) proposed by the message to be rescinded.

(c)(1)(A) On the day on which a special message proposing to rescind an item of appropriation is transmitted to the House of Representatives and the Senate under subsection (a), the draft bill or joint resolution accompanying such special message shall be introduced (by request) in the House by the majority leader of the House, for himself and the minority leader of the House, or by the Members of the House designated by the majority leader and the minority leader of the House, and shall be introduced (by request) in the Senate by the majority leader of the Senate, for himself and the minority leader of the Senate, or by the Members of the Senate designated by the majority leader and the minority leader of the Senate. If either House is not in session on the day on which a special message is transmitted, the draft bill or joint resolution shall be introduced in the House, as provided in the preceding sentence, on the first day thereafter on which such House is in session.

(B) A bill or joint resolution introduced in the House of Representatives or the Senate pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be referred on the date of introduction to the Committee on Appropriations of such House. The committee shall report the bill or joint resolution without substantive revision (and with or without recommendation) not later than 5 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the bill or joint resolution is introduced. A committee failing to report a bill or joint resolution within the 5-day period referred to in the preceding sentence shall be automatically discharged from consideration of the bill or joint resolution, and the bill or joint resolution shall be placed on the appropriate calendar.

(C) A vote on final passage of a bill or joint resolution introduced in a House of the Congress pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be taken on or before the close of the 10th calendar day of continuous session of the Congress after the date of the introduction of the bill or joint resolution in such House. If the bill or joint resolution is agreed to, the Clerk of the House of Representatives (in the case of a bill or joint resolution agreed to in the House of Representatives) or the Secretary of the Senate (in the case of a bill or joint resolution agreed to in the Senate) shall cause the bill or joint resolution to be engrossed, certified, and transmitted to the other House of the Congress on the same calendar day on which the bill or joint resolution is agreed to by such House.

(2) If prior to the passage by one House of a bill or joint resolution introduced in that House under this section, that House receives a bill or joint resolution containing the same provisions from the other House pursuant to subparagraph (C) of paragraph (1), then—

(A) the procedure in the House receiving the bill or joint resolution with respect to the bill or joint resolution introduced in that House shall be the same as if the bill or joint resolution had not received from the other House; but

(B) the vote on final passage shall be on the bill or joint resolution of the other House.

(3)(A) A motion in the House of Representatives to proceed to the consideration of a bill or joint resolution under this section shall be highly privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

(B) Debate in the House of Representatives on a bill or joint resolution under this section shall be limited to not more than 4 hours, which shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the bill or joint resolution. A motion to postpone, made in the House of Representatives with respect to the consideration of a bill or joint resolution under this section, and a motion to proceed to the consideration of other business, shall not be in order. A motion further to limit debate shall not be debatable. It shall not be in order to move to table or to recommit a bill or joint resolution under this section or to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill or joint resolution is agreed to or disagreed to.

(C) All appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the Rules of the House of Representatives to the procedure relating to a bill or joint resolution under this section shall be decided without debate.

(D) Except to the extent specifically provided in the preceding provisions of this paragraph, consideration of a bill or joint resolution under this section shall be governed by the Rules of the House of Representatives applicable to other bills and joint resolutions in similar circumstances.

(4)(A) A motion in the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill or joint resolution under this section shall be privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

(B) Debate in the Senate on a bill or joint resolution under this section, and all debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith, shall be limited to not more than 4 hours. The time shall be equally divided between, and controlled by, the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees.

(C) Debate in the Senate on any debatable motion or appeal in connection with a bill or joint resolution under this section shall be limited to not more than 1 hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the mover and the manager of the bill or joint resolution, except that in the event the manager of the bill or joint resolution is in favor of any such motion or appeal, the time in opposition thereto, shall be controlled by the minority leader or his designee. Such leaders, or either of them, may, from time under their control on the passage of a bill or joint resolution, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any debatable motion or appeal.

(D) A motion in the Senate to further limit debate on a bill or joint resolution under this section is not debatable. A motion to table or to recommit a bill or joint resolution under this section is not in order.

(d) No amendment to a bill or joint resolution considered under this section shall be in order in either the House of Representatives or the Senate. No motion to suspend the application of this subsection shall be in order in either House, nor shall it be in order in either House for the Presiding Officer to entertain a request to suspend the application of this subsection by unanimous consent.

(e) For purposes of this section—

(1) "item of appropriation" means any numerically expressed amount of budget authority set forth in the appropriation bill;

(2) "appropriation bill" means any general or special appropriation bill, and any bill or joint resolution making supplemental, deficiency, or continuing appropriations;

(3) "appropriation Act" means any appropriation bill that has been approved by the President and become law;

(4) "budget authority" has the meaning given to such term in section 3(2) of the Congresional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 622(2)); and

(5) continuity of a session of the Congress shall be considered as broken only by an adjournment of the Congress sine die, and the days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain shall be excluded in the computation of the 5-day and 10-day periods referred to in subsection (c) of this section. If a special message is transmitted under this section during any Congress and the last session of the Congress adjourns sine die before the expiration of 10 calendar days of continuous session (or a special message is transmitted after the last session of the Congress adjourns sine die), the message shall be deemed to have been retransmitted on the first day of the succeeding Congress and the 5-day and 10-day periods referred to in subsection (c) of this section shall commence on the day after such first day.

(f) The provisions of this section are enacted by the Congress—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the House of Representatives and the Senate, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each House, respectively, or of that House to which they specifically apply, and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(2) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change such rules (so far as relating to such House) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of such House.

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, when the reconciliation bill comes to the floor, I will, on behalf of myself and Senator EXON, offer the substance of Senate Concurrent Resolution 65 as an amendment to the Sixth Omnibus Reconciliation bill, S. 2706. Our resolution provides an improved rescission procedure and will, I am confident, result in significant savings. Because it is a savings amendment, I believe it is appropriate as an amendment to the reconciliation bill.

For the benefit of those interested, I will ask unanimous consent that the remarks I made on introduction of the proposal be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF SENATOR QUAYLE

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, it would be easy but not productive to dwell at lenth on the fiscal crisis threatening our Nation, to expound further on the staggering deficits of the past or to emphasize once again that, even with the overoptimistic assumptions built into the last budget resolution, future deficits are even more frightening than those of the past. Those of us concerned with the prospect—or should I say the reality—of a $2 trillion national debt and worried about the not so distant future when it will be $3 trillion, must do more than curse the fates or command the tide to recede. We must not only vote for fiscally prudent options, whether on budget resolutions, appropriations, or entitlement bills, but we must also examine our congressional procedures to determine how we may counteract the drift toward extravagance that seems to afflict our processes.

I am today introducing, for appropriate referral, a concurrent resolution that, if adopted, could make a significant contribution toward congressional fiscal responsibility without encountering the difficult constitutional and passionate political objections that seem to surround line-item veto proposals. Let me make clear, however, that this proposal does not diminish my enthusiasm for Senator MATTINGLY's line-item veto proposal.

My proposal is a simple one. Using the rulemaking powers of each House, it guarantees an up-down vote on rescission bills submitted by the President under specified conditions. More specifically, my concurrent resolution provides that, if the President signs an appropriations bill containing one or more items of which he disapproves, he may send a special message to Congress proposing the rescission of all or any part of an item of appropriation contained in that bill. A bill, or bills, implementing the President's message would be introduced in both Houses and referred to the Appropriations Committees. These committees would be limited to determining whether the President's message met the conditions for expedited consideration in the resolution and would then report the bill to the floor without amendment. The bill would be guaranteed consideration on the floor with no amendments in order. I invite my colleagues attention to the text of the concurrent resolution which deals with the many technical points required to carry out such a procedure.

Let me take a few minutes to explain why I think such a procedure is necessary as one important approach to dealing with our deficit problem. I want to emphasize immediately that I recognize that my proposal is no cure-all for our deficit problems, but it will have some restraining effect on the amounts we spend—and in our current situation of staggering deficits, we must utilize every available mechanism that will promote responsibility.

Historically, the pressures for spending came from the executive branch, and the legislature served as the mechanism for restraint. In those early days of our Republic, the legislature had the painful and difficult task of raising taxes in order to finance expenditures, and they did that with great reluctance. In fact, we know that our representative form of government is derived from the ability of Parliament to refuse to vote funds for the King's use unless he agreed to redress popular grievances.

But the growth of democracy has changed that old relationship between executive and legislative, and expenditure of money has become a popular function for the legislature—especially when unconstrained by the need to raise equivalent revenues. Nowdays, the pressure for restraint more often comes from the executive than the legislature so that over the last few decades we have been searching for ways to prune out the extravagances that seem to get included in the congressional appropriations process where the opportunities for what is euphemistically called logrolling frequency overwhelm the cries for economy.

President Nixon tried to prune the budget through an expansion of the impoundment process that was rejected by both the courts and the Congress. The Congress tried a different approach in title X of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, through a system of deferrals and rescissions, but that system has not served the desired function. While that statute authorizes the President to submit rescission proposals, it does not ensure that such proposals receive congressional consideration—and in fact they do not. Though President Reagan submitted 242 rescission proposals as a part of his fiscal year 1986 budget, not one has had a record vote in the Senate. It is, of course, true that many rescission proposals are incorporated into regular or supplemental appropriations bills, but it remains a fact that such proposals have no guarantee of separate consideration by the House or the Senate as a body.

The special procedures of section 1017 of the Budget Act have not worked to bring rescissions to the floor for consideration and that weakness must be corrected. The purpose of my proposal is to ensure serious congressional reconsideration of those items of appropriations that the President considers excessive or unnecessary. We have all voted for appropriation bills without being committed to every item that is included. My proposal will require Congress to give careful consideration to those items in an appropriations bill of which the President disapproves. If the President believes that an appropriation is unnecessary or excessive, it does not seem unreasonable to require Senators and Congressmen to vote publicly on the need for that item.

It is my belief that this process will make it easier to eliminate unnecessary spending without making any change in our constitutional balance of powers. I invite all my colleagues, both supporters and opponents of the line-item veto, to support this concurrent resolution as one means of promoting fiscal responsibility.●

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS, RESERVED WATER AND RESOURCE CONSERVATION

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public that a public hearing has been scheduled before the Subcommittee on Public Lands, Reserved Water and Resource Conservation of the Committee on Enegy and Natural Resources on Friday, September 19, 1986, at 9 a.m. in room SD-366 of the Senate Dirksen Office Building in Washington, DC 20510.

Testimony will be received on the following measures: S. 1971, to transfer certain lands under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior to the city of Mesquite, NV; S. 2194, to authorize the conveyance of 40 acres in Nevada to the Catholic Diocese of Reno/Las Vegas; S. 2599, to declare that the United States holds certain public domain lands in trust for the Pueblo of Zia; S. 2698, to transfer certain public lands in Nevada to the Toiyabe, Humboldt, and Inyo National Forests; S. 2758, to authorize the exchange of certain lands in the States of Nevada and Florida; Senate Joint Resolution 372, authorizing establishment of a memorial to honor America's astronauts; S. 2812 and H.R. 4037, relating to the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore, and for other purposes; and H.R. 4645, an act to modify the boundaries of the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area.

Those wishing to testify should contact the Subcommittee on Public Lands, Reserved Water and Resource Conservation of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, room SD-308, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC 20510. Oral testimony may be limited to 3 minutes per witness. Witnesses may be placed in panels, and are requested to submit 25 copies of their testimony 24 hours in advance of the hearing, and 25 copies on the day of the hearing. For further information, please contact Tony Bevinetto or Patty Kennedy of the subcommittee staff at 202-224-0613.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Friday, September 12, to hold an oversight hearing on consideration of applicable water law during the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's hydroelectric licensing proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Select Committee on Intelligence be authorized to meet in closed session, during the session of the Senate on Friday, September 12, to receive a briefing on intelligence matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

H.R. 4530—THE OMNIBUS SCENIC RIVERS BILL

● Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, the National Wild and Scenic River Act, passed in 1968, offered the first Federal protection for the Nation's rapidly disappearing network of free-flowing rivers and streams. This landmark law preserves selected rivers and river corridor landscapes which possess outstanding scenic, recreational, historic, and cultural values.

Mr. President, H.R. 4530, the Omnibus Scenic River Act, includes in it a bill that I introduced last April with my colleague, Senator LAUTENBERG. This bill directs the Department of the Interior to study the potential addition of New Jersey's Great Egg Harbor River to the National Wild and Scenic River System. The Great Egg Harbor River is located in a largely undeveloped area of southern New Jersey. A large portion of the river is within the Pineland National Reserve. The mainstem of the river is 60 miles in length. It rises in urbanized Camden County and flows through Gloucester and Atlantic Counties before it empties into the Atlantic Ocean behind the barrier island of Ocean City.

The slow moving water of the Great Egg Harbor River represents a typical Pine Barrens ecosystem where water is the most important resource. Fresh water is stored in the extensive Cohansey aquifer below the Pine Barrens surface. It is estimated that the Cohansey aquifer is the largest underground reservoir of fresh water in the world.

The unique plant and animal species found in the Great Egg Harbor watershed are peculiarly adapted to the limitations of this naturally highly acidic water. The wetlands support a large number of threatened and endangered species which are extemely sensitive to changes in water level and quality.

Most of the 39 species of mammals, 299 bird species, 59 reptile and amphibian species, and 91 fish species common to the Pine Barrens exist in the Great Egg Harbor watershed. Beaver, otter, and muskrat are found in the wetlands along with 44 species of game birds, ospreys, and nesting bald eagles. The endangered Pine Barrens tree frog, gray tree frog, and timber rattlesnake are also found in the area.

The Great Egg Harbor River has provided opportunites for hunting, trapping, and fishing since the 1700's. Remains of 17th and 18th century sawmills, papermills, and gristmills, early factories and intact 18th and 19th century villages are common throughout the watershed. Ninteenth and twentieth century ethnic settlements are found in agricultural communities near the river. Two important local agricultural crops are cranberries and blueberries, both of which represent a significant share of New Jersey's agricultural economy.

Mr. President, the Great Egg Harbor River is remarkably diverse. It represents an ecosystem so unique that the United Nations has proclaimed it and the rest of the New Jersey Pinelands National Reserve as an "international biosphere." It is a truly remarkable combination of natural features that has been the focus of study by scientists of international reputation.

The Great Egg Harbor River is one of New Jersey's greatest and most beautiful natural resources. Those who live in southern New Jersey would like to assure that the river's water quality and recreational opportunities are maintained through sound planning and management. The Wild and Scenic Rivers Act provides this protection through the development of a management plan. The proposed study has the support of 14 local municipalities and none has opposed the study. Subsequent hearings and the study itself will give local supporters and opponents the opportunity to present their views to determine the future of the river.

Mr. President, the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act has been successful in preserving a number of our Nation's free-flowing rivers. The Great Egg Harbor River is an ideal candidate for inclusion with these natural wonders.●

CELEBRATING THE OPENING OF THE 100TH RONALD McDONALD HOUSE

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, to an ill child being treated for cancer, leukemia, and other serious illnesses, no better relief exists than a family close by. The presence of a loving parent, sibling, or relative can make all the difference in the world to a child fighting to live.

Often, however, the ill child must travel great distances with a parent to obtain the proper treatment. As a result, parents find themselves sleeping in hospital waiting rooms, surviving on vending-machine meals, and incurring expensive motel bills to provide the much needed love and attention their sick child deserves. The resulting financial and emotional burdens can be unmanageable and, unfortunately, family members are often separated from each other for long periods of time. These tremendous strains and anxieties have been known to end marriages and to split families apart.

I rise today to call attention to a working solution to this problem: Ronald McDonald Houses. Ronald McDonald Houses provide temporary residences for family members with children suffering serious illnesses that require prolonged hospital treatment and care. Ronald McDonald Houses are warm sanctuaries for families members who must spend many hours a day tending to their loved ones in a sterile hospital environment.

The first Ronald McDonald House was built nearly 12 years ago in Philadelphia. Since then, they have been built across the United States and around the world, and they have opened their doors to more then one-quarter of a million people of all races. Today, I am proud to announce that, on September 28 and 29 of this year, the 100th Ronald McDonald House will be opening in New Hyde Park, NY, on the campus of the Schneider Children's Hospital of Long Island.

Mr. President, it is my hope that the opening of this Ronald McDonald House will provide the same comfort and opportunity to the people of Long Island as others have provided to people the world over. It is my hope, as well as the hope of this Congress, that the successful opening of the 100th Ronald McDonald House will mark the beginning of many, many successful years in the future.●

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF COMPULSIVE GAMBLING, INC.

● Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, on November 19, 1986, the Council on Compulsive Gambling of Pennsylvania and Valley Forge Medical Center & Hospital of Norristown, PA, will host in Philadelphia, PA, a gathering of experts to address the national problem of compulsive gambling.

This meeting, the Second Annual Conference on Gambling Behavior held under the auspices of the National Council on Compulsive Gambling, Inc., will bring together administrators, educators, legislators, researchers, criminal justice personnel and other professionals, all with one purpose—to try to find more effective ways to ameliorate the scourge of compulsive gambling that is destroying the lives of hundreds of thousands of Americans.

These experts will examine and discuss the implications of compulsive gambling and its impact in the social, economic and business spheres, as well as its savages to the individual.

It is altogether fitting that the U.S. Senate take note of this auspicious gathering and commend the National Council on Compulsive Gambling, Inc., the Council on Compulsive Gambling of Pennsylvania and the Valley Forge Medical Center & Hospital for their efforts to bring attention to this national problem and to alleviate the suffering of the many individuals afflicted.●

JUDGE BARRY DEROSE

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, this evening in Globe, AZ, Judge Barry DeRose is being honored by his friends and colleagues for his many years of service to both his community and his State. I want to bring to the attention of this body, and the Nation as a whole, the story of this man who so personifies the Arizona spirit.

Barry is a native of Globe, AZ and labored in the copper mines to support his college education. He has spent virtually his entire life in partnership with that community. The only two occasions on which he left Globe for any period of time were to complete his law degree at the University of Arizona in Tucson and to serve his country during WWII as a Seabee in the Navy.

Upon his return to Globe after the war, Barry began his long legal association with Globe and Gila County. From the oath he took when accepted by the State Bar Association, Barry found the credo that would guide his professional life * * * it was the promise to serve and represent "all the people who need legal advice."

In 1954, he was elected Gila County attorney, a position which he held for 6 years. Also, he was chief counsel for the White Mountain Apache Tribe for 19 years. In fact, during his tensure with the tribe, Barry was involved in a case in which he found himself in opposition with a future Supreme Court Justice by the name of William Rehnquist. For the record, Barry won the case.

Fortunately for myself and other Democrats in Arizona, Barry was not the least bit hesitant to get involved in partisan politics. Known as "Mr. Democrat" in Gila County, Barry was a leader in John Kennedy's campaign effort in Arizona in 1960. Many Democratic officeholders, both past and present, are the beneficiaries of his efforts on their behalf.

Judge Barry DeRose is retiring from the bench in Gila County. After serving as presiding judge since 1975, Barry will be sorely missed by all who have had the opportunity to argue before him. He was known as a fair judge who upheld the law in a fashion that left even those who were the recipients of adverse rulings with a tremendous amount of respect for this fine jurist.

I know Barry will continue to be an active community leader after his retirement, as he has for so many years.

Mr. President, I ask that my colleagues join me in wishing Judge DeRose and his wife, Eunice, the best that this country has to offer in their retirement. So few have been so deserving.●

AVIATION SAFETY COMMISSION ACT

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, last night, the U.S. Senate approved legislation that advances the cause for increasing aviation safety one step further. The Aviation Safety Commission Act is the culmination of the growing concern that many Members of this body have felt as reports of decreasing margins of air safety have proliferated over the past year and one half.

As a member of both the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee and the Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee, both of which oversee aviation issues, I have been long concerned by the inadequacies in our air transportation system. Unfortunately, due to the tragic and fatal crash of the Midwest Express flight in Milwaukee that occurred just over one year ago, the diminished margins of air safety were vividly brought home for me.

Because of my increased awareness and concern, as well as the fact that like most of my colleagues I travel back to my home State each weekend by plane, I asked the Republican conference to set up a task force on air transportation safety. In January, I was named as chairman of that task force. Certainly, one of the goals which we were working toward has been accomplished: Informing the public as well as the Members of Congress that there is a serious problem that will not go away until we take measured and prudent steps to ensure the utmost safety.

Mr. President, several positive actions took place shortly after the task force held a meeting. The Aviation Subcommittee held extensive hearings as did the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee. Probably the most positive step occurred when Senator ROBERT BYRD introduced S. 2417, the Aviation Commission Safety Act. Senator BYRD took the goals of the task force one step further by proposing to move the public debate into a blue ribbon Presidential commission.

Mr. President, I am excited by the fact that my Senate colleagues have recognized the concerns of Senators BYRD, KASSEBAUM, EXON, and myself among others through the passage of this important bill. And while the final report of my task force can only serve as a prelude to what the commission will do, I am pleased that we have been able to put the administration on notice that we are serious about maintaining the maximum possible safety standards for air travel.●

NAUM AND INNA MEIMAN: CANCER PATIENTS DESERVE A CHANCE TO LIVE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, yesterday, I joined with several of my colleagues to publicize the plight of five Soviet citizens sticken with cancer whose lives depend on obtaining medical treatment in the West. One of those involved in the International Committee for Solidarity with Cancer Patients is Inna Meiman, a close friend in Moscow.

Inna, 54, was diagnosed with cancer almost 3 years ago. Since then, Inna has bravely undergone four operations to remove cancerous tumors on her spine. Treatment is available to her which may improve Inna's chance to live. As medical specialists stated in yesterday's news conference, "every patient has the right to pursue every possible treatment."

The cancer victims had gathered at the home of Tanya Bogolomolny, who has breast cancer, and spoke, via speakerphone, to the gathering. I had the pleasure of speaking with Naum who said, "Each day is a gift."

The pleas of these cancer patients is humanitarian, not political. They want to fight for their lives and I strongly urge the Soviets to grant them the most precious gift of life.

Inna and Naum want to pursue experimental treatment in the West. I implore the Soviet authorities to allow them to emigrate to Israel.●

GRAMM-RUDMAN-HOLLINGS

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to note that there are 15 working days left before scheduled adjournment sine die on October 3; and, Congress and the President must agree to a deficit reduction package of $9.4 billion to meet the requirements of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. That's $626.7 million of deficit reduction per day. If we actually need to cut the deficit more than the OMB-CBO report indicated—and I believe we do—we may have to come up with more like $1 billion of deficit reduction each day until we go home.

I submit that we will not do this. We may say before we leave that we have met the requirements of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings: the average of OMB and CBO projections of the deficit will probably be very close to $154 billion. But when the 100th Congress convenes next year, the deficit estimate will be higher. And on September 30, 1987, we will know that we did not do what we said we did during these 15 days. The deficit at the end of fiscal year 1987 will be closer to $170 billion, or $180 billion. To reach the next Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target—$108 billion for fiscal year 1988—Congress and the President will need to agree to cuts of about $65 billion. That will not happen either.

As early as September 1980, David Stockman knew that the fiscal mathematics of the administration would institutionalize triple-digit deficits. In 1981, the administration knew that the tax cut was too big. But the administration concealed this fact, as it saw the resulting deficits as an opportunity to achieve great reductions in the size of Federal domestic programs.

In 1985, Congress passed, and the President signed into law, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings amendment to the debt ceiling. The Nation heaved a sigh of relief. Finally, they thought, there would be honest budgeting in Washington, and the budget would be balanced in 1991.

Instead, the law brought with it a new terminology. Words like "sequester," and the "Gradison baseline," have been added to an already overcomplicated budget lexicon. We promised to reach a budget deficit of $144 billion this year, but now $154 billion will do.

Gramm-Rudman-Hollings has not brought honest budgeting to Washington. One lie leads to another. Congress cannot meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets. The economy is too weak. Domestic discretionary spending has been cut enough. Almost all agree that spending on education, health care, and drug prevention and rehabilitation programs cannot be cut any further. Defense will not be cut, and taxes, according to the President, will not be raised. But Congress, having passed Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, and having promised the American public a balanced budget by 1991, must now at least appear to follow through.

At yesterday's meeting of the Temporary Joint Committee on Deficit Reduction, the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee said that it would be tough to comply with the fiscal year 1987 deficit ceiling, and that it would be nearly impossible to meet that of fiscal year 1988. He said: "I think we're getting very close to abandoning the notion that we will ever get to a balanced budget." Gramm-Rudman-Hollings will be repudiated. It has to be.

To meet the current Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets is probably fiscal folly. To meet the targets nominally will require a kind of creative bookkeeping that would even make the administration blush.

Congress must not do that.

The administration's original lie led to a loss of trust in OMB and the President's budget proposals. In the early 1970's the public lost confidence in the Presidency. After the first 2 years of this administration, Congress began to distrust OMB, and Congress now spends an inordinate amount of time trying to write its own budget. What will happen if, in the late 1980's, the public begins to distrust Congress?●

TRIBUTE TO JOHN VOJKOVICH

● Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a resident of New Orleans in my home State of Louisiana whose place of business is a local institution.

I am referring to Mr. John Vojkovich, owner of the Cresent City Restaurant, a New Orleans landmark for more than 50 years.

After arriving in America as a young immigrant from Yugoslavia, Mr. Vojkovich introduced the city to a unique method of steak preparation which has since become known as "the New Orleans Style." But the great success of his restaurant cannot be attributed only to the quality of his food.

Since arriving in the United States, he has worked diligently for the good of New Orleans, especially its sizable Yugoslavic community, and he is highly regarded by the many New Orleans residents he has assisted over the years.

Mr. President, I wish him and his family continued success.●

Mr. DANFORTH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that morning business be extended to the hour of 4:30 p.m., and that following the speech by the Democratic leader, the Senate automatically stand in adjournment until 11 a.m. on Monday, September 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, for those who are perhaps viewing and listening for the first time to one of the series of speeches that I make from time to time on the United States Senate, I should say that since March 21, 1980, I have been making a series of speeches on the history of the United States Senate. I always at the outset take care to state that I only take the floor at a time when there is no business to be transacted and that if any Senator wishes me to yield the floor during the course of my statement, I will be happy to yield it, with the understanding that my statement not show an interruption in the RECORD. I have that understanding with the distinguished majority leader—there is no other business to be transacted today.

Mr. President, today's statement is titled "Mike Mansfield's Senate: The Vietnam Years."

THE UNITED STATES SENATE

MIKE MANSFIELD'S SENATE: THE VIETNAM YEARS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on the last day of Mike Mansfield's service in the United States Senate he arose to recall the many great events that had taken place during his sixteen years as majority leader. Quite naturally among the issues that loomed the largest in his memory was the war in Vietnam, which "first supported by the nation and then denounced by the nation, was finally brought to an end by the president under the persistent pressure of the Senate." This was a bittersweet accomplishment for Mansfield. As a young congressman in 1945, just a month after the end of World War II, he had warned that: "With the exception of Japan, our military business has ended in the Far East, and the best procedure for us to follow would be to let the countries in that part of the world settle their own internal difficulties." But Mr. President, his warnings went unheeded over the next three decades, and the United States stumbled into the tragic war he had wanted to avoid.[1]

There were many senators who took an active role either for or against the war in Vietnam; they made many eloquent speeches, and cast many courageous votes. One thinks of J. William Fulbright, Richard Russell, Wayne Morse, Henry Jackson, Frank Church, John Sherman Cooper, George McGovern, George Aiken, and so many more who fought this war verbally and tactically in the committee rooms and on the Senate floor. Not everyone agreed with Mike Mansfield about Vietnam. I had my differences with him over our policies there. But no senator doubted his wisdom, expertise, and strong sense of principle on matters relating to foreign policy in general and Southeast Asia in specific. No other senator devoted so much of his attention over so long a time to Vietnam, no one visited that country more often, had more contact with its leaders, and had more respect from all sides of the fierce debate that followed than did Mike Mansfield. His words and his activities offer us a road map through the Vietnam maze. My remarks today owe a debt to a very fine collection of Senator Mansfield's speeches, Hon. Politician: Mike Mansfield of Montana, edited by Louis Baldwin. I recommend this volume to all those interested in the Senate's role in the Vietnam war.

During an earlier address in my continuing series on the history of the United States Senate, I discussed the Senate and a bipartisan foreign policy during the 1950's. At the time, I referred to the roots of American involvement in Indochina, at the time of the Dienbienphu crisis in 1954, the formation of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization, and the creation of Laos, Cambodia, and North and South Vietnam out of the former French colony. I pointed out that warnings from congressional Democratic leaders had persuaded President Eisenhower not to become militarily involved in Vietnam unless supported by our European allies—a support that Secretary of State John Foster Dulles discovered was not forthcoming. In retrospect, President Eisenhower receives high marks for avoiding American military participation in Vietnam, although his administration provided the economic and military aid that enabled the new government of Ngo Dinh Diem to become established in South Vietnam, and tied the United States to that regime with fateful consequences.

Senator Mansfield was strongly influenced by earlier American actions in China and Korea. As a young Marine he had visited China in 1922; he had studied and taught about China at Montana State University; and had visited China as President Roosevelt's special representative in 1944. Mansfield had few illusions over the strength or ability of Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist govenment, and was not surprised when Chiang's government collapsed in 1949, and the Nationalists fled to the island of Formosa. When a bitter debate developed in the United States over "Who Lost China?" Mansfield supported the policies of President Harry Truman and his beleaguered Secretary of State, Dean Acheson. Opponents of Truman's policies, most notably Wisconsin's Joe McCarthy, tried to smear any-one who had the slightest doubt about Chiang as somehow being pro-Communist, and tried to label the Montana congressman as "China Mike." Montana voters were not convinced, and they elected Mike Mansfield to the Senate after a bitter and hard-fought campaign in 1952. Still, this experience long affected him deeply, and it was many years before he renewed his interests in American relations with China. Similarly, Mansfield was shaped by his observations of the Korean war, which involved American troops on the mainland of Asia, which lingered on longer than anyone had expected, which affected American public opinion, and which brought to an unhappy end the administration of Harry Truman.

As a senator, Mike Mansfield returned to Asia, although now the doors of China were closed to him. He toured extensively throughout Southeast Asia, including the capitals of what would later become Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam, after the collapse of the French colonial effort in Indochina. He was also a member of the American delegation to the Geneva convention that divided Indochina, and witnessed the birth of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization, known as SEATO. Mansfield was visiting Hanoi at the very time the French evacuated that city. Because he knew the region, its history and its leaders so intimately, Mansfield was dubious when the Eisenhower administration moved to establish an American role in Southeast Asia. In July 1954, Mansfield delivered a prophetic warning in the Senate:

> I do not know whether the president himself ever seriously considered committing this nation to an armed involvement in Indochina. Nevertheless, the air around him was full of military sound and fury just prior to Geneva. There was much talk of involvement, even though Indochina would have been in every sense a nibbling war.
> The terrain of the Indochinese conflict—the flooded deltas, the thousands of scattered villages, the jungles—is made to order for the nibbling of mechanized forces. The French have been nibbled and chewed for eight years. . . .
> A people, whether in Asia or in the Americas, can preserve their independence only if they have it in the first place and if they are willing to fight to keep it. Beyond this initial responsibility, which every nation must accept, nations can combine among themselves for a joint defense of freedom. . . . But from the beginning to the end of this process of defense, the key factor is the determination of the people of each nation to defend their freedom.

Senator Mansfield proposed that the United States favor any government in Asia which represented its people and was responsive to their needs, but that we should stay out of their internal affairs. He argued that any military alliances must draw their primary strength from the Asian nations themselves, and that American involvement, if any, should be indirect. And he insisted that the United Nations should serve as "the only worldwide marshalling center for resistance, in the event of aggression or threat of aggression in Asia." Senator John Sherman Cooper suggested that Mansfield wanted it both ways, to protect Southeast Asia from Communism without engaging U.S. troops, and asked whether he favored intervention in Indochina, Mansfield responded bluntly: "No, I was never in favor of intervention, and I am opposed to it now. I think that it would be suicidal. I believe the worst thing that could happen to the United States would be to have our forces intervene in Indochina and then bog down in the jungles there." Sadly, as we know, his worst fears were to materialize a decade later.[2]

Like Senator John F. Kennedy, and Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas, Senator Mansfield met and came to admire the Vietnamese nationalist Ngo Dinh Diem, during the early 1950's, while Diem lived in exile in a Catholic convent in the United States. After South Vietnam became an independent nation, Diem returned as its president, and Mansfield became one of his strongest supporters. Mansfield recognized Diem's limitations: he was cool and aloof from his people, by no means a charismatic leader, he could be rigid and dogmatic, and he relied excessively upon his brother, Ngo Din Nhu, whose tactics verged on despotic. But Mansfield also insisted that if South Vietnam was going to survive as an independent nation it must do so under its own leadership, and Diem provided the only hope. This was the whole thrust of his belief in the self-determination of nations. Mansfield defended Diem against criticism from both the French and the State Department, which periodically signaled its own suspicions, but he insisted that Diem was never "our boy."

When Diem was overthrown in a coup in November 1963—a coup which the United States may have sparked, and certainly did nothing to prevent—Mansfield rose in the Senate to regret that "a government which began with so much promise, in the end crumpled in a military coup and violent death."

[1] Footnotes at end of text.

He called upon the Kennedy administration to reevaluate America's role in Southeast Asia and to begin a reduction in the commitment of U.S. forces in Vietnam. Within just a few weeks, however, the Kennedy administration itself ended with a violent and tragic death, and a new administration under Lyndon B. Johnson was in office.[3]

On one hand, Mansfield might have hoped to influence the Johnson administration's policies towards Vietnam. President Johnson had had little experience in foreign policy, and with the exception of one whirlwind tour of Southeast Asia in 1961, he had little background in the Vietnam conflict. He was not necessarily bound to the policies of his predecessor. While he was majority leader in 1959 Johnson had picked Mansfield as his whip, and seemed to respect his advice on foreign policy. Johnson in those days had also been in the habit of calling Senator J. William Fulbright "my Secretary of State," and Fulbright shared much of Mansfield's skepticism about the Vietnam situation. But, once in the White House, rather than turning to his old congressional colleagues for advice Johnson, who also recalled the "Who Lost China?" debate, was determined that he should not appear weak, and that an American ally should not fall to Communist expansion during his presidency. He thus ignored Mansfield's call for self-determination and respect for the nationalist movements in both North and South Vietnam, and came to picture the conflict as just another outbreak of the great global clash between Communism and democracy.

Although Mansfield disagreed strongly with Johnson's policies, and regularly sent memoranda to the White House suggesting alternatives to escalation of the war, in public he stood loyally by his president. As the Democratic majority leader, Mansfield believed it was his institutional role to defend the programs of the Democratic administration in the White House, no matter what his personal feelings. He supported the Gulf of Tonkin resolution in August 1964, and each successive increase in troops to Vietnam. As the Senate and the nation began to divide into hawks and doves, Mansfield resisted the urge to join the doves, and instead defended his president. When Mansfield's close friend and breakfast companion George Aiken rose to condemn President Johnson's policies, Mansfield rose in rebuttal:

> I think I probably know Lyndon Johnson as well as any other member of this body knows him. I have been closely associated with him for 24 years. I know how deeply concerned he is about Vietnam. I know the agonizing days and nights he goes through. I know of his intense desire to bring this most difficult of all situations which has ever faced an American president to some sort of honorable conclusion. . . .
> So far as the Senator from Montana is concerned, he will do his very best to give the President of the United States as much in the way of support as he possibly can.[4]

At the same time he offered the president his support, Senator Mansfield worked hard for peace in Vietnam. He felt dismayed over the situation in South Vietnam, where coup followed coup until it was difficult to tell who was in charge, and where American military forces were increasingly taking over the war. At the beginning of 1965, Americans were suffering five casualties a week in Vietnam. By the end of 1965, the number of killed and wounded had risen to five hundred a week. The annual cost of the war had risen from one billion dollars to thirteen billion. The field of battle had spread from South Vietnam into bombing of North Vietnam, into Laos and eventually into Cambodia. "Is Vietnam, both north and south, to be reduced to a charnel house amidst smoking, silent ruins?," he asked. Seeing the issue in larger geopolitical terms, he suggested that peace in Southeast Asia was inseparable from peace with China. "What is needed most, at this time and in the light of the danger, is an initiative for a direct contact between the Peking government and our own government on the problem of peace in Vietnam." He delivered these remarks at a commencement in June 1966, five years before Richard Nixon, as president, would achieve a breakthrough in relations between the United States and the People's Republic of China.[5]

During the last two years of the Johnson administration, as the Vietnam war intensified, Mansfield continued to pursue these themes. He called for a face-to-face meeting between Secretary of State Dean Rusk and the Chinese Foreign Minister. He proposed a halt to the aerial bombardment of North Vietnam, and a concentration on sealing off the borders of South Vietnam. He called for a reconvening of the Geneva Conference on Southeast Asia, and for an all-Asian conference on the war. He called on the administration to give closer consideration to French proposals for the neutralization of Southeast Asia. He suggested that the United Nations play a role in ending the war. "The conflict in Vietnam cannot be settled from the Congress or from the campus," he said in a speech at the University of North Carolina in 1967. "In a government such as ours, a senator lives with a constitution, a constituency and a conscience." Only the president, however, could make the fundamental decisions of war and peace. "These decisions are of an immensity which enjoins upon us all a high respect for the burdens which a president must bear, and a responsibility to tender to him every support which can be given in good conscience." [6]

By 1967, all the optimistic predictions of an early end to the war, and "bringing the boys home by Christmas," had passed as just so many fantasies. "The fact is that the war bewilders," said Senator Mansfield. The statistics were benumbing. The costs in human life and dollars were staggering. "Eight weeks of military expenses in Vietnam equal all of the Federal monies sought for education," he pointed out, ". . . and the special funds for improving education in city slums and depressed rural areas." By mid-1967, over 10,000 Americans had died in the war, (an appalling statistic then, before we knew that 50,000 names would one day be inscribed on a wall in Washington). By February 1968, the Tet Offensive had taken place and events in Vietnam had deteriorated even further. In remarks at Indiana University, Senator Mansfield described the struggle in Vietnam as "grim, pitiful and devastating." He said that he found the question "Who's winning in Vietnam?" offensive, as if the war were an athletic contest. "Vietnam is not a game. There can be no winners; there are only losers, and the longer the war persists the greater are the losses of all concerned." In his most critical statement on the conduct of the war, Mansfield concluded: "There is no obligation to continue to pour out the blood and resources of this nation until South Vietnam is made safe for one Vietnamese faction or another. On the contrary, there is an obligation to the people of the United States to conserve that blood and those resources; and, to the people of Vietnam there is an obligation to avoid the destruction of their land and society even in the name of saving them." [7]

Five weeks later President Johnson announced that he would not stand for reelection, but would devote his complete attention instead to achieving a negotiated peace in Vietnam. In March, he delivered the first lecture sponsored by the Maureen and Mike Mansfield Endowment at the University of Montana. Vietnam was still the great issue, but he wanted to go beyond Vietnam to reiterate his belief that the crisis in Asia could not be settled without reproachment with China. "Like it or not, the present Chinese government is here to stay," he observed. "Like it or not, China is a major power in Asia and is on the way to becoming a nuclear power." It was therefore in America's best interest to put aside its efforts to isolate China.[8]

The 1968 election of Richard Nixon, who promised a "secret plan" to end the war, and who as president advocated "Vietnamization" of the war, seemed to hold promise of an honorable end to the terrible conflict, but

Senator Mansfield was soon horrified to see the President expanding the war into neighboring Laos and Cambodia. Freed from the constraints of speaking for a president from his own party, Mansfield took to the Senate floor to wave a warning flag against a deepening conflict. "The danger of our over extended commitment in Southeast Asia needs to be considered frankly and without delay." [9]

The war caused Senator Mansfield to reevaluate his position on the president's handling of foreign affairs. "For many years, we have seen our role in matters of war and peace largely as one of acquiescence in the acts of the executive branch," he said to the Senate in 1970. "If we have had doubts, we have swallowed them . . . we have gone along. We have rocked few boats." But that time has passed, and too much blood had been spilled. He insisted that the Senate exert its responsibility "to curb the further expansion of the war." [10]

In 1972, as the final negotiations for withdrawal of American troops from Vietnam took place, the Nixon administration made the grand gesture towards China that Senator Mansfield had been advocating for years. It was appropriate that after the President's historic visit to Peking, the first official congressional delegation to China would consist of Senator Mike Mansfield and Republican Leader Hugh Scott. Opening the door to China, he pointed out, undermined much of our rationale for being in Vietnam:

> It seems to me high time to ask why we are using the most advanced machines of destruction in that primitive land. Are we doing so out of force of habit? Out of fear? Fear of what? The fact is that we are still engaged in a war which, to put the best face on it, was sanctioned by what has now become a discredited policy towards China. The president's visit to China had the symbolic effect of marking the end of that policy. If the old China policy is no longer valid, is not the present involvement in the Vietnam war which derived from that policy also invalid?[11]

In the end, as the last American troops were withdrawn, Senator Mansfield proclaimed the Vietnam war "not a comedy or errors, but a tragedy of errors for this nation, with 55,000 dead, with 305,000 casualties; with something on the order of $130 billion spent so far; with three times as many bombs being used, in tonnage, as was the case in all of the Second World War and Korea; with the tactics of defoliation and craterization of Indochina; with the difficulties it has caused us at home." He called on the nation to "put Indochina behind us, wipe the slate clean, and start out to bind up some of the wounds and take care of some of our own concerns."[12]

The independent nation of South Vietnam lasted only two years after withdrawal of American troops, and collapsed in the spring of 1975. On April 30, the last Americans were helicoptered out of Saigon. President Gerald Ford called for Americans to close ranks and avoid recriminations. Senator Mansfield seconded that sentiment. "A tragic episode in our history has now come to a close in Vietnam," he said. The end of the war came "because Congress was unwilling to give the executive branch a blank check in providing the closeout funds. Congress insisted not only on the withdrawal of American personnel but on the speed up of that withdrawal as a precondition of further appropriations. Working with the Congress . . . the president moved the executive branch to proceed on that basis." Senator Mansfield stressed "the importance of the closest collaboration between the president and the Congress. It was the decisive factor in this situation . . . . In moments of crisis, at least, the president and the Congress cannot be adversaries; they must be allies who, together, must delineate the path to guide the nation's massive machinery of government in a fashion which serves the interests of the people and is acceptable to the people."[13]

Mr. President, these were the words of a great senator on one of the most significant episodes in our country's history. I have repeated them here because I believe they are still meaningful, still worth taking the time to read and to contemplate. As we toil in the post-Vietnam era, and struggle to interpret the legacy of that war, we have much to learn from the words of our prophets—a title for which Mike Mansfield amply qualified.

Mr. President, my next speech will be titled "Everett Dirksen's Senate."

I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point the notes for "The Vietnam Years."

There being no objection, the notes were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, September 12, 1986

The House met at 9 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

You have commanded, O God, that we ought to seek justice, love, mercy, and walk humbly with You. Grant that we may be so illumined by our tradition of faith and encouraged by all women and men of good will that we will truly seek justice in word and in deed. May we understand the need for responsibility not just for others, but for ourselves.

As we say the words of justice with our lips, may we believe them in our hearts and all that we believe in our hearts may we practice in our daily lives. This we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 4378. An act to provide standards for placement of commemorative works on lands administered by the National Park Service in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2320. An act to amend an act to add certain lands on the Island of Hawaii to Hawaii Volcanoes National Park, and for other purposes.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DANIEL). The Chair announces that the Speaker has stated that we will have 1-minute speeches later in the day.

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3622, JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1985

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 3622) to amend title 10, United States Code, to strengthen the position of Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to provide for more efficient and effective operation of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

MAKING IN ORDER ON TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1986, OR ANY DAY THEREAFTER CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3622, JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1985

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to consider the conference report on the bill, H.R. 3622, on Tuesday, September 16, 1986, or any day thereafter, and that the conference report be considered as read when called up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object for a point of clarification if I may, do I understand that the gentleman has asked permission for the conference report on military reorganization to be considered at any time.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, the request is for consideration on Tuesday or any time after that.

Mr. WALKER. On Tuesday or on any day after Tuesday of next week.

Mr. NICHOLS. That is correct, on Tuesday or any day thereafter.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 4421, HUMAN SERVICES REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1986

Mr. HAWKINS submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 4421), to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 to carry out the Head Start, Follow Through, dependent care, community services block grant, and community food and nutrition programs, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 99-815)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4421) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 to carry out the Head Start, Follow Through, dependent care, community services block grant, and community food and nutrition programs, and for other purposes having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Human Services Reauthorization Act of 1986".

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Each such evaluation shall include identifying the impact that assistance furnished under this subtitle has on children, pregnant adolescents, homeless families, and the elderly poor. A report of the evaluation, together with recommendations of improvements designed to enhance the benefit and impact to people in need, will be sent to each State evaluated. Upon receiving the report the State will then submit a plan of action in response to the recommendation contained in the report. The results of the evaluation shall be submitted annually to the Chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor of House of Representatives and the Chairman of the Committee of Labor and Human Resources of the Senate.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subsection (i) of section 675 of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9904(i)) is repealed.

SEC. 405. DISCRETIONARY AUTHORITY.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—(1) The matter preceding clause (1) of section 681(a) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9910(a)) is amended—

(A) by striking out "is authorized, either directly or through" and inserting in lieu thereof "is authorized to make"; and

(B) by inserting "to enter into" before "contracts".

(2) Section 681(a)(1) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9910(a)(1)) is amended by inserting before the semicolon a comma and the following: "including national conferences, newsletters, and collection and dissemination of data about programs and projects assisted under this subtitle".

(3) Subclause (A) of section 681(a)(2) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9910(a)(2)(A)) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) special programs of assistance, awarded on a competitive basis, to private, locally initiated, nonprofit community development corporations, (or affiliates of such corporations) governed by a board consisting of residents of the community and business and civic leaders, which sponsor enterprises providing employment and business development opportunities for low-income residents of the community designed to increase business and employment opportunities in the community;".

(4) Section 681(a)(2)(D) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9910(a)(2)(D)) is amended by inserting before the semicolon the following:

"(in selecting entities to carry out such programs, the Secretary shall give priority to private nonprofit organizations that before the date of the enactment of the Human Services Reauthorization Act of 1986 carried out such programs under this subparagraph)".

(b) REPORTS ON PROJECTS.—Section 681 of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9910) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (a) the following:

"(b)(1) The final reports submitted by recipients of assistance under this section on projects completed with such assistance shall be summarized and reported by the Secretary annually to the Chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives and the Chairman of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate. The report shall contain a list of recipients who have received assistance under this section outside of the competitive process.

"(2) The Secretary shall, at the end of each fiscal year, prepare and distribute a catalog listing all the projects assisted under clause (A) of subsection (a)(2) in such fiscal year. The catalog shall include—

"(A) a description of each project;

"(B) an identification of the agency receiving the award, including the name and address of the principal investigator;

"(C) a description of the project objectives; and

"(D) a statement of the accomplishments of the project.".

(2) Section 680(a) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9909(a)) is amended by striking out "section 681(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 681(c)".

(3) Section 614 of the Community Economic Development Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 9803) is amended by striking out "section 681(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 681(c)".

SEC. 406. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR COMMUNITY FOOD AND NUTRITION.

Section 681A of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9910(a)) is amended by striking out subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subsections:

"(b)(1) From 60 percent of the amount appropriated for a fiscal year to carry out this section, the Secretary shall allot for grants under subsection (a) to eligible agencies for statewide programs in each State an amount which bears the same ratio to 60 percent of such appropriation as the low-income and unemployed populations of such State bear to the low-income and unemployed populations of all the States.

"(2) Forty percent of the amount appropriated in a fiscal year to carry out this section shall be available for grants under subsection (a) to be awarded on a competitive basis to eligible agencies for local and statewide programs. In any fiscal year no agency may receive funds awarded in accordance with this paragraph in excess of $50,000.

"(c) There is authorized to be appropriated $3,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 to carry out this section.".

SEC. 407. INTEREST RATES PAYABLE ON CERTAIN RURAL DEVELOPMENT LOANS; ASSIGNMENT OF LOAN CONTRACTS.

(a) MODIFICATION OF INTEREST RATES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

(1) any outstanding loan made after December 31, 1982, by the Secretary of Health and Human Services; or

(2) any loan made after the date of the enactment of this Act;

with monies from the Rural Development Loan Fund established by section 623(c)(1) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 9812(c)(1)) or with funds available under section 681(a) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9910(a)) to an intermediary borrower shall bear interest at a fixed rate equal to the rate of interest that was in effect on the date of issuance for loans made in 1980 with such monies or such funds if the weighted average rate of interest for all loans made after December 31, 1982, by such intermediary borrower with such monies or such funds does not exceed the sum of 6 percent and the rate of interest payable under this subsection by such intermediary borrower.

(b) ASSIGNMENT OF CERTAIN LOAN CONTRACTS.—Any contract for a loan made during the period beginning on December 31, 1982, and ending on the date of the enactment of this Act with—

(1) monies from the Rural Development Loan Fund established by section 623(c)(1) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 9812(c)(1)); or

(2) funds available under section 681(a) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9910(a));

to an intermediary borrower that is a county government may be assigned by such borrower to an entity to which such loan could have been made for the purpose for which such contract was made. Any entity to which such contract is so assigned shall be substituted as a party to such contract and shall be obligated to carry out such contract and the purpose for which such contract was made.

(c) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 1323(b)(2) of the Food Security Act of 1985 (7 U.S.C. 1631(b)(2)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "authorized under" and inserting in lieu thereof "in, appropriated to, or repaid to";

(2) in subparagraph (A) by striking out "and" at the end thereof;

(3) in subparagraph (B) by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) notwithstanding paragraph (1), all funds other than funds to which subparagraph (A) applies shall be used by the Secretary to make loans—

"(i) to the entities;

"(ii) for the purposes; and

"(iii) subject to the terms and conditions; specified in the first, second, and last sentences of section 623(a) of the Community Economic Development Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 9812(a)). For purposes of this subparagraph, any reference in such sentences to the Secretary shall be deemed to be a reference to the Secretary of Agriculture.".

SEC. 408. DEMONSTRATION PARTNERSHIP AGREEMENTS ADDRESSING THE NEEDS OF THE POOR.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—(1) In order to provide for the self-sufficiency of the Nation's poor, the Secretary may make grants from funds appropriated under subsection (e) to eligible entities for the development and implementation of new and innovative approaches to deal with particularly critical needs or problems of the poor which are common to a number of communities. Grants may be made only with respect to applications which—

(A) involve activities which can be incorporated into or be closely coordinated with eligible entities' ongoing programs;

(B) involve significant new combinations of resources or new and innovative approaches involving partnership agreements; or

(C) are structured in a way that will, within the limits of the type of assistance or activities contemplated, most fully and effectively promote the purposes of the Community Services Block Grant Act.

(2) No grant may be made under this section unless an application is submitted to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information, as the Secretary may require.

(b) FEDERAL SHARE; LIMITATIONS.—(1) Grants awarded pursuant to this section shall be used for new programs and shall not exceed 50 per centum of the cost of such new programs.

(2) Non-Federal contributions may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including but not limited to plant, equipment, or services.

(3) Not more than one grant may be made to any eligible entity, and no grant may exceed $250,000.

(4) No application may be approved for assistance under this section unless the Secretary is satisfied that—

(A) the activities to be carried out under the application will be in addition to, and not in substitution for, activities previously carried on without Federal assistance; and

(B) funds or other resources devoted to programs designed to meet the needs of the poor within the community, area, or State will not be diminished in order to provide the matching contributions required under this section.

(c) DISSEMINATION OF RESULTS.—As soon as practicable, but no later than 90 days after the expiration of the fiscal year for which any grant is awarded under this section, the Secretary shall prepare and make available upon request to each State and eligible entity descriptions of the demonstration programs assisted under this section, and any relevant information developed and results achieved, so as to provide models for innovative programs to other eligible entities.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section—

(1) the term "eligible entity" has the same meaning given such term by section 673(1) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9902(1)); and

(2) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989, to carry out this section.

TITLE V—LOW-INCOME HOME ENERGY ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

SEC. 501. REAUTHORIZATION.

Subsection (b) of section 2602 of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8621(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this title $2,050,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, $2,132,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, $2,218,000,000 for fiscal year 1989, and $2,307,000,000 for fiscal year 1990.".

SEC. 502. ADMINISTRATION OF ENERGY CRISIS INTERVENTION PROGRAM.

(a) ENERGY CRISIS INTERVENTION.—Section 2604(c) of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8623(c)) is amended—

(1) in the last sentence—

(A) by striking out "and the capacity" and inserting in lieu thereof "the capacity"; and

(B) by inserting ", and the ability to carry out the program in local communities" before the period at the end thereof; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"The program for which funds are reserved under this subsection shall—

"(1) not later than 48 hours after a household applies for energy crisis benefits, provide some form of assistance that will resolve the energy crisis if such household is eligible to receive such benefits;

"(2) not later than 18 hours after a household applies for crisis benefits, provide some form of assistance that will resolve the energy crisis if such household is eligible to receive such benefits and is in a life-threatening situation; and

"(3) require each entity that administers such program—

"(A) to accept applications for energy crisis benefits at sites that are geographically accessible to all households in the area to be served by such entity; and

"(B) to provide to low-income individuals who are physically infirm the means—

"(i) to submit applications for energy crisis benefits without leaving their residences; or

"(ii) to travel to the sites at which such application are accepted by such entity.

The preceding sentence shall not apply to a program in a geographical area affected by a natural disaster in the United States designated by the Secretary, or by a major disaster or emergency designated by the President under the Disaster Relief Act of 1974, for so long as such designation remains in effect, if the Secretary determines that such disaster or such emergency makes compliance with such sentence impracticable.".

(b) ISSUANCE OF RULES.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall issue rules to carry out the amendments made by subsection (a).

SEC. 503. CALCULATION OF GRANTS TO INDIAN TRIBES.

Section 2604(d)(2) of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8623(d)(2)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "in such State with respect to which a determination under this subsection is made" and inserting in lieu thereof "and residing within the State on the reservation of the tribes or on trust lands adjacent to such reservation";

(2) by inserting before the period at the end of such section a comma and the following: "or such greater amount as the Indian tribe and the State may agree upon"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"In cases where a tribe has no reservation, the Secretary, in consultation with the tribe and the State, shall define the number of Indian households for the determination under this paragraph.".

SEC. 504. APPLICATIONS AND REQUIREMENTS.

(a) STATE PROCEDURES.—Section 2605(b)(5) of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8624(b)(5)) is amended by striking out "in a manner consistent with the efficient and timely payment of benefits" and inserting in lieu thereof "in a timely manner".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 2605(b) of the Low-Income Home Energy Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8624(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out clauses (14), (15), and (16);

(2) by inserting "and" at the end of clause (13); and

(3) by redesignating clause (17) as clause (14).

(c) CONTENTS OF STATE PLAN.—Section 2605(c)(1) of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8624(c)(1)) is amended by striking out clauses (A) through (E) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(A) describes the eligibility requirements to be used by the State for each type of assistance to be provided under this title, including criteria for designating an emergency under section 2604(c);

"(B) describes the benefit levels to be used by the States for each type of assistance including assistance to be provided for emergency crisis intervention and for weatherization and other energy-related home repair;

"(C) contains estimates of the amount of funds the State will use for each of the programs under such plan and describes the alternative use of funds reserved under section 2604(c) in the event any portion of the amount so reserved is not expended for emergencies;

"(D) describes weatherization and other energy-related home repair the State will provide under subsection (k);

"(E) describes how the State will carry out assurances in clauses (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (10), (12), and (13) of subsection (b); and

"(F) contains any other information determined by the Secretary to be appropriate for purposes of this title.".

(d) MODEL STATE PLAN FORMAT.—Section 2605(c) of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8624(c)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) Not later than April 1 of each fiscal year the Secretary shall make available to the States a model State plan format that may be used, at the option of each State, to prepare the plan required under paragraph (1) for the next fiscal year.".

(e) CONSISTENT TREATMENT OF ENERGY ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS.—Section 2605(f) of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8624(f)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after the subsection designation;

(2) by striking out "provided to" and inserting in lieu thereof "provided directly to, or indirectly for the benefit of,"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection and for purposes of determining any excess shelter expense deduction under section 5(e) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2014(e))—

"(A) the full amount of such payments or allowances shall be deemed to be expended by such household for heating or cooling expenses, without regard to whether such payments or allowances are provided directly to, or indirectly for the benefit of, such household; and

"(B) no distinction may be made among households on the basis of whether such payments or allowances are provided directly to, or indirectly for the benefit of, any of such households.".

SEC. 505. GRANTS AND CONTRACTS FOR TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AND TRAINING.

(a) AUTHORITY TO MAKE GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.—The Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8621 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 2609 the following new section:

"TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AND TRAINING

"SEC. 2609A. (a) Of the amounts appropriated under section 2602(b) for any fiscal year, not more than $500,000 of such amounts may be reserved by the Secretary—

"(1) to make grants to State and public agencies and private nonprofit organizations; or

"(2) to enter into contracts or jointly financed cooperative arrangements with States and public agencies and private nonprofit organizations; to provide for training and technical assistance related to the purposes of this subtitle, including collection and dissemination of information about programs and projects assisted under this subtitle, and ongoing matters of regional or national significance that the Secretary finds would assist in the more effective provision of services under this title.

"(b) No provision of this section shall be construed to prevent the Secretary from making a grant pursuant to subsection (a) to one or more private nonprofit organizations that apply jointly with a business concern to receive such grant.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—Section 2604(a)(1) of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8623(a)(1)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A) by inserting "after reserving any amount permitted to be reserved under section 2609A and" after "remaining"; and

(2) in subparagraph (B) by inserting "after reserving any amount permitted to be reserved under section 2609A" after "therefor".

SEC. 506. CONTENT OF REPORTS.

Section 2610(b) of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8629(b)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following:

", and a report that describes for the prior fiscal year—

"(1) the manner in which States carry out the requirements of clauses (2), (5), (8), and (15) of section 2605(b); and

"(2) the impact of each State's program on recipient and eligible households".

TITLE VI—CHILD DEVELOPMENT ASSOCIATE SCHOLARSHIP ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

SEC. 601. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Child Development Associate Scholarship Assistance Act of 1985".

SEC. 602. GRANTS AUTHORIZED.

The Secretary is authorized to make a grant for any fiscal year to any State receiving a grant under title XX of the Social Security Act for such fiscal year to enable such State to award scholarships to eligible individuals within the State who are candidates for the Child Development Associate credential.

SEC. 603. APPLICATIONS.

(a) APPLICATION REQUIRED.—A State desiring to participate in the grant program established by this title shall submit an application to the Secretary in such form as the Secretary may require.

(b) CONTENTS OF APPLICATIONS.—A State's application shall contain appropriate assurances that—

(1) scholarship assistance made available with funds provided under this title will be awarded—

(A) only to eligible individuals;

(B) on the basis of the financial need of such individuals; and

(C) in amounts sufficient to cover the cost of application, assessment, and credentialing for the Child Development Associate credential for such individuals; and

(2) not more than 10 percent of the funds received by the State under this title will be used for the costs of administering the program established in such State to award such assistance.

(c) EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION.—In making grants under this title, the Secretary shall—

(1) distribute such grants equitably among States; and

(2) ensure that the needs of rural and urban areas are appropriately addressed.

SEC. 604. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this title—

(1) the term "eligible individual" means a candidate for the Child Development Associate credential whose income does not exceed the poverty line, as defined in section 673(2) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9902(2)), by more than 50 percent;

(2) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

(3) the term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, and Palau.

SEC. 605. ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

(a) REPORTING.—Each State receiving grants under this title shall annually submit to the Secretary information on the number of eligible individuals assisted under the grant program, and their positions and salaries before and after receiving the Child Development Associate credential.

(b) PAYMENTS.—Payments pursuant to grants made under this title may be made in installments, and in advance or by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments, as the Secretary may determine.

SEC. 606. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated $1,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 for carrying out this title.

TITLE VII—EXCELLENCE IN EDUCATION

SEC. 701. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.

Section 604(b) of the Excellence in Education Act (20 U.S.C. 4033(b))is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2) by inserting after "fiscal year" the second place it appears the following: "in which the appropriations for that year exceed $15,000,000"; and

(2) in paragraph (3) by inserting after "fiscal year" the second place it appears the following: "in which the appropriations for that year exceed $15,000,000".

TITLE VIII—REPORT REGARDING HOURS OF EMPLOYMENT OF BAT BOYS AND BAT GIRLS

SEC. 801. REPORT TO CONGRESS.

Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Labor shall—

(1) determine whether a change in the permissible hours of employment for batboys and batgirls would be detrimental to their well-being and whether any such change should be proposed to the Congress; and

(2) submit a report to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives describing the results of such determination.

TITLE IX—BEGINNING READING INSTRUCTION STUDY AND LISTING REQUIRED

SEC. 901. STUDY AND LISTING REQUIRED.

(a) STUDY.—The Secretary of Education (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary") shall conduct a study in order to compile a complete list, by name, of beginning reading instruction programs and methods, including phonics, indicating—

(1) the average cost per pupil of such programs and methods; and

(2) whether such programs and methods do or do not present well-designed instruction as recommended in the report of the Commission on Reading entitled "Becoming a Nation of Readers".

The listing required by this section shall be written in such a way as to be understandable to the general public.

(b) PUBLIC COMMENT.—In carrying out the study required by this section, the Secretary shall solicit public comments on beginning reading programs and methods.

(c) REPORTS.—The Secretary shall prepare and submit to the Congress such interim reports of the study and listing as the Secretary deems advisable. The Secretary shall prepare and submit a final report containing the listing required by this subsection to the Congress not later than 12 months after the date of the enactment of this Act. The Secretary shall publicize and disseminate nationally the listing required by this section to the education community, parents, and other interested persons.

TITLE X—EFFECTIVE DATES AND RELATED MATTERS

SEC. 1001. EFFECTIVE DATES; APPLICATION OF AMENDMENTS.

(a) GENERAL EFFECTIVE DATE.—Except as provided in subsections (b) and (c), this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect on October 1, 1986, or the date of the enactment of this Act, whichever occurs later.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE FOR ENERGY CRISIS INTERVENTION AMENDMENTS.—The amendments made by section 502(a) shall take effect on December 1, 1986, or 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, whichever occurs later.

(c) APPLICATION OF CERTAIN OTHER AMENDMENTS RELATING TO ENERGY ASSISTANCE.—The amendments made by subsections (a), (b), (c), and (d) of section 504 shall not apply with respect to any fiscal year beginning in or before the 60-day period ending on the effective date of this Act.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4421) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 to carry out the Head Start, Follow Through, dependent care, community services block grant, and community food and nutrition programs, and for other purposes submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the text of the bill struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted and substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

HUMAN SERVICES REAUTHORIZATION ACT

Citation

House bill—The House bill cites the Act as the Community Services Programs Amendments of 1986.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment cites the Act as the Human Services Reauthorization Act of 1986.

Conference agreement—The House recedes.

HEAD START

Authorization

House bill—The House bill provides for authorization for Head Start at such sums as necessary for FY '87, FY '88, FY '89 and FY '90.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment authorizes appropriations.

Fiscal year:
1987	$1,130,542,000
1988	1,175,764,000
1989	1,222,795,000
1990	1,271,717,000

Conference agreement—The Senate recedes with an amendment to authorize the program at the following levels:

Fiscal year:
1987	$1,198,000,000
1988	1,263,000,000
1989	1,332,000,000
1990	1,405,000,000

The Conferees direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to distribute any appropriated funds for this program in a prompt manner. The conferees are concerned that delays in the receipt of funding awards can result in a reduction in program staff, an interruption of or reduction in vital education, health and social services and in certain instances, in additional and unnecessary costs being incurred by Head Start grantees.

Indian and migrant

House bill—The House bill provides that no less funds can be provided for Indian and Migrant programs for fiscal year 1987 and each subsequent fiscal year than were obligated for use in fiscal year 1985.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment specifies that national funding for the Indian and Migrant Head Start programs is 7.1% of the amount appropriated for the total Head Start program.

Conference agreement—The Senate recedes.

Training and technical assistance

House bill—The House bill has no comparable provision

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment provides that in years when the Head Start appropriations are less than the FY 84 appropriation, funding for training and technical assistance shall be 3% of the appropriation.

Conference agreement—The Senate recedes.

Coordination

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment specifies that the type of programs Head Start agencies are to coordinate with are "state and local".

Conference agreement—The House recedes.

Income calculation

House bill—The House bill continues the current method of accounting income for purposes of determining eligibility for Head Start through fiscal year 1990.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment continues the prohibition through 1990, of any change in the method the Secretary uses to calculate income used to prescribe eligibility for the participation of persons in the Head Start program if the change would result in any reduction or exclusion of persons in the program.

Conference agreement—The Senate recedes. The Conferees note under current law at least 10% of all of the enrollment opportunities in the Head Start program must be available for handicapped children to meet their very special needs. Handicapped children as defined by section 602(a)(1) of the Education of the Handicapped Act includes children who are mentally retarded, hard of hearing, deaf, speech or language impaired, visually handicapped, seriously emotionally disturbed, orthopedically impaired, or other health impaired children or children with specific learning disabilities who by reason thereof require special education and related services. Based upon the strong commitment displayed by Congress over the years to serve handicapped preschoolers through the Head Start program, the Conferees reiterate their support of the definition of handicapped children as defined in the Education of the Handicapped Act, the Conferees expect that the individuals who fall within this definition will continue to be served with the Head Start program. The Conferees further intend that any proposed change in the handicapped eligibility criteria meet those standards.

FOLLOW THROUGH

House bill—The House bill extends the Follow Through program through 1990 at such sums as necessary.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment does not have a comparable provison.

Conference agreement—The Senate recedes with an amendment to delete Section 668(b) of the Act and to authorize the program at the following levels:

Fiscal year:
1987	$7,500,000
1988	7,800,000
1989	8,112,000
1990	8,436,000

Section 668(b) of the Follow Through Act provides that financial assistance under this subchapter shall not be suspended for failure to comply with applicable terms and conditions, except in emergency situations, nor shall an application for refunding be denied, unless the recipient agency has been given reasonable notice and opportunity to show cause why such action should not be taken. In making this change, it is the conferees intent to emphasize that this is a competitive grant program and that the grant award process can consider applications other than existing grantees. However, current or past receipt of grants does not in or of itself preclude or give preference for consideration of future funding.

DEPENDENT CARE

Title

House bill—The House bill cites the Subchapter as "Dependent Care Programs Act".

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment cites the Act as the "State Dependent Care Development Grants Act".

Conference agreement—The House recedes.

Dependent care authorization

House bill—The House bill authorizes such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment reauthorizes the Dependent Care programs at

Fiscal year:
1987	$20,000,000
1988	20,000,000
1989	20,000,000

Conference agreement—The Senate recedes with an amendment to authorize the program at the following levels:

Fiscal years:
1987	$20,000,000
1988	20,000,000
1989	20,000,000
1990	20,000,000

The conferees direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to distribute any appropriated funds for this program in a prompt manner.

Licensing

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment provides that the specified types of information on dependent care services to be made available by resources and referral systems are optional rather than mandatory. It eliminates the requirement that before and after school childcare programs be provided at community centers only where school facilities are not available and clarifies that the licensing laws and regulations with which applicants must comply are those relating to "child care".

Conference agreement—The House receded. It is the conferees intent that where school facilities are utilized for childcare, programs physically conducted in schools may calculated space which they have access to and regularly use for school age child care programs after 3 p.m.

Child care definitions

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment revises the definition of school-aged children to include children under age five, the younger age to be consistent with the age at which each state provides free public education to children.

Conference agreement—The House recedes.

COMMUNITY SERVICES BLOCK GRANT

CSBG authorization

House bill—The House bill authorizes $390,000,000 for fiscal year 1987 and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment authorizes the CSBG program at

Fiscal year:
1987	$381,409,000
1988	392,851,000
1989	404,636,000
1990	416,775,000

Conference Agreement—The Senate recedes with an amendment to authorize the program at the following levels:

Fiscal year:
1987	$390,000,000
1988	409,500,000
1989	430,000,000
1990	451,500,000

Eligible entity

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment expands the definition of eligible entity to include programs which came into existence in FY 1982 as a direct successor to a community action agency and meets all of the board composition requirements of section 675(c)(3).

Conference agreement—The House recedes.

Transfer authority

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment requires that the allowed transfer of up to 5% of a state's allotment to specified programs or to provide assistance for state-awarded discretionary grants is to increase funds otherwise available to eligible entities under the Community Services Block Grant program. It prohibits the transfer of funds that would diminish the state's responsibility to pass through 90% of funds to eligible entities.

Conference Agreement—The Senate recedes.

Termination procedure

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment establishes procedures which the Secretary must follow in reviewing State proposed termination of funding to CAA's or migrant and seasonal farmworker organizations. The procedures include a prompt review and written determination by the OCS. The Senate bill also requires the Secretary to assume responsibility for funding the affected eligible entity if a state terminates funding prior to the completion of the required state hearing and Secretary's review.

Conference agreement—The House recedes with an amendment. The Conferees intend that in situations where the Secretary provides continuing funding to an eligible entity, the amount of funding provided will be subtracted from the state allotment.

Fiscal evaluations

House bill—The House bill has no comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment combines the required investigation and evaluation of compliance requirements in the Community Services Block Grant program. It states that such compliance evaluations are to be made especially with regard to purposes of the Act to ameliorate the causes of poverty in communities, State public hearings on the proposed use and distribution of funds, and all the eleven agreements required of States in their annual applications for their allotments of funds. Such evaluations are to include the impact of funds under this program on children, homeless families, and the elderly poor. The Secretary will send recommendations of improvements on how to enhance the benefit and impact to people in need to each State and the State will then submit a plan of action in response to the recommendation contained in the report. Evaluation results are to be submitted annually to the Chairmen of the House Education and Labor and Senate Labor and Human Resources Committees.

Conference agreement—The House recedes with an amendment to add the category of pregnant adolescents to the list of which the Secretary will note the impact of CSBG funds during their evaluations.

Discretionary authority

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary to fund national conferences, newsletters, and the collection and dissemination of data about programs and projects funded under the Community Services Block Grant program as part of training activities authorized under the program. It also specifies that community development corporations, which are one of the special emphasis programs for which funding is authorized, are to be governed by a board consisting of residents of the community and business and civic leaders.

Conference agreement—The House recedes. The Conferees intend that funds available under this provision not be utilized for political activities including direct support of a national association.

Community economic development discretionary authority

House bill—The House bill provides that the Community Economic Development discretionary program be carried out in accordance with the Community Economic Development Act. The House bill references Section 616 and 617(a) paragraphs (1) through (4) to provide better direction regarding the goals and structure of this discretionary program.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment specifies that Community Development Corporations, which are one of the special emphasis programs for which funding is authorized, are to be governed by a board consisting of residents of the community and business and civic leaders.

Conference agreement—The House recedes. The Conference notes that the continuing crisis in the farm economy has resulted in dislocation and high rates of unemployment in many rural states. Subject to the changes in the Community Economic Development section made in this Conference report, the Secretary is directed to ensure that CED funds are granted to rural states or rural areas within states. The Secretary is expected to encourage applications for discretionary funds which promote job creation and enterprise development in distressed rural communities and promote coordination with other state and federal efforts.

Rural development loan fund

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment clarifies that the loans to borrowers made after the date of enactment of the Food Security Act and prior to the date of enactment of the Human Services Reauthorization Act of 1986 shall be transferred to and administered by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Conference Agreement—the House recedes with an amendment. The amendment makes a number of technical corrections to complete the transfer of rural development loan functions accomplished in large part by enactment of P.L. 99-198, the Food Security Act of 1985. That Act transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture funds available in the Rural Development Loan Fund established under section 623(c)(1) of the Community Economic Development Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 9801 et seq.) The Conference agreement ensures that all intermediary borrowers will be treated equitably, that the weighted average passed on by intermediary borrowers shall be no more than six points. The Conferees recognize that the cost of interest, administration, bad debt and technical assistance far exceeds the rate of interest charged by the intermediary on some loans but it is intended that the interest spread on individual loans be kept as close to six points as possible. The Conferees intend that funds available for loan purposes, i.e. repayments into the Rural Development Loan Fund, will be distributed in accordance with the provisions of Section 405 of the Human Services Reauthorization Act Amendments of 1986. It is the intent of the conferees that such distribution give high priority to rural areas in distress due to the farm crisis.

Rural community assistance programs

House bill—The House bill directs the Secretary to give priority to private nonprofit organizations that carried out such programs prior to the enactment of the Community Services Programs of 1986.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment gives special priority to rural community assistance programs under the special emphasis program on rural housing and community facilities development.

Conference agreement—The Senate recedes with an amendment changing "such" to "community facility".

Poverty conference

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment directs the Secretary to appoint an advisory panel to develop and hold a national conference to exchange information on past approaches to the problems of poverty and to formulate plans for future methods of attacking the causes of poverty. The Secretary is directed to reserve $100,000 from administrative expenses to fund this conference. This section specifies the composition of the nine member panel and who is to designate each of its members.

Conference agreement—The Senate recedes.

Reports on Grants outside of competitive process

House bill—The House bill has no comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment requires that the Chairman of the House Education and Labor and Senate Labor and Human Resources Committees are to be provided annually with a summary of final reports on projects assisted under the Secretary's discretionary authority and a list of grantees who have received funds under this authority outside of the competitive process. The Senate bill directs the Secretary to compile and make available a catalog listing information on the projects funded under the discretionary program.

Conference agreement—The House recedes.

COMMUNITY FOOD AND NUTRITION

House bill—The House bill continues authority for appropriations for Community Food and Nutrition programs at such sums as may be necessary for Fiscal Years 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment extends the current authority for appropriations for the Community Food and Nutrition program at $2.5 million annually through 1990.

Conference Agreement—The Senate recedes with an amendment to specify that 60 percent of the funds appropriated shall be allocated as grants on the basis of poor and unemployed in each state and 40 percent of the grants shall be allocated on a competitive basis. In addition, the amendment authorizes the program at the following levels:

Fiscal year:

1987	$3,000,000
1988	3,000,000
1989	3,000,000
1990	3,000,000

The Conferees are concerned about past delays in the promulgation of regulations and distribution of federal grants, therefore, the Conferees direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to issue a Request for Proposals no later than 90 days after enactment of the Act, and to obligate any appropriation made available no later than sixty days thereafter. In awarding grants under this authority, the Conferees expect the Department of Health and Human Services to take into consideration both the needs of Native Americans, migrants, seasonal and displaced workers and the demonstrated ability of state and local public and private nonprofit agencies to successfully develop and implement programs and activities similar to that authorized by Section 681A. It is the intent of the Conferees that agencies receiving grants under this Section give high priority to outreach and public education programs designed to inform low-income individuals of criteria for participation in and the nutrition services afforded by the various federally-assisted nutrition programs.

COMMUNITY SERVICES BLOCK GRANT DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

CSBG demonstration projects

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment authorizes a new program for the development and implementation of new and innovative approaches to deal with particularly critical needs or programs of the poor which are common to a number of communities. Grants are to be made only for the projects which: can be closely coordinated with grantees' ongoing programs, involve significant new combinations of resources of new and innovative approaches involving partnership agreements, or will effectively promote the purposes of the Community Services Block Grant program. The Secretary is authorized to make grants to eligible entities to pay for no more than 50% of the costs of the program, with the non-Federal share to be in cash or in-kind. Not more than one grant may be made to a single entity, and no grant may exceed $250,000. Federal funds are to be for new programs; they may not substitute for programs previously carried out without Federal assistance; and other resources for the poor may not be diminished to provide the non-Federal match required for this program.

Conference agreement—The House recedes.

Authorization for community services block grant demonstration projects

House bill—The House bill has no comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment authorizes $10,000,000 each for fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989

Conference agreement—The House recedes with an amendment to authorize grants for the Community Services Demonstration project at the following levels:

Fiscal year:

1987	$5,000,000
1988	5,000,000
1989	5,000,000

LOW INCOME HOME ENERGY ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

LIHEAP authorizations

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment provides authorization for appropriations for the LIHEAP program at

Fiscal year

1987	$2,163,000,000
1988	2,227,890,000
1989	2,294,726,000
1990	2,363,567,000

Conference agreement—The House recedes with an amendment to authorize the program at the following levels:

Fiscal year

1987	$2,050,000,000
1988	2,132,000,000
1989	2,218,000,000
1990	2,307,000,000

The House recedes with a further amendment to require the Secretary to issue a yearly report on the manner in which certain requirements of the law are being carried out and the impact of each state's program on recipient and eligible households. It is the conferees intent that the new reporting requirements be included as a part of reports currently required under the statute, not a separate report. The amendment allows not more than $500,000 for technical assistance.

Energy crisis

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment specifies that community-based organizations can be designated to administer LIHEAP payments for energy crisis intervention.

Conference Agreement—The House recedes with an amendment which specifies three components the crisis intervention programs shall include so as to ensure timely responses to emergency situations and that the special needs of handicapped and elderly are met. Conferees intended that the term nonprofit includes private community based organizations such as agencies on aging or community action programs. In providing specific performance standards at the end of section 2604(c), the conferees do not intend to require that the states actually deliver a check to an applicant or fuel vendor within the deadlines for delivering assistance. It is the intent of conferees to ensure that individuals who are in life threatening situations receive care. Noncash assistance will satisfy these standards as long as the assistance is received by the client within the deadlines specified in the statute. Examples of energy-related crisis intervention include space heaters, blankets, alternative shelter, payments, flexible arrangements with utility providers, and resolution of the crisis through means which result in the immediate provision of essential energy. States will be considered in compliance with this provision as long as the crisis is averted by the deadline. It is the conferees intent that the provision suspending the energy crisis intervention sections only applies in situations where the ability of programs to provide services is directly affected.

Indian tribal allotment under LIHEAP

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment directs the Secretary to include Indian households residing within the State on the tribe's reservation or on trust lands adjacent to the reservation when calculating tribal allotments instead of only Indian households of the petitioning tribe. The section further provides authority to the Secretary to allocate a great amount of Federal LIHEAP funding for a tribal organization if the Indian tribe and the State both agree to such amount. In the case of tribes that do not have reservations, the Secretary shall define a population for the purposes of this paragraph in consultation with the tribe and the State.

Conference agreement—The House recedes.

Applications

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment expands the requirements for the annual application under Section 2605(c) to stress that the neediest households receive the maximum assistance under LIHEAP. This section also repeals the requirement that States must describe the types of energy usage and the average costs of home energy by type of fuel for each region of the State.

Conference agreement—The House recedes with an amendment to Section 2605(b)(5) of such Act to give added emphasis to the fact that assistance should be directed to those most in need. The amendment would amend Section 2605(b) of LIHEAP in paragraph 5 by striking out "in a manner consistent with the efficient and timely payment of benefits" and insert "in a timely manner,". The amendment also reorganizes and revises the information which must be included in state plans.

State plans

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment reorganizes the requirements for the annual applications under Section 2605(b) of the Act and the State plan under Section 2605(c) of the Act.

Conference agreement—The House recedes with an amendment to include the Model Plan requirement. The amendment requires the Secretary to make available each year a model state plan format that may be used to prepare the next fiscal year's state plan. The Conferees want to clarify that the Model State plan format required under this section need not be redrafted each year.

Consistent treatment

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment clarifies that LIHEAP payments may not be considered as income in the determination of eligibility for Food Stamps. The section states that for the purposes of the Food Stamp Act the LIHEAP payments or allowances shall be deemed to be spent for heating or cooling expenses and no distinction shall be made regarding whether payments or allowances are provided directly to or indirectly for the benefit of any household. Amendments in this section are to become effective on date of enactment or October 1, 1986, whichever is later.

Conference agreement—The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Effective date

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment provides for an effective date of October 1, 1986 or the date of enactment of the Act whichever is later.

Conference agreement—The House recedes with an amendment to provide for an effective date of October 1, 1986 or the date of enactment of the Act whichever is later. The amendment specifies that the amendments made by subsections (a), (b) and (c) of Section 504 shall not apply with respect to any fiscal year beginning in or before the 60 day period ending on the effective date of this Act. The amendment specifies that the amendments made by Section 502 shall take effect on December 1, 1986 or 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, whichever occurs later.

CHILD DEVELOPMENT ASSOCIATE SCHOLARSHIP

Child development associate scholarship

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary of Health and Human Services to award Child Development Associate Scholarship grants to any State receiving federal funds under the Social Services Block Grant. The grants may be used by the States to award scholarships to individuals who are eligible candidates for the Child Development Associate credentials. The Senate bill specifies assurances that the State must make on grant applications. These assurances include that the scholarship be awarded only to eligible individuals on the basis of financial need; in an amount sufficient to cover the costs of application, assessment and credentialing and that no more than 10% of the grant will be used on administrative costs. The Senate bill defines eligible individuals as those whose income does not exceed 150% of poverty. The Senate bill requires each State receiving a grant to submit an annual report on the number of eligible individuals assisted under this Act and their position and salaries before and after receiving the CDA credential.

Conference agreement—The House recedes with an amendment to delete the phrase "the various regions of the nation" from Section 503(c)(1). It is the intent of the Conferees that scholarship assistance for the CDA credential made available with funds under this title shall be made equally available for individuals working in family day care homes and child care centers as for those working in Head Start programs. In making grants under this section, the Secretary shall redistribute equitably any funds left over in the event that any state fails to apply. Further, the Conferees direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to distribute any appropriated funds in a prompt manner and that regulations be promulgated within ninety days of enactment of these provisions.

CDA authorization

House bill—The House bill has no comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment authorizes appropriations at the following levels:

Fiscal year:
1987	$1,500,000
1988	1,500,000
1989	1,500,000
1990	1,500,000

Conference agreement—The House recedes. The conferees direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to distribute any appropriated funds for this program in a prompt manner.

EXCELLENCE IN EDUCATION

Excellence in education

House bill—The House bill has no comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment contains a provision which clarifies a clause in the Excellence in Education Act that authorizes funding for grants which are secured by private-sector funds. The Senate bill will limit the use of the set-aside until such time as appropriations reach at least $15 million.

Conferees agreement—The House recedes.

BAT BOYS

Bat boys

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment amends the Fair Labor Standards Act to permit an exemption for children ages 14 and 15 to work up to 11:00 pm when school is in session two nights a week as bat boys and bat girls for league baseball games.

Conference agreement—The Senate recedes. The Conference agreement directs the Secretary of Labor to issue a report regarding whether a change in permissible hours of employment for bat boys and girls would be detrimental to their well being and whether or not such a change should be proposed. The report is required to be submitted to the Chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor and the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources within six months of date of enactment.

PRIMATE RESEARCH

Primate research

House bill—The House bill has no comparable provision

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment designates the Laboratory for Experimental Medicine and Surgery for Primates (LEMSIP) which is located in Sterling Forest New York as a regional primate center, thus making it eligible to compete for NIH grants.

Conference agreement—The Senate recedes.

READING INSTRUCTION

Reading instruction

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision.

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment requires the Department of Education to compile a complete list, by name, of beginning reading programs, indicating whether they do or do not present well-designed phonics instruction as recommended by "Becoming a Nation of Readers".

Conference agreement—The House recedes with an amendment to require the Secretary of Education to conduct a study in order to compile a complete list by name of beginning reading instruction programs and methods, including phonics. This listing shall indicate the average cost per pupil of such programs and methods and whether they do or do not present well-designed instruction as recommended in the report of the Commission on Reading.

CHILDREN'S JUSTICE ACT

Children's Justice Act

House bill—The House bill does not have a comparable provision

Senate amendment—The Senate amendment amends the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act to encourage States to enact child protection reforms which are designed to improve legal and administrative proceedings regarding the investigation and prosecution of child abuse cases.

Conference agreement—The Senate recedes.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 4021, REHABILITATION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1986

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 4021), to extend and improve the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and request a conference with the Senate thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? The Chair hears none and, without objection, appoints the following conferees: Messrs. HAWKINS, BIAGGI, WILLIAMS, MARTINEZ, HAYES, ECKART of Ohio, WALDON, JEFFORDS, GOODLING, COLEMAN of Missouri, and BARTLETT.

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 4116, DOMESTIC VOLUNTEER SERVICE ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1986

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 4116) to extend and improve the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973, with a Senator amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? The Chair hears none and, without objection, appoints the following conferees:

For consideration of all provisions of the House bill and of the Senate amendment and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. HAWKINS, ECKART of Ohio, JEFFORDS, and COLEMAN of Missouri.

For consideration of all provisions of the House bill and of the Senate amendment (except sections 3, 4, 5, 7, and 8(a) of the House bill and sections 3, 6, and 9 of the Senate amendment) and modifications committed to conference: Messers. KILDEE, OWENS, PERKINS, BRUCE, PETRI, and TAUKE.

For consideration of all provisions of the House bill and of the Senate amendment (except sections 8(b), 8(c), 8(d), and 9 of the House bill and sections 4, 5, and 10 of the Senate amendment) and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. WILLIAMS, BIAGGI, MARTINEZ, HAYES, WALDON, GOODLING, and BARTLETT.

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 4868, ANTI-APARTHEID ACT OF 1986

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 548 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 548

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House, without intervening motion, a motion if offered by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 4868) to prohibit loans to, other investments in, and certain other activities with respect to, South Africa, and for other purposes, with the Senate amendment thereto, and to concur in the Senate amendment, and the Senate amendment shall be considered as having been read. Debate on said motion shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on said motion to final adoption without intervening motion, and all points of order against said motion are hereby waived.

SEC. 2. Upon the adoption of the motion provided for in section 1, the House shall be considered to have adopted a House resolution containing the text: "Resolved, That in passing the bill, H.R. 4868, as amended by the Senate, it is not the intent of the House of Representatives that the bill limit, preempt, or affect, in any fashion, the authority of any State or local government or the District of Columbia or of any Commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States or political subdivision thereof to restict or otherwise regulate any financial or commercial activity respecting South Africa".

□ 0935

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WHEAT] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TAYLOR] pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 548 makes it in order for the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee to make a motion that the House concur in the Senate amendment to H.R. 4868, a bill which prohibits future loans to and investments in South Africa.

All points of order against the motion are waived under the provisions of the rule.

The rule also provides that the motion to concur in the Senate amendments is to be debatable not to exceed 1 hour—the time equally divided between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

After debate is completed, a vote will occur on the motion. Adoption of the motion by the House will clear the bill for the President's signature.

The rule also provides that upon adoption of the motion to concur in the Senate amendment, the House shall be considered to have adopted a House resolution consisting of language which is contained in section 2 of the rule itself.

The text of the resolution states that in passing H.R. 4868, it is not the intent of the House that the bill should limit the ability of State or local governments to restrict or regulate financial or commercial activity relating to South Africa.

Mr. Speaker, today this House stands on the brink of passing historic legislation that will place the United States on the side of 24 million black South Africans trapped under the iron fist of apartheid. Enactment of the Anti-apartheid Act of 1986 would be the first significant step of this Congress to put moral force behind the administration's rhetorical condemnations of the racist regime in South Africa. No longer will we turn our heads and look the other way while millions of innocent men, women, and children suffer and die because of one reason, and one reason only—the color of their skin.

Among its major provisions, H.R. 4868 would prohibit importation into the United States of all products produced by any South African Government-owned or controlled organization. However, strategic minerals important to our military needs would be exempted from this prohibition if the President certifies to Congress that the amounts produced in the United States are inadequate to meet those needs. In addition, the importation of several specific items would be banned, including textiles, uranium, iron and steel, coal, and agricultural products.

Another new sanction in the bill would bar all new United States loans to South African businesses and the Government. United States firms would be prohibited from making any new investments in South Africa, except to those firms owned by black South Africans.

This legislation would prohibit any South African-owned airline from operating in the United States and ban all United States airlines from taking off or landing in South Africa.

These are some of the more important sanctions contained in the act. However, the President could suspend or modify any of the sanctions in the bill if he reports to the Congress that the South African Government has made substantial progress toward dismantling the apartheid system. Such progress would include the release of black leader Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners and repeal of the current state of emergency.

My colleagues, the apartheid system is founded on institutionalized racism, enforced by brutality, and sustained in no small measure by American compliance. The repression of that system draws a race of war of immense proportions closer by the day. The few voices of peace and moderation still left in South Africa are slowly drowning in a sea of blood, clinging to a branch of hope that this country will bring pressure to bear on a still intransigent regime.

We must respond in a meaningful way to the cries of reasonable black and white South Africans. Their cries have carried a loud, clear message for many years: The international community must apply sanctions against the South African Government. Sanctions represent the only means left by which the West can offer effective support to the cause of freedom in South Africa.

No doubt we will again be warned that sanctions will hurt those we are trying to help—black South Africans—as if this revelation of truth has gone unnoticed by black South Africans.

Those concerned with the effect of sanctions on the already miserable conditions of black South Africans will be relieved to know that punitive economic sanctions are supported by the African National Congress, the United Democratic Front, the largest trade unions, most prominent church leaders, including Bishop Desmond Tutu, Rev. Alan Boesak, and the leading Catholic hierachy in South Africa.

A clear consensus exists among black South Africans in support of this legislation. A clear consensus exists among our constituents to apply sanctions against Pretoria. Now, hopefully, a clear consensus exists in this Congress on the need for this legislation, on the need to bring moral conviction to United States policy in South Africa.

The time is upon us. Admittedly, this bill cannot guarantee peace in South Africa; it cannot guarantee freedom for black South Africans; it cannot guarantee an end to apartheid in South Africa. But it can guarantee one thing: That the rest of the world—especially those suffering in South Africa—will know that this Congress witnessed evil and had the guts to take a stand. Mr. Speaker, let's take that stand. We can do no less than that.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 548 is a limited rule under which the House will consider agreeing to the other body's version of a bill imposing economic sanctions against South Africa.

This rule eliminates the necessity for a conference with the Senate on the bill, H.R. 4868, which the House passed on June 18.

Mr. Speaker, the rule provides for consideration of the motion to agree to the Senate amendments in the House and no amendments will be in order.

The rule provides for 1 hour of debate on the motion, which is to be equally divided between the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD], the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, the rule waives all points of order against the motion to agree to the Senate amendments, in order that the House might accommodate the leadership's desire to complete action on this legislation this week.

The rule also includes the text of a resolution expressing the intent of the House that the bill not limit, preempt, or affect in any fashion, the authority of State and local governments to impose sanctions of their own.

Mr. Speaker, section 2 of the rule is included because a provision of the Senate amendment apparently has the effect of giving State and local governments 90 days to bring their laws into conformity with the bill, or face the possible loss of Federal funds.

Although I do not like the idea of Congress telling our State and local governments they must do something or face the loss of funds they are otherwise entitled to by law, the area of foreign policy belongs primarily to the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, there was no opposition to this rule during our hearing in the Committee on Rules last night. Many Members may very well be opposed to the Senate amendment, but there is also ample reason to oppose this rule on procedural grounds alone.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, this is an embarrassment for the House; but we are used to embarrassments. Yesterday we dealt with an omnibus blockbuster bill on drugs that went from aardvark to zebra. There had been no hearings to make the thing coherent, intelligible, but we got on the train and it went down the track and now today, another rush to judgment on a bill that is of great importance, that I have not seen a copy of. It is not here in the Chamber; I have looked under the chairs and all over, but we are going to move on it, because that same train is gathering speed.

I hope during the debate the defenders of the Constitution, who were so evident here yesterday and who expressed with some passion their concerns about the sanctity of the unreasonable search and seizure provisions of the Constitution, will today explain their reaction to article I, section 8 of the Constitution which says Congress shall have the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

Because in our rush over the cliff of legislative prudence, we are going to adopt a motion here that says that it is not the House's intent that this bill limit, preempt or affect in any fashion the authority of any State or local government or the District of Columbia to restrict or otherwise regulate any financial or commercial activity respecting South Africa.

I would like some of you scholars of the Constitution to explain how that squares with article I, section 8 of the Constitution. Or do we pick and select those parts of the Constitution we choose to recognize, and we ignore the others.

Now, you are not treating this issue seriously if you do not give us a chance to read what the sanctions are. You do not give us a chance to study them, and I suggest that this issue deserves more than a rush to judgment and shoving it down everybody's throat.

□ 0945

I am concerned about sanctions. I want moderation. I am not looking for a revolution to tear the African Continent apart. But I think there are those who want a revolution, and nothing short of a revolution will satisfy them. But this is unconstitutional, it is an embarrassment. It is a terrible way to legislate on important, serious matters, and I repeat it is an embarrassment. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the seriousness of the concern of the gentleman, and certainly Members of the House ought to have the opportunity to review this significant historic legislation. As the gentleman is aware, this legislation passed the other body some time ago in the middle of August and has in fact been available to all the Members of the House to review since that time. So all of the Members have had the opportunity to look at the sanctions. The sanctions will be thoroughly debated when we get to the review of the bill itself, and there will be 1 hour allotted to that review process.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHEAT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Is it not true, I would ask the distinguished gentleman from Missouri—I would ask the gentleman, is it not true that the bill that is coming before the House as a result of this rule, if it is passed, is a bill written by the Republican leadership of the other body and was written and passed and debated for several weeks and had several hearings? And is it not true that most of the provisions in that bill are very similar to provisions that have been debated and considered on the floor of the House at one time or another and there have been hearings by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which I think the gentleman has a crucial interest and maybe even a membership on, is that not true?

Mr. WHEAT. The gentleman states it correctly. We will in fact be debating the bill verbatim that was written by members of the other party in the other body.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. May I ask another question?

Mr. WHEAT. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. With regard to the item read by the gentleman with regard to the rule and its constitutionality, it is my understanding that this writing is intended primarily to protect States rights and local governments' rights under the Constitution with regard to how they handle their financial affairs. It is not designed in any way, shape, or form to give State government and local government the ability to regulate international commerce, but it is designed primarily to express the intent that we, in no way, want to interfere with the judgment of any State legislature, any council which decides how it wants to regulate its own financial affairs with regard to things such as pension funds; is that not correct?

Mr. WHEAT. That is my understanding, that is the intent, is not to provide any new additional authority to State and local governments but merely not to preempt actions that they may have in fact taken with regard to this issue at this point, nor actions that they contemplate taking in the future.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman would further yield, so that is what you would be doing, you would be protecting the right of Governors like Tom Kean of New Jersey, a Republican Governor, or Governor Deukmejian of California, a Republican Governor, who have said that they have a special concern about how their States handle their pension funds and investments; is that not correct?

Mr. WHEAT. The rights of all States and local municipalities would be protected under the House resolution we would be adopting today.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I was wondering, I would think many of our colleagues who, for many years, have been very concerned about Federal activities intervening in State and local governments and who have been arguing for greater State and local control would now be concerned about such a statement of intent since clearly what this is intended to do is to say that any action we take is not intended to preempt State and local governments from handling their own personal or their own jurisdictional financial affairs. So I would hope that everyone would understand that and that many of the gentlemen from the other side of the aisle who have been leaders in this country for several decades arguing about the Federal Government's intrusion into State and local affairs, would understand that this is a clear statement of that which they have argued for many, many years.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHEAT. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois immediately after I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

Mr. FASCELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would simply say in response to the constitutional question that the bill does not amend the Constitution because it cannot do so. So the Constitution is still the Constitution. And if a State or local government is doing something that is unconstitutional, it is still unconstitutional, I say to the gentleman from Illinois. The bill does not change that situation one bit; he knows it and I know it; we all know it.

With respect to the availability of the printed material, let me say it has never been the practice, as far as I know, since I have been here to print up the Senate amendment and distribute it as an original bill. The only way that is available is in the engrossed copy or when it is printed in the RECORD on the Senate side. What we are doing here today is totally in order, and that is to take up the Senate amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHEAT. I would be happy to yield some of this side's time to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. I will try to be brief. I thank my friend for yielding.

I appreciate the constitutional instruction from the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that we are not trying to amend the Constitution. I had discerned that myself from reading this document. But I suggest the gentleman has never addressed what rights the States have to regulate foreign commerce because the Constitution says Congress shall have the right and the power to regulate foreign commerce. You are saying you are safeguarding the States' rights. They have no rights to regulate foreign commerce. While this does not amend the Constitution, as a matter of fact, it does not have the force of law, it is the sense of the House. But I suggest to you that in the plain reading of the English language in the Constitution, article I, section 8, it is the nonsense of the House, not the sense of the House.

I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND].

Mr. LELAND. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the rule before this body. Millions of our constituents have devoted countless time and energy to help place our great Nation on the side of justice and freedom in South Africa. Their tireless efforts to end United States support for the racist and inhuman Government of South Africa have resulted in the passage of anti-apartheid ordinances and laws in about 20 States and 80 cities throughout our country, including my home city of Houston, TX.

On June 18, 1986, the House of Representatives responded to the mandate of the American people by approving a comprehensive sanctions package authored by my good friend and colleague from California, RON DELLUMS, that would have ended all United States investment in and trade with South Africa. Subsequently, the other body approved a less stringent and less comprehensive measure against South Africa.

While the other body's language fails to end all commercial activity between the United States and South Africa, it does demonstrate to South Africa and the world the end of United States political support of a racist regime.

I am, however, particularily concerned, as I'm sure many of my colleagues are, over the other body's statutory silence on the question of Federal preemption over more stringent local and State ordinances and laws.

The rule before us has my strong support because its language clearly states that it is not the intention of this body to preempt or supercede any local and State laws referring to South Africa.

In the absence of statutory language in the other body's text, it is essential that we in this body establish a legislative history of intent not to preempt or supercede local and State anti-apartheid ordinances and laws.

I am concerned that without the clarifying language of intent contained in this rule, we risk losing the significant advance by the American people on local and State levels.

On a question of such magnitude, in which the American people have repeatedly and unequivocally called for an end to the oppression and violence that is apartheid, it is unconscionable for us—their elected Federal representatives—to ignore their mandate.

As Members of the House of Representatives we must emphatically state—for the record—that it was and is not our intention for the legislation soon before us to negate, in any form or fashion, any and all local and State anti-apartheid measures, ordinances and laws which resulted from the tireless efforts of millions of our constituents struggling to help bring peace and freedom to South Africa.

I would like to again commend my colleague of course from Missouri who has led us with the rule itself, has given us an incredible opportunity here to make that statement. I would also like to commend again the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS], for his leadership in this matter, for providing us on balance the real debate on the issue of apartheid and how it is that we should challenge it.

I thank the Speaker and urge all my colleagues to join me in supporting this rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DANIEL). The gentleman yields back 1 minute.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PARRIS].

Mr. PARRIS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, every Member of this Chamber believes apartheid is an abhorrent policy. I am one of those, however, who have some lingering concern about the effectiveness of sanctions to eliminate that situation, or to improve the situation that exists in South Africa.

I ask for this time this morning, Mr. Speaker, and I rise in opposition to the process that is being utilized in this measure as I speak. This matter was not on the whip notice which is traditionally given to us at the end of the previous week so that we might know what will be considered by this body. This matter was not on the printed agenda, it was placed on the agenda only last evening at something around 10 p.m. by the leadership who only decided yesterday that they would accede to the Senate version of this legislation. The point is that we are asked to vote on a very important matter when there is not even a copy available on the floor of this Chamber, as we engage in this debate. We do not have a copy of the Senate version of this bill in the Cloakroom. The staff does not have a copy to give to us. It was not printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the document room indicates it does not have a copy available. The Senate bill is 70 pages long and nobody has a copy of it to even look at as we discuss this matter. There isn't even a summary available for review.

Mr. Speaker, there is something fundamentally wrong with the legislative process when the greatest deliberative body of the strongest nation in the free world is asked to take some critically important action without even having the simple expediency of a piece of paper to read to see what it says that we are about to do. I suggest to you this resolution reads that we "concur in the Senate amendment and the Senate amendment shall be considered as having been read." The reason we do not read it is because nobody has got one. How do we know what we are about to do?

The bill as passed by the House was enormously different than the version adopted by the Senate. Who can tell me whether it says in the Senate version that we must negotiate only with the African National Council which has a large Communist representation in its membership? That's what the House bill provided. Who can tell me whether the Senate version says there must be immediate disinvestment without any opportunity for the extension of economic credit for health, or for humanitarian concerns or for any other reason? Does anybody know what we were asked to vote for here this morning?

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. PARRIS. I would be glad to yield to my distinguished friend.

Mr. DELLUMS. I appreciate my distinguished colleague yielding, and I in no way wish to challenge the gentleman's concern with respect to process. But I would just say I know that my colleague has been here long enough to know that we do not print Senate amendments other than the day that they are passed in the Senate and then printed in the RECORD. That is tradition. That is a matter of fact.

Mr. PARRIS. I would simply say to my friend that, had I been informed that this matter was coming up this morning. I would hope, in the face of an important consideration on the drug abuse problem of yesterday on which we spent all day and until 10:30 last night, had I known that we were not going to approach the problem, if you will, of tax reform which I am trying to do a little study about, had it not been for the fact that we are going into the continuing resolution next week and the reconciliation act which represents the expenditure of one-half trillion dollars, on which I have been spending some time, I would have tried, had time permitted, to look at this matter. But nobody ever told any of us; not just me that this matter was pending and would be considered this morning. I am not the only person around here who did not know until last night at 10 p.m. that this matter was coming up because the leadership did not know. Had we been given some kind of reasonable notice, then those of us who were unable to address our attention to this matter at an earlier time would be in a different situation. The situation we have here today is totally unconscionable, regardless of the merits of the issue addressed by this legislation. How can we as the elected leadership of the citizens of the United States take some action as critically important to the continent of Africa and the citizens of South Africa, black or white, as this without even knowing what we are doing and without an adequate time for consideration or debate? I respectfully submit that that is exactly what we are are doing here this morning.

Now, on the question of constitutionality or unconstitutionality, I would say to my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, if you believe this matter is clearly unconstitutional, which it obviously is, then we ought not to vote for it. It is not a question of whether we are amending the Constitution. This resolution says it is not the intent of this Congress to limit or preempt the District of Columbia to restrict or otherwise regulate any financial or commercial activity respecting South Africa.

□ 1000

What that means, Mr. Speaker, is that every political jurisdiction in this Nation can restrict the sale of Ford auto parts unless it disinvests its presence in South Africa. That is in direct opposition to article I, section 8 of the Constitution and should therefore be rejected.

I think the consideration of this proposal under this process this morning is simply outrageous.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and in support of the House passage of this measure.

I wish we were voting on a conference report that was closer to the version that the House passed earlier this year. The amendment of the gentleman from California was the toughest sanctions bill that we have ever considered in the House, and we passed it.

I spent 10 days in South Africa during August, and I come back with the conviction that economic leverage, strong economic leverage, as mandatory and as universal as we can achieve is the last hope that we have to avoid a holocaust in South Africa of great bloodshed and suffering.

The debate is not whether some in South Africa will suffer, including some blacks will suffer, from sanctions. The question is whether or not that economic hardship can be used as leverage for the change that must come for majority rule in that country. That is where things must go. The question is: Is this Nation, is this Congress, going to put itself squarely on the side of that change and use the powers that are available to us to help bring it about?

There cannot be change in South Africa without sacrifice of the white majority, those who have controlled the destiny there for too long. If we can do it with economic pressure, we will gain much in that regard. For too long we have searched for and found excuses not to act, but our failure to act will be recorded against us long into the future.

I hope the House will take this opportunity to move one small step in the right direction. The decision now will be up to the President whether or not he wants a peaceful and rapid change to majority rule in South Africa.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, for 1 moment, I want to add my voice to those who have gone before me, and not to talk about the oppressive laws of South Africa. I think we could get a total majority in this House, a total vote, against those laws.

What I am talking about is not the Constitution of South Africa, but the Constitution of the United States. And I would ask us for 1 moment to take a look at what we are doing here. I might take just 1 moment to give a short lesson in constitutional law.

The several States of this Nation came together 200 years ago and granted certain powers to the Federal Government. Specifically, those powers not specifically granted to the Federal Government are reserved to the States, and that is what those of us who believe so strongly in States' rights are talking about.

But even those of us who are so strongly in favor of States' rights do understand that there are some specific powers that were granted to the Federal Government. I read to you: "The Congress shall have the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations."

Even 200 years ago our forefathers recognized the importance of speaking with one voice. If we want to expand the sanctions, let us do it from Washington. We are the United States speaking to the Union of South Africa about an oppressive regime. We are not the District of Columbia, the State of Florida, the State of Texas or the State of Pennsylvania.

Can you imagine in other situations how confusing it would be for the world for the 50 States and the District of Columbia to be speaking and espousing the public policy of this United States as it applies to foreign nations? It is wrong. It is unconstitutional, and it damages the image that this country wishes to portray to the entire world in dealing with foreign countries.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ].

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I hope to speak during the debate on the bill itself about the fundamental justification for the adoption of this legislation. During the course of the debate on the rule, I simply want to confine myself to commenting on the issue of preemption.

I want to make the point that in addition to the language included in the rule before us which makes it clear that it is the intent of the House that the adoption of the legislation on South Africa not preempt State and local authorities from taking their own actions with respect to South Africa, that there has been a memorandum prepared at my request by the law division of New York City which makes it very clear, I think, that with but one exception, there is nothing in the bill that came out of the Senate which would preempt the right of State and local governments to take their own actions concerning apartheid.

I am including the memorandum at this point as a way of further bolstering the legislative history on this issue.

The memorandum follows:

THE CITY OF NEW YORK,
LAW DEPARTMENT,
New York, NY, September 11, 1986.

MEMORANDUM

To: Hon. STEPHEN SOLARZ, Member of Congress.

From: Paul T. Rephen, Chief, Division of Legal Counsel.

Re: Status of State and Local Anti-Apartheid Legislation under the Proposed Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986.

You have asked for our view as to the effect of the proposed Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986, as approved by the Senate, on the ability of state and local governments to continue to enforce their anti-apartheid legislation. Such legislation generally limits the power of government to enter into contracts with certain companies doing business in South Africa or requires divestiture of stockholdings in those companies. For the reasons explained below, it is our view that if the Senate bill in its current form is enacted into law, state and local governments will continue to be able to enforce their laws, except with respect to contracts that are federally-aided.

The Senate considered the effect of its bill on state and local laws during a debate on August 15, 1986. The issue was raised when Senators D'Amato and Moynihan introduced an amendment that would have preserved the right of state and local governments to apply their anti-apartheid legislation to federally-aided contracts, as long as the state or local government assumed any increase in the cost of a contract resulting from the application of its law. Senator D'Amato explained that early this year the United States Department of Transportation had withheld approval of funding for highway contracts by the City of New York on the ground that application of the City's Local Law 19, which provides for the award of a contract to other than the lowest bidder in certain circumstances where the lowest bidder does not agree to refrain from doing business with the agencies that enforce apartheid, conflicts with federal competitive bidding requirements. Senator D'Amato also noted that Congress had provided relief to the City by enacting legislation that would enable the City to apply Local Law 19 to its federally-aided contracts through the end of the current federal fiscal year, September 30, 1986. The purpose of the D'Amato/Moynihan amendment to the Senate version of the Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act was to make this protection permanent, and to extend it to all state and local governments that have adopted similar legislation. As Senator D'Amato observed, such legislation has been enacted by at least 25 local governments.

Senator Lugar opposed the D'Amato/Moynihan amendment on the ground that the proposed federal legislation should preempt state and local legislation concerning South Africa. When Senator Pell commented that the legislation should not interfere with divestiture programs that have been adopted by some states, Senator Lugar responded that this matter would have to be resolved by the courts, but the D'Amato/Moynihan amendment "muddies the water with regard to the preemption issue." After this discussion, a vote was taken on the amendment, and it was defeated by a vote of 64–35, with one abstention.

Senators D'Amato and Moynihan then offered another amendment, which was adopted by the Senate. This amendment, now § 606 of the Senate bill, provides:

"Notwithstanding section 210 of Public Law 99–348 or any other provision of law—

"(1) no reduction in the amount of funds for which a State or local government is eligible or entitled under any Federal law may be made, and

"(2) no other penalty may be imposed by the Federal Government, by reason of the application of any State or local law concerning apartheid to any contract entered into by a State or local government for 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act."

Senator D'Amato explained that this amendment gives local governments that have passed anti-apartheid legislation 90 days after the date of enactment of the proposed federal law "to change their laws," and said that it "prevents any loss of Federal funds that might result from the passage of the anti-apartheid legislation on a local basis."

The amendment adopted by the Senate appears to allow state and local governments to continue to apply their local anti-apartheid legislation to federally-financed contracts for a period of up to 90 days following the enactment of the proposed federal law, while at the same time allowing the state and local governments time to exclude federally-funded contracts from the operation of their legislation.

By adopting this amendment, it would appear that the Senate did not intend to preempt all state or local laws concerning South Africa. Rather, the Senate bill only precludes states and localities from applying such laws to contracts funded by the federal government. Senator D'Amato's comments in support of his and Senator Moynihan's amendment indicate that the amendment's purpose was to permit states and localities to continue to enforce their statutes dealing with South Africa except in the case of federally funded contracts. We have consulted with Senator D'Amato, and he confirms this interpretation of his amendment.

I believe the adoption of the rule will make it crystal clear the House does not intend that this legislation on South Africa preempt the right of State and local authorities to take action on South Africa, and this memorandum of law makes it clear that neither did the Senate intend to do so either, regardless of some passing observations that may have been made by one Member of the other body during the course of the debate.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SOLARZ. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SHAW. The question is not the point of talking about whether or not we are preempting the States rights. The problem is in the wording of the resolution itself. It said, and I read:

* * * The authority of any State or local government or the District of Columbia or of any Commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States or political subdivision thereof to restrict or otherwise regulate any financial or commercial activity respecting South Africa.

That is all inclusive of the powers that have been specifically reserved to the Federal Government.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOLARZ. I yield to the gentleman from Florida, the very distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, the answer is obviously simple in the sense that if the States and local governments do not have authority, then they do not have it under the Constitution. So it does not make any difference how you read this language. It is immaterial, because it cannot change the Constitution.

If the States are now doing something unconstitutional, then it is unconstitutional. This legislation does not clothe them with any additional power.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, we simply do not have enough time, this rule does not allow enough time for us to debate the ramifications of the Senate bill adequately.

I want to make three points. The pain and suffering that colleagues on the other side of the aisle say is necessary to bring about positive change in South Africa is going to be much more widespread than we anticipate because of this legislation.

Yesterday in my office, I had 12 people from Inkatha come to visit me and talk to me about these sanctions. To a man or woman, they were opposed to these sanctions. They represent 1.3 million black South Africans. They represent Chief Buthelezi, the Chief of the Zulu tribes, 6 million black South Africans. They said they do not want these sanctions.

So many of my colleagues have been misguided into believing that the previous sanctions that have been imposed by the administration have changed such things as the pass laws. Those people yesterday told me the pass laws were changed because of internal pressure from blacks coming to the cities in large numbers to such a degree that the South African Government could not cope and they changed the pass laws out of necessity. Not because of our sanctions. Our bludgeoning the South African Government is not going to change apartheid; what is going to change apartheid, according to INCATHA, is for us to help the economic plight of the blacks so that they can grow in strength and continue to put pressure internally upon that Government to bring about change. That is what they asked us to do.

What will these sanctions bring to the South African blacks? First of all, we are going to see in the coal mines 145,000 blacks lose their jobs. The Gray bill would have done that. But this bill, the bill coming out of the Senate, will cut agricultural exports, among other things, totaling 446,000 jobs. Each one of those people feeds five to six other South African blacks. That means 2.2 million South African blacks will be without sustenance. That does not include the other industries that are related to these industries that will be adversely affected.

In addition to that, the South African National Congress, the African National Congress, is going to be the beneficiary and we all know they are controlled by the Communists. Nineteen of the 30 members of the Executive Committee of the African National Congress are members of the South African Communist Party, and they want violent revolution. Joe Slovo, the head of their military wing, has talked consistently about a violent revolution and overthrow of that Government.

If we put these people out of work, if they cannot feed their kids, they are going to be ripe for that revolutionary rhetoric from the Communists and they are going to fall right into that trap and we are going to see a bloodletting like you will not believe. Not because of leaving them alone, but because of what we are doing.

My colleagues say if we do not do something there will be a revolution. I say to you these sanctions will cause a bloody revolution, and we do not want that to happen.

Let us just talk about how it is going to affect the United States of America. Nobody talks about that. The strategic minerals that are vital for the security of this country and our industrial health come from South Africa. Only 5 percent of their exports are strategic minerals. What makes anyone think they are going to sell us strategic minerals that are vital to our economic health and our defense if we embargo products that they want to sell to us in large quantities? Ninety-nine percent of the manganese that we use in steel production comes from South Africa. The only other place we can get it in quantity is from the Soviet Union.

Now the cost of steel is going to go up directly proportionate to the cost of manganese. Platinum, which is vital to this country, the catalytic converters, 80 percent of it for the free world comes from South Africa. We are going to cut that off.

Let us get back to the steel. The cost of automobiles is going to go up, the cost of farm implements is going to go up, the cost of constructing buildings is going to go up. Let us talk about agriculture. Two years ago South Africa bought 2.7 million metric tons of corn. They bought more wheat this year than the Soviet Union has and they are cash buyers.

My colleagues, we cannot afford to lose any more agricultural markets. So if you look at the bottom line, the bottom line is we are going to hurt the very people we want to help. We are going to play into the hands of the Communists. Strategic minerals that are vital to the security of this country we are going to have to deal with the Soviets to get if the African National Congress takes over South Africa, if the Communists have their way and they might very well succeed.

Finally, the farmers, and I have a lot of them in the Sixth Congressional District of Indiana, are going to be without another market. We cannot afford that. Now if you think that is not a big problem, go out and talk to them. If you think that is not a big problem to auto workers, the unfair competition from overseas and how this is going to translate into higher auto costs, go out and talk to them.

So you are not only hurting the black South Africans, you are hurting American industry and business and the farmers as well.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS].

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, let us speak plainly. For its black majority, South Africa is a totalitarian state without a free press, without the rule of law. South Africans are prevented from assembling peaceably even to bury the victims of official murder.

The bill before us today is not all that I would have wished. It does not provide for full disinvestment as the bill I cosponsored, which was sponsored by our distinguished friend and colleague, Mr. DELLUMS from California, and adopted by this House on June 18 provided. Its impact on the South African Government will be only incremental. But it is, nonetheless, an important step in the right direction. It is a step in the direction to which the American people have been pushing us over the course of these past months and years.

In that context, let me address the issue of preemption. There has been reference to Republican Governors of California and of New Jersey whose States, among many other States and localities, have undertaken to prevent financial involvement with South Africa. The city of New York has a regulation which provides that any company desiring to bid for New York City business has to certify that it is not any company doing business with South Africa.

The Secretary of the U.S. Department of Transportation has ruled that because of that provision, the city of New York shall receive a reduced amount of Federal assistance from DOT. That is wrong. No city or State should be penalized for adhering to a higher moral standard than the Federal Government in regard to the evil of apartheid. The language in this resolution sets forth the clear congressional intent to allow the States and localities to decide whom they will do business with.

It has been made necessary to include such a sense of Congress because one important Member of the other body has seen fit to make a statement which would suggest otherwise. It is absolutely essential, for the record to be clear, that the right of the cities, localities, and the State governments of this country to make their own determination to stop doing business with South Africa is in no way intended to be preempted or superseded by this legislation.

These local initiatives are in the best tradition of local government in America. They do not undermine or interfere with the Federal Government's control over foreign policy. On the contrary they complement it.

Mr. Speaker, the time for decisive action on South Africa is now. In recent weeks we have seen the level of repression and official murder increase to unprecedented levels. The South African authorities have made it plain that they will not be moved by words of condemnation, or "quiet diplomacy," or "constructive engagement."

I urge the adoption of the bill before us today. We must send a strong signal which will be heard by the black majority in South Africa and by our European allies—and by those who cling to power in South Africa itself.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I get the feeling that we have kind of a clever little game being played out here about the bill that we are bringing to the floor, and I just want to try to make a little legislative history here myself.

I intend to vote for the Senate amendments, but I intend to vote for them because they are in fact a balanced approach to this problem. A balanced, constitutional approach to the problems that we face in South Africa. A part of that balance is that Congress is saying flatly that we are making a determination of national foreign policy relating to South Africa. It is a unified policy that is not to be changed by States or localities or universities or whatever.

We are in fact saying that we are preempting the ability of others to set their own foreign policies. Now, when we put language in this particular rule that causes some of us who are going to vote for the Senate approach a little bit of a problem because what this is an attempt to do is to say something different than that which the bill is that they are bringing to the floor. I think it is extremely important for some of us who are going to vote for this bill to say flatly that it is our intention to vote for a bill that does in fact set a unified foreign policy and a unified policy with regard to the commerce of this Nation that is in line with article 1, section 8 of the Constitution. That is exactly what I think we intend to do out here. I want the legislative history to be clear.

What we are doing in this rule is simply a sense of the House. It has absolutely nothing to do with the statutory language which is in the Senate bill. The statutory language of the Senate bill makes absolutely clear that we are preempting the ability of others outside the national government to set foreign policy. Foreign policy should be in the hands of the Congress and it should stay there.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLARZ. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand the Senate bill. Can the gentleman point to a single paragraph, a single sentence or a single word in the Senate bill which explicitly preempts the right of State and local governments to take action on South Africa?

Mr. WALKER. Let me say to the gentleman I will go back to what the gentleman from Florida has told us here a few minutes ago.

□ 1020

The Constitution makes that clear. We do not have to put language in to do that. The Constitution makes clear that when we set policy and when we tell the States they must come into compliance with the Federal law, we are in fact acting under the Constitution. The gentleman from Florida is absolutely right there, and that is the language in the bill to which I refer.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, let me say to my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I just want to understand what he is saying. I think I do. I might disagree, but I just want to make sure I understand.

The gentleman is telling us he is for legislation——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DANIEL). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] has expired.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE].

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise also today to discuss the legislative history and to support the rule as well as the bill, H.R. 4868, as amended.

While the language of this bill will not be nearly as strong as the language that I would like to see nor as strong as the language that this body sent over to the other body, it does remain a powerful policy statement on one of the most important moral issues of our times—apartheid, the ability of an individual to exercise his or her fundamental human rights, the right to vote, the right to live where they choose, and the right to be treated as a full citizen in the land of their birth.

The overwhelming bipartisan support in Congress for sanctions reflects our legitimate concern over South Africa and our frustration with the appalling administration inaction on this issue.

But there is a very important point that has been discussed in the context of this debate and in the context of this rule that I would like to emphasize in the remainder of my remarks. Many State and local governments have taken the lead on South African sanctions. In fact, they have been instrumental in creating the momentum for action at the Federal level when the Federal Government lagged behind some of the leadership on the State and local levels.

My own State of California, for example, recently passed a landmark law mandating the divestiture of stock in companies operating in South Africa.

This rule that we are voting on today includes language protecting such laws. We include important language protecting such laws by clearly indicating that it was not the intent of Congress in passing legislation to preempt State and local actions on South Africa. That language in this rule is critical if we are to ensure that States have the right to determine their own investment policies.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the rule and the bill, as amended, and specifically to understand the legislative history contained in this rule, that we oppose preemption and that we are protecting State and local laws.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH], a member of the committee.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, just as the Bible and the Constitution or any other legislation passed by this House, this legislation is open to interpretation. Today the House is agreeing to the South African sanctions bill adopted by the other body. In so doing, we adopt the intent and legislative history of its authors.

This bill was debated for 3 days on the floor of the other body and the authors who penned various provisions in the bill made clear their intent.

As ranking member of the International Economic Policy and Trade Subcommittee which has jurisdiction for trade sanctions, I would like to add to the record a reiteration of congressional intent with respect to the provisions of new loans and investments:

PROHIBITIONS ON NEW LOANS TO, AND NEW INVESTMENTS IN, SOUTH AFRICAN ENTITIES

H.R. 4868, passed by the Senate on August 15, 1986, prohibits U.S. persons from extending new financing to public and private sector South African entities whether in the form of loans, purchase of stock, bonds, or assets. The specific exceptions to these broad prohibitions, discussed here and established by the bill, represent a reasoned decision in each case that U.S. nationals, rather than South Africans, would suffer unjustified financial harm absent the exceptions.

1. PREEXISTING AND RESTRUCTURED LOANS

A. Description of restructured debt

In August 1985, South Africa declared a moratorium on payment of short-term debt owed by South African residents to foreign creditors. South African debt outstanding and subject to the moratorium totalled approximately $14 billion. The reason for the suspension of payments was that South Africa lacked the aggregate foreign exchange for South African private and public sector debtors to meet all payments owed in foreign exchange when due.

Such a unilateral suspension of payments clearly was untenable from the viewpoint of the creditors, who immediately began pressing the South African authorities to resume repayments on an orderly schedule at the earliest possible date, and made clear that no new foreign exchange would be provided. The result of these efforts was as follows:

South Africa provided to its public and private sector debtors a repayment of 5 percent of the principal amounts covered by the moratorium and maturing, beginning April 15, 1986.

South Africa committed to provide foreign exchange to South African debtors so they could continue to make interest payments on the debt. Moreover, South Africa agreed that interest could be charged and paid at up to a 1 percent spread over the rates then in place, reflecting increasing risk on the credits.

South Africa agreed that the remainder of outstanding principal would be paid June 30, 1987.

South Africa further provided that: (1) the foregoing commitments would apply even where a creditor chose to substitute one private sector borrower for another on outstanding debt (for example, a creditor could substitute a more creditworthy borrower); and (2) the South African government (through the Public Investment Commissioners [PIC]) would assume a private sector debt directly if the creditor so chose (for example, during such time as a substitution of one private debtor for another is being arranged).

B. Need for statutory exception

H.R. 4868 allows restructured loans, under the foregoing arrangements, to remain outstanding, and, if appropriate, for further restructurings to be arranged that are aimed at achieving full repayment to foreign creditors. Failure to make these exceptions to the prohibitions on loans to the private and public sector in South Africa, would grant a windfall financial benefit to South Africa, since South Africa could refuse to make the repayments.

As no South Africa loan presently is in default, U.S. creditors at this time would have no legal basis on which to demand payment—by litigation or otherwise—on the loans: rather, the effect would be outright debt forgiveness to South Africa.

Moreover, even if there were some legal basis for suit now, or in the future, the expenses of international litigation and the limited amount of South African assets located outside South Africa on which a recovery might be sought (relative to the aggregate outstanding debt) indicate that U.S. creditors would suffer extensive losses from which South Africa directly would gain.

Accordingly, the exceptions to the prohibition on loans to South African residents created for rescheduled loans (including the substitution of debtors on outstanding loans) avoids unjustified financial losses to creditor institutions, and has a corresponding financial cost to South Africa.

2. SUSTAINING FINANCIAL VIABILITY OF U.S. CORPORATIONS REMAINING IN SOUTH AFRICA

H.R. 4868 prohibits new investments in South African companies but makes an exception for certain financial transactions by, and with respect to, the South African business operations of U.S. companies. H.R. 4868 does not, directly or indirectly, require any U.S. company to divest its South African business interests (either through the prohibition on new investments or loans to South African entities). To do so could lead to extraordinary losses to the U.S. companies, the assumption of those businesses by others, and thus the absence from South Africa of a continuing important force for social change.

However, H.R. 4868 does limit investments by U.S. companies in their South African offices, branches, or subsidiaries solely to: reinvestment of profits [1] and investment necessary to maintain continuing operations. Thus, U.S. companies can continue to conduct their businesses in South Africa at the current level of operations. This includes U.S. financial institutions which, consistent with the ban on new loans to South African companies, may reemploy their local currency assets through, for example, local currency loans to private sector companies. Indeed, absent such authority, the financial institution would soon be in liquidation and the bill effectively would result in divestment. Again, liquidation of local assets could lead to unjustifiable losses to U.S. companies.

Thus H.R. 4868 has permitted U.S. corporations to remain in operation in South Africa, although under clear constraints on the permissible growth of those businesses. To do otherwise would cause unjustified financial harm to U.S. companies while removing an important force for change in South Africa.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SILJANDER], the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Africa.

Mr. SILJANDER. Mr. Speaker, I have just a couple of quick points to make on this issue that we have discussed over and over and over again here in the Congress. This procedure is a little bit peculiar, if nothing else. We have not been in session at 9 o'clock in the morning since I can remember, let alone on a Friday and let alone on a Friday when the night previously we were in session until nearly midnight.

It is pretty clear that there is a ramrod approach to get the sanctions bill through in enough time so we can override the President's veto. Manipulation is nothing new on the floor of the Congress. Manipulation relative to this issue is nothing new. Unfortunately, many in this Congress insist on ramrodding this issue that has tremendous implications not only for the blacks in South Africa but indeed for all of America and the Western World.

Let it be stated very clearly that this approach, the Senate approach, while some may call it a balanced approach and some may call it a moderate approach, is a very tough approach indeed. It is far more tough than the Gray approach, in my opinion, that was debated on this floor not too many months ago.

If a black woman who makes rugs in South Africa were in any way whatsoever subsidized by the South African Government, she could not export those rugs to the United States. Those involved in handicrafts and in so many black entrepreneurships who are subsidized in one way or another by the Government of South Africa could not under this bill export their products to the United States. Under this bill, if the business of a black entrepreneur in South Africa, by any remote stretch of the imagination, were subsidized by the government in any indirect fashion, he could not export his goods to America.

Under this bill intelligence cooperation would be cut off. We could certainly go on for many, many hours with what I perceive to be the problems with this bill. But I would ask two simple questions of those who are promoting this approach of sanctions. I would ask just two questions, and if those questions could be responded to in a reasonable fashion, I would vote with them without question.

The first question I would ask is this: How specifically will sanctions stop the killing in South Africa? After all, that has been an initial presentation of the speeches—the deaths in South Africa and the racial apartheid in that country. How specifically will sanctions deal with those two issues?

The second question is this: If blacks in South Africa were so overwhelmingly supportive of sanctions against South Africa, then why do not the blacks themselves go on a general strike for 2 weeks? They are legally involved in labor unions in South Africa, and the blacks could easily within 2 weeks, as I said, stymie the entire economy of South Africa. They could do more in 2 weeks than would be required by years of sanctions by the entire trading West against the Government of South Africa. There could be an entire economic stymie in 2 weeks.

Why, then, if the blacks are so supportive of sanctions in South Africa, as you contend, why do not the blacks just walk off their jobs themselves? We have not heard a response because frankly there is not one.

By destroying the very wheels that turn the economy, we will remove the very force the blacks themselves are using to forge change in South Africa.

Let me ask one other question before I close. What if sanctions do not work? What if the sanctions that we propose in this bill will not encourage or create change in the apartheid system in South Africa? What then? Where would the United States be in terms of our ability to negotiate, to use pressure to encourage change? We will have yielded that away completely.

So in all compassion, I would just ask those who are supporting this approach to answer those two basic questions. And may I close by repeating those questions. How specifically, not with emotionalism but with practical reality, will sanctions stop the apartheid in South Africa and stop the killing? And, No. 2, why do blacks themselves not engage in an internal economic stymie of their own country, which could easily be done in only a few weeks?

So, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the membership of the Congress to look again at those two very important and very crucial questions.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SILJANDER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt the intentions of any of my colleagues here today. What rational person could support a system of apartheid which relegates an individual to an inferior status simply because he or she has black skin. I cannot and do not.

But, the vote to accept the Senate amendments to H.R. 4868 is not a referendum on apartheid. I strongly support the peaceful abolition of apartheid. South Africa is moving toward a more fair society, albeit slower than I would like. But, change does not occur overnight. I am afraid that H.R. 4868 will not foster peaceful change but will move South Africa one step closer to bloody revolution.

Economic sanctions will harm South Africans, black and white alike. But, black South Africans will suffer the most from sanctions. American firms, like IBM, have led the way in improving the plight of black South Africans. If American firms are hampered by this legislation, their efforts to improve the plight of black South Africans will be hampered too. If sanctions lead to fewer jobs from United States-based companies operating in South Africa, blacks will lose the most. If the South African standard of living is lowered as a result of sanctions, black South Africans will be most severely harmed.

Most black South African leaders understand the consequences of disinvestment. Chief Buthelezi, leader of the Zulu Tribe, has said: "It is morally imperative that American firms remain active here. * * * My people want and need you here. * * *" Mrs. Lucy Mvubelo, general-secretary of the National Union of Clothing Workers, South Africa's largest union had said of United States withdrawal from South Africa: "It will be seen as a surrender to the revolutionary philosophies of the East and a lack of faith in the very democratic capitalistic system which you represent. Remaining in South Africa and increasing your stake will be a boost to the evolutionary process which is now taking place. It will be encouragement that the freedom which is so cherished by Americans can also be ours."

And, finally, I would like to quote a well-known South African journalist, Mr. Percy Quoboza. Mr. Quoboza forcefully drives home the truth about economic sanctions: "If you want a complete transformation of this society, the easiest thing to do is get everybody packing up their bags, taking their money out of the country and resisting all forms of investment in the country. But, of course, the moment you do that you create economic chaos. And that is a sure guarantee for full-scale, bloody confrontation, which would unleash a bloodbath such as we have never seen. * * * So, when people talk glibly about disinvestment, I think they ought to realize what they are saying—from 8,000 miles away and the security of distance—'Let the blood flow, and maybe then we'll have a just society.'"

Let's not "pack our bags" and relegate South Africa to violent bloodshed. In the final analysis, your good intentions in voting for sanctions won't count; the tragic results these sanctions may bring will.

Mr. SILJANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY].

□ 1030

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the issue before us now is whether or not we will adopt a rule that will allow consideration of a sanctions bill written by the Republican leadership of the Senate, passed by the Senate over 1 month ago, 84 to 14, bipartisanly, that has been published, that has been available for anybody who wanted to do their homework and read it, and particularly for those who are on the Foreign Affairs Committee.

It seems ridiculous now to argue that we cannot take a vote because we have not done our homework or we do not have a copy or we do not know how to read the language.

Second, it seems to me the argument about constitutionality is absolutely a ludicrous and absurd one, for clearly anyone who reads this language, as the distinguished gentleman from Florida, the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee has pointed out, there is no change of the Constitution. There is a statement of intent.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] is absolutely right when he described what the issue was with regard to intent, and that is whether or not by passage of this bill are we preempting States and local governments from taking certain actions within their jurisdictions? Clearly, the answer to that is one which is in doubt, because, first, the Senate bill mentions nothing about preemption; so therefore, by voting for this rule, you are saying that you are allowing States to do as they please.

I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] would agree with me that the Lieutenant Governor, Mr. Scranton, who just recently said he would not like to invest pension funds in companies in South Africa, and the State senate and the State house in Pennsylvania, he would not want to deny them the right to determine how to make their investments. That is essentially what the issues is with regard to the Constitution.

Thus, when you vote for this rule, all you will be saying is that I want to allow Pennsylvania, I want to allow California, I want to allow Virginia, I want to allow Maryland to determine what to do with their pension funds.

So the issue is clear. Let us not cloud it up with any gamesmanship about, "I can't read, I need a copy, or there is a constitutional question."

Let us push the Senate bill and give it to the President and make a statement and light a candle for those oppressed.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4868, the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986. I would especially like to extend my support for the provision in the rule which expressly states that local antiapartheid initiatives will not be preempted by this act.

Local commercial and economic restrictions on companies which do business in South Africa are the prerogative of State and municipal governments. At least 25 localities across the country have enacted laws which restrict businesses from engaging in financial relationships with South Africa. These laws reflect the will of the people in those localities that the United States should not do business with South Africa.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is the duty of the Members of this body to submit to the will of our constituents who have chosen to enact local antiapartheid laws. We cannot, and should not, ignore the sentiment of the American people by unilaterally declaring their will to be somehow misguided or misinformed. Our constituents know what they want, Mr. Speaker, and it is evident that they want us out of South Africa.

We must send a signal to South Africa that we are absolutely committed to ending our economic and commercial relationship with apartheid. This commitment requires the participation of our society at every level. The Federal Government should work in tandem with State and local governments, and the business community must respond to the concerns of consumers and the academic community.

Spiritual leaders, elected officials, the legal community, and our financial institutions must join the growing moral consensus that is reflected in the antiapartheid initiatives of local governments. The bottom line is that the people have spoken, and we must answer them.

Let us defeat any attempt to preempt local antiapartheid laws. Let the people have their say.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to lend my strong support to the rule and the bill, H.R. 4868, the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986. This rule and the legislation are critical and must be passed at this time to provide sufficient time for another vote should the President exercise his option to veto the bill.

It is critical that Congress complete action on this legislation and express its substantive opposition to the repugnant policy of apartheid in South Africa. The distinguished aspect of the rule is that, upon its adoption, the House will agree to an important provision which says that nothing contained in H.R. 4868 shall be deemed to, in any way, limit, preempt, or affect actions taken by State or local governments regarding financial or commercial dealing with South Africa.

That is the proper position for the Congress to take. The fact is that a number of local jurisdictions, including and especially my home city of New York, have passed their own laws calling for the divestment of pension funds invested in companies doing business in South Africa. That is responsible action and it must be encouraged to continue.

If the United States is going to make an impact in putting an end to apartheid in South Africa, it must do more than merely express moral indignation. It must exercise economic muscle to extract change. This cannot be done unless all levels of government are allowed to participate. Therefore, I urge support of the rule.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the rule. The clarifying language that the rule includes is critical to establishing legislative history on this issue.

It is not the intent of this bill to preempt or affect in any fashion the authority of any State or local government to restrict or otherwise regulate any financial or commercial activity with respect to South Africa.

About 20 States and 80 cities have taken the lead in passing divestiture laws, including my State—the State of California. We are not here to preempt State and municipal laws on divestiture or contracts, nor are we giving them the right to dictate foreign policy. We should not preempt the rights of States like the State of California to determine where to invest $13 billion of their pension or public funds. It is not the jurisdictional purpose of this bill to intrude or intervene in the internal affairs or a State or local government.

Mr. Speaker, there is a deepening crisis in South Africa and it is time to respond to the unambiguous appeals of thousands of South Africa's black majority who are pleading for us to take a stronger stand. It is time to take a stand and answer the calls of thousands of Americans who urge emphatically for sanctions against South Africa.

I believe H.R. 4868 may not go far enough, but it is a beginning and a new direction in our foreign policy in South Africa. More importantly, it is time we demonstrated our commitment to the principles of freedom and democracy not only in South Africa, but throughout the world.

The Senate bill is silent on th question of the preemption issue, but I strongly believe our rule clarifies this issue and establishes legislative history. I encourage my colleagues to support this rule.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, just to make it very clear what the rule actually does in its second section on preemption, it is not the intent of the committee, it is not the intent of this body, to pass any legislation which grants any new constitutional authority. It is merely our intent to make it clear that this legislation does not impact upon authority that States and local governments already have. If the State of California has the right to pass legislation affecting their own funds in regard to the situation in South Africa, then they continue to have that authority. If the State of Pennsylvania has the authority, then they continue to have that authority.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHEAT. No; I will not yield at this time.

If the University of Mississippi system has that authority, then they will continue to have that authority, and this legislation has no impact upon the legal or constitutional authority of any State or local municipality.

The gentleman has asked some very good questions about what will happen in South Africa, and admittedly this bill cannot guarantee peace in South Africa. This bill does not guarantee an end to apartheid in South Africa, but it does guarantee one thing, that the rest to the world, especially those suffering in South Africa, will know that this Congress witnessed the evil and would not turn away.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DANIEL). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 292, nays 92, not voting 47, as follows:

[Roll No. 380]

□ 1045

Messrs. DICKINSON, GINGRICH, PACKARD, and RALPH M. HALL changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. FRENZEL changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

□ 1055

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the resolution just adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. DANIEL). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ECKERT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to learn this morning that the RECORD lists me as not voting on final passage of the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986 last evening. That is not accurate. It must be a mechanical mishap.

I was present in the Chamber, cast a vote in the affirmative and voted not only on final passage but on all bills yesterday. I would like the RECORD to reflect my statement, and I ask unanimous consent that these remarks be recorded in the permanent RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, last night during final passage of the omnibus drug bill of 1986, I was standing next to the gentleman from New York, Mr. FRED ECKERT, when the vote was taken. I saw the gentleman take his voting card out and cast his vote on final passage.

I know from my personal conversation during the vote that he had voted "yes."

I learned this morning that the RECORD showed that he had not voted. That is not accurate; he was present; he did vote; I was a witness to that.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my remarks be recorded in the permanent RECORD immediately following the vote on the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON FISHERIES AND WILDLIFE CONSERVATION AND THE ENVIRONMENT AND SUBCOMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE OF THE COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES TO SIT ON WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1986, DURING THE 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries' Subcommittee on Fisheries and Wildlife Conservation and the Environment, in conjunction with the Subcommitte on Merchant Marine, and by itself, have permission to sit during the consideration of legislation under the 5-minute rule on Wednesday, September 17, 1986.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

ANTI-APARTHEID ACT OF 1986

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 548, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 4868) to prohibit loans to, other investments in, and certain other activities with respect to, South Africa, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 548, the Senate amendment is considered as having been read.

The text of the Senate amendment is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. As used in this Act—

(1) the term "Code of Conduct" refers to the principles set forth in section 208(a);

(2) the term "controlled South African entity" means—

(A) a corporation, partnership, or other business association or entity organized in South Africa and owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by a national of the United States; or

(B) a branch, office, agency, or sole proprietorship in South Africa of a national of the United States;

(3) the term "loan"—

(A) means any transfer or extension of funds or credit on the basis of an obligation to repay, or any assumption or guarantee of the obligation of another to repay an extension of funds or credit, including—

(i) overdrafts,

(ii) currency swaps,

(iii) the purchase of debt or equity securities issued by the Government of South Africa or a South African entity on or after the date of enactment of this Act,

(iv) the purchase of a loan made by another person,

(v) the sale of financial assets subject to an agreement to repurchase, and

(vi) a renewal or refinancing whereby funds or credits are transferred or extended to the Government of South Africa or a South African entity, and

(B) does not include—

(i) normal short-term trade financing, as by letters of credit or similar trade credits;

(ii) sales on open account in cases where such sales are normal business practice; or

(iii) rescheduling of existing loans, if no new funds or credits are thereby extended to a South African entity or the Government of South Africa;

(4) the term "new investment"—

(A) means—

(i) a commitment or contribution of funds or other assets, and

(ii) a loan or other extension of credit, and

(B) does not include—

(i) the reinvestment of profits generated by a controlled South African entity into that same controlled South African entity or the investment of such profits in a South African entity;

(ii) contributions of money or other assets where such contributions are necessary to enable a controlled South African entity to operate in an economically sound manner, without expanding its operations; or

(iii) the ownership or control of a share or interest in a South African entity or a controlled South African entity or a debt or equity security issued by the Government of South Africa or a South African entity before the date of enactment of this Act, or the transfer or acquisition of such a share, interest, or debt or equity security, if any such transfer or acquisition does not result in a payment, contribution of funds or assets, or credit to a South African entity, a controlled South African entity, or the Government of South Africa;

(5) the term "national of the United States" means—

(A) a natural person who is a citizen of the United States or who owes permanent allegiance to the United States or is an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence in the United States, as defined by section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)); or

(B) a corporation, partnership, or other business association which is organized under the laws of the United States, any State or territory thereof, or the District of Columbia;

(6) the term "South Africa" includes—

(A) the Republic of South Africa;

(B) any territory under the Administration, legal or illegal, of South Africa; and

(C) the "bantustans" or "homelands", to which South African blacks are assigned on the basis of ethnic origin, including the Transkei, Bophuthatswana Ciskei, and Venda; and

(7) the term "South African entity" means—

(A) a corporation, partnership, or other business association or entity organized in South Africa; or

(B) a branch, office, agency, or sole proprietorship in South Africa of a person that resides or is organized outside South Africa; and

(8) the term "United States" includes the States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.

PURPOSE

SEC. 4. The purpose of this Act is to set forth a comprehensive and complete framework to guide the efforts of the United States in helping to bring an end to apartheid in South Africa and lead to the establishment of a nonracial, democratic form of government. This Act sets out United States policy toward the Government of South Africa, the victims of apartheid, and the other states in southern Africa. It also provides the President with additional authority to work with the other industrial democracies to help end apartheid and establish democracy in South Africa.

TITLE I—POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES WITH RESPECT TO ENDING APARTHEID

POLICY TOWARD THE GOVERNMENT OF SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 101. (a) United States policy toward the Government of South Africa shall be designed to bring about reforms in that system of government that will lead to the establishment of a nonracial democracy.

(b) The United States will work toward this goal by encouraging the Government of South Africa to—

(1) repeal the present state of emergency and respect the principle of equal justice under law for citizens of all races;

(2) release Nelson Mandela, Govan Mbeki, Walter Sisulu, black trade union leaders, and all political prisoners;

(3) permit the free exercise by South Africans of all races of the right to form political parties, express political opinions, and otherwise participate in the political process;

(4) establish a timetable for the elimination of apartheid laws;

(5) negotiate with representatives of all racial groups in South Africa the future political system in South Africa; and

(6) end military and paramilitary activities aimed at neighboring states.

(c) The United States will encourage the actions set forth in subsection (b) through economic, political, and diplomatic measures as set forth in this Act. The United States will adjust its actions toward the Government of South Africa to reflect the progress or lack of progress made by the Government of South Africa in meeting the goal set forth in subsection (a).

POLICY TOWARD THE AFRICAN NATIONAL CONGRESS, ETC.

SEC. 102. (a) United States policy toward the African National Congress, the Pan African Congress, and their affiliates shall be designed to bring about a suspension of violence that will lead to the start of negotiations designed to bring about a nonracial and genuine democracy in South Africa.

(b) The United States shall work toward this goal by encouraging the African National Congress and the Pan African Congress, and their affiliates, to—

(1) suspend terrorist activities so that negotiations with the Government of South Africa and other groups representing black South Africans will be possible;

(2) make known their commitment to a free and democratic post-apartheid South Africa;

(3) agree to enter into negotiations with the South African Government and other groups representing black South Africans for the peaceful solution of the problems of South Africa;

(4) reexamine their ties to the South African Communist Party.

(c) The United States will encourage the actions set forth in subsection (b) through political and diplomatic measures. The United States will adjust its actions toward the Government of South Africa not only to reflect progress or lack of progress made by the Government of South Africa in meeting the goal set forth in subsection 101(a) but also to reflect progress or lack of progress made by the ANC and other organizations in meeting the goal set forth in subsection (a) of this section.

POLICY TOWARD THE VICTIMS OF APARTHEID

SEC. 103. (a) The United States policy toward the victims of apartheid is to use economic, political, diplomatic, and other effective means to achieve the removal of the root cause of their victimization, which is the apartheid system. In anticipation of the removal of the system of apartheid and as a further means of challenging that system, it is the policy of the United States to assist these victims of apartheid as individuals and through organizations to overcome the handicaps imposed on them by the system of apartheid and to help prepare them for their rightful roles as full participants in the political, social, economic, and intellectual life of their country in the post-apartheid South Africa envisioned by this Act.

(b) The United States will work toward the purposes of subsection (a) by—

(1) providing assistance to South African victims of apartheid without discrimination by race, color, sex, religious belief, or political orientation, to take advantage of educational opportunities in South Africa and in the United States to prepare for leadership positions in a post-apartheid South Africa;

(2) assisting victims of apartheid;

(3) aiding individuals or groups in South Africa whose goals are to aid victims of apartheid or foster nonviolent legal or political challenges to the apartheid laws;

(4) furnishing direct financial assistance to those whose nonviolent activities had led to their arrest or detention by the South African authorities and (B) to the families of those killed by terrorist acts such as "necklacings";

(5) intervening at the highest political levels in South Africa to express the strong desire of the United States to see the development in South Africa of a nonracial democratic society;

(6) supporting the rights of the victims of apartheid through political, economic, or other sanctions in the event the Government of South Africa fails to make progress toward the removal of the apartheid laws and the establishment of such democracy; and

(7) supporting the rights of all Africans to be free of terrorist attacks by setting a time limit after which the United States will pursue diplomatic and political measures against those promoting terrorism and against those countries harboring such groups so as to achieve the objectives of this Act.

POLICY TOWARD OTHER COUNTRIES IN SOUTHERN AFRICA

SEC. 104. (a) The United States policy toward the other countries in the Southern African region shall be designed to encourage democratic forms of government, full respect for human rights, an end to cross-border terrorism, political independence, and economic development.

(b) The United States will work toward the purposes of subsection (a) by—

(1) helping to secure the independence of Namibia and the establishment of Namibia as a nonracial democracy in accordance with appropriate United Nations Security Council resolutions;

(2) supporting the removal of all foreign military forces from the region;

(3) encouraging the nations of the region to settle differences through peaceful means;

(4) promoting economic development through bilateral and multilateral economic assistance targeted at increasing opportunities in the productive sectors of national economies, with a particular emphasis on increasing opportunities for nongovernmental economic activities;

(5) encouraging, and when necessary, strongly demanding, that all countries of the region respect the human rights of their citizens and noncitizens residing in the country, and especially the release of persons persecuted for their political beliefs or detained without trial;

(6) encouraging, and when necessary, strongly demanding that all countries of the region take effective action to end cross-border terrorism; and

(7) providing appropriate assistance, within the limitations of American responsibilities at home and in other regions, to assist regional economic cooperation and the development of interregional transportation and other capital facilities necessary for economic growth.

POLICY TOWARD "FRONTLINE" STATES

SEC. 105. It is the sense of the Congress that the President should discuss with the governments of the African "frontline" states the effects on them of disruptions in transportation or other economic links through South Africa and of means of reducing those effects.

POLICY TOWARD A NEGOTIATED SETTLEMENT

SEC. 106. (a)(1) United States policy will seek to promote negotiations among representatives of all citizens of South Africa to determine a future political system that would permit all citizens to be full participants in the governance of their country. The United States recognizes that important and legitimate political parties in South Africa include several organizations that have been banned and will work for the unbanning of such organizations in order to permit legitimate political viewpoints to be represented at such negotiations. The United States also recognizes that some of the organizations fighting apartheid have become infiltrated by Communists and that Communists serve on the governing boards of such organizations.

(2) To this end, it is the sense of the Congress that the President, the Secretary of State, or other appropriate high-level United States officials should meet with the leaders of opposition organizations of South Africa, particularly but not limited to those organizations representing the black majority. Furthermore, the President, in concert with the major allies of the United States and other interested parties, should seek to bring together opposition political leaders with leaders of the Government of South Africa for the purpose of negotiations to achieve a transition to the postapartheid democracy envisioned in this Act.

(b) The United States will encourage the Government of South Africa and all participants to the negotiations to respect the right of all South Africans to form political parties, express political opinions, and otherwise participate in the political process without fear of retribution by either governmental or nongovernmental organizations. It is the sense of the Congress that a suspension of violence is an essential precondition for the holding of negotiations. The United States calls upon all parties to the conflict to agree to a suspension of violence.

(c) The United States will work toward the achievement of agreement to suspend violence and begin negotiations through coordinated actions with the major Western allies and with the governments of the countries in the region.

(d) It is the sense of the Congress that the achievement of an agreement for negotiations could be promoted if the United States and its major allies, such as Great Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, and West Germany, would hold a meeting to develop a four-point plan to discuss with the Government of South Africa a proposal for stages of multilateral assistance to South Africa in return for the Government of South Africa implementing—

(1) an end to the state of emergency and the release of the political prisoners, including Nelson Mandela;

(2) the unbanning of the African National Congress, the Pan African Congress, the Black Consciousness Movement, and all other groups willing to suspend terrorism and to participate in negotiations and a democratic process;

(3) a revocation of the Group Areas Act and the Population Registration Act and the granting of universal citizenship to all South Africans, including homeland residents; and

(4) the use of the international offices of a third party as an intermediary to bring about negotiations with the object of the establishment of power-sharing with the black majority.

POLICY TOWARD INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION ON MEASURES TO END APARTHEID

SEC. 107. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) international cooperation is a prerequisite to an effective anti-apartheid policy and to the suspension of terrorism in South Africa; and

(2) the situation in South Africa constitutes an emergency in international relations and that action is necessary for the protection of the essential security interests of the United States.

(b) Accordingly, the Congress urges the President to seek such cooperation among all individuals, groups, and nations.

POLICY TOWARD NECKLACING

SEC. 108. It is the sense of the Congress that the African National Congress should strongly condemn and take effective actions against the execution by fire, commonly known as "necklacing", of any person in any country.

UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR TO MEET WITH NELSON MANDELA

SEC. 109. It is the sense of the Senate that the United States Ambassador should promptly make a formal request to the South African Government for the United States Ambassador to meet with Nelson Mandela.

POLICY TOWARD THE RECRUITMENT AND TRAINING OF BLACK SOUTH AFRICANS BY UNITED STATES EMPLOYERS

SEC. 110. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the policy of apartheid is abhorrent and morally repugnant;

(2) the United States believes strongly in the principles of democracy and individual freedoms;

(3) the United States endorses the policy of political participation of all citizens;

(4) a free, open, and vital economy is a primary means for achieving social equality and economic advancement for all citizens; and

(5) the United States is committed to a policy of securing and enhancing human rights and individual dignity throughout the world.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that United States employers operating in South Africa are obliged both generally to actively oppose the policy and practices of apartheid and specifically to engage in recruitment and training of black and colored South Africans for management responsibilities.

TITLE II—MEASURES TO ASSIST VICTIMS OF APARTHEID

SCHOLARSHIPS FOR THE VICTIMS OF APARTHEID

SEC. 201. (a) Section 105(b) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(b)"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A)(i) Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section for the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989, not less than $4,000,000 shall be used in each such fiscal year to finance education, training, and scholarships for the victims of apartheid, including teachers and other educational professionals, who are attending universities and colleges in South Africa. Amounts available to carry out this subparagraph shall be provided in accordance with the provisions of section 802(c) of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985.

"(ii) Funds made available for each such fiscal year for purposes of chapter 4 of part II of this Act may be used to finance such education, training, and scholarships in lieu of an equal amount made available under this subparagraph.

"(B)(i) In addition to amounts used for purposes of subparagraph (A), the agency primarily responsible for administering this part, in collaboration with other appropriate departments or agencies of the United States, shall use assistance provided under this section or chapter 4 of part II of this Act to finance scholarships for students pursuing secondary school education in South Africa. The selection of scholarship recipients shall be by a nationwide panel or by regional panels appointed by the United States chief of diplomatic mission to South Africa.

"(ii) Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section and chapter 4 of part II of this Act for the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989, up to an aggregate of $1,000,000 may be used in each such fiscal year for purposes of this subparagraph.

"(C)(i) In addition to the assistance authorized in subparagraph (A), the agency primarily responsible for administering this part shall provide assistance for inservice teacher training programs in South Africa through such nongovernmental organizations as TOPS or teachers' unions.

"(ii) Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section and chapter 4 of part II of this Act, up to an aggregate of $500,000 for the fiscal year 1987 and up to an aggregate of $1,000,000 for the fiscal year 1988 may be used for purposes of this subparagraph, subject to standard procedures for project review and approval.".

(b) The Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 is amended by inserting after section 116 the following new section:

"SEC. 117. ASSISTANCE FOR DISADVANTAGED SOUTH AFRICANS.—In providing assistance under this chapter or under chapter 4 of part II of this Act for disadvantaged South Africans, priority shall be given to working with and through South African nongovernmental organizations whose leadership and staff are selected on a nonracial basis, and which have the support of the disadvantaged communities being served. The measure of this community support shall be the willingness of a substantial number of disadvantaged persons to participate in activities sponsored by these organizations. Such organizations to which such assistance may be provided include the Educational Opportunities Council, the South African Institute of Race Relations, READ, professional teachers' unions, the Outreach Program of the University of the Western Cape, the Funda Center in Soweto, SACHED, UPP Trust, TOPS, the Wilgespruit Fellowship Center (WFC), and civic and other organizations working at the community level which do not receive funds from the Government of South Africa.".

HUMAN RIGHTS FUND

SEC. 202. (a) Section 116(e)(2)(A) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 is amended—

(1) by striking out "1984 and" and inserting in lieu thereof "1984,"; and

(2) by inserting after "1985" a comma and the following: "and $1,500,000 for the fiscal year 1986 and for each fiscal year thereafter".

(b) Section 116 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) Of the funds made available to carry out subsection (e)(2)(A) for each fiscal year, not less than $500,000 shall be used for direct legal and other assistance to political detainees and prisoners and their families, including the investigation of the killing of protesters and prisoners, and for support for actions of black-led community organizations to resist, through nonviolent means, the enforcement of apartheid policies such as—

"(A) removal of black populations from certain geographic areas on account of race or ethnic origin,

"(B) denationalization of blacks, including any distinctions between the South African citizenships of blacks and whites,

"(C) residence restrictions based on race or ethnic origin,

"(D) restrictions on the rights of blacks to seek employment in South Africa and to live wherever they find employment in South Africa, and

"(E) restrictions which make it impossible for black employees and their families to be housed in family accommodations near their place of employment.

"(2)(A) No grant under this subsection may exceed $100,000.

"(B) The average of all grants under this paragraph made in any fiscal year shall not exceed $70,000.

"(g) Of the funds made available to carry out subsection (e)(2)(A) for each fiscal year, $175,000 shall be used for direct assistance to families of victims of violence such as 'necklacing' and other such inhumane acts. An additional $175,000 shall be made available to black groups in South Africa which are actively working toward a multi-racial solution to the sharing of political power in that country through nonviolent, constructive means.".

EXPANDING PARTICIPATION IN THE SOUTH AFRICAN ECONOMY

SEC. 203. (a) The Congress declares that—

(1) the denial under the apartheid laws of South Africa of the rights of South African blacks and other nonwhites to have the opportunity to participate equitably in the South African economy as managers or owners of, or professionals in, business enterprises, and

(2) the policy of confining South African blacks and other nonwhites to the status of employees in minority-dominated businesses, is an affront to the values of a free society.

(b) The Congress hereby—

(1) applauds the commitment of nationals of the United States adhering to the Code of Conduct to assure that South African blacks and other nonwhites are given assistance in gaining their rightful place in the South African economy; and

(2) urges the United States Government to assist in all appropriate ways the realization by South African blacks and other nonwhites of their rightful place in the South African economy.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of State and any other head of a department or agency of the United States carrying out activities in South Africa shall, to the maximum extent practicable, in procuring goods or services, make affirmative efforts to assist business enterprises having more than 50 percent beneficial ownership by South African blacks or other nonwhite South Africans.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF THE UNITED STATES

SEC. 204. Section 2(b)(9) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 is amended—

(1) by striking out "(9) In" and inserting in lieu thereof "(9)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), in"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(B) The Bank shall take active steps to encourage the use of its facilities to guarantee, insure, extend credit, or participate in the extension of credit to business enterprises in South Africa that are majority owned by South African blacks or other nonwhite South Africans. The certification requirement contained in clause (c) of subparagraph (A) shall not apply to exports to or purchases from business enterprises which are majority owned by South African blacks or other nonwhite South Africans.".

LABOR PRACTICES OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT IN SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 205. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that the labor practices used by the United States Government—

(1) for the direct hire of South Africans,

(2) for the reimbursement out of official residence funds of South Africans and employees of South African organizations for their long-term employment services on behalf of the United States Government, and

(3) for the employment services of South Africans arranged by contract, should represent the best of labor practices in the United States and should serve as a model for the labor practices of nationals of the United States in South Africa.

(b) The Secretary of State and any other head of a department or agency of the United States carrying out activities in South Africa shall promptly take, without regard to any provision of law, the necessary steps to ensure that the labor practices applied to the employment services described in paragraphs (1) through (3) of subsection (a) are governed by the Code of Conduct. Nothing in this section shall be construed to grant any employee of the United States the right to strike.

WELFARE AND PROTECTION OF VICTIMS OF APARTHEID BY THE UNITED STATES

SEC. 206. (a) The Secretary of State shall acquire, through lease or purchase, residential properties in the Republic of South Africa that shall be made available, at rents that are equitable, to assist victims of apartheid who are employees of the United States Government in obtaining adequate housing. Such properties shall be acquired only in neighborhoods which would be open to occupancy by other employees of the United States Government in South Africa.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987 to carry out the purposes of this section.

EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES OF UNITED STATES NATIONALS IN SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 207. (a) Any national of the United States that employs more than 25 persons in South Africa shall take the necessary steps to insure that the Code of Conduct is implemented.

(b) No department or agency of the United States may intercede with any foreign government or foreign national regarding the export marketing activities in any country of any national of the United States employing more than 25 persons in South Africa that is not implementing the Code of Conduct.

CODE OF CONDUCT

SEC. 208. (a) The Code of Conduct referred to in sections 203, 205, 207, and 603 of this Act is as follows:

(1) desegregating the races in each employment facility;

(2) providing equal employment opportunity for all employees without regard to race or ethnic origin;

(3) assuring that the pay system is applied to all employees without regard to race or ethnic origin;

(4) establishing a minimum wage and salary structure based on the appropriate local minimum economic level which takes into account the needs of employees and their families;

(5) increasing by appropriate means the number of persons in managerial, supervisory, administrative, clerical, and technical jobs who are disadvantaged by the apartheid system for the purpose of significantly increasing their representation in such jobs;

(6) taking reasonable steps to improve the quality of employees' lives outside the work environment with respect to housing, transportation, schooling, recreation, and health; and

(7) implementing fair labor practices by recognizing the right of all employees, regardless of racial or other distinctions, to self-organization and to form, join, or assist labor organizations, freely and without penalty or reprisal, and recognizing the right to refrain from any such activity.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that in addition to the principles enumerated in subsection (a), nationals of the United States subject to section 207 should seek to comply with the following principle: taking reasonable measures to extend the scope of influence on activities outside the workplace, including—

(1) supporting the unrestricted rights of black businesses to locate in urban areas;

(2) influencing other companies in South Africa to follow the standards of equal rights principles;

(3) supporting the freedom of mobility of black workers to seek employment opportunities wherever they exist, and make provision for adequate housing for families of employees within the proximity of workers' employment; and

(4) supporting the rescission of all apartheid laws.

(c) The President may issue additional guidelines and criteria to assist persons who are or may be subject to section 207 in complying with the principles set forth in subsection (a) of this section. The President may, upon request, give an advisory opinion to any person who is or may be subject to this section as to whether that person is subject to this section or would be considered to be in compliance with the principles set forth in subsection (a).

(d) The President may require all nationals of the United States referred to in section 207 to register with the United States Government.

(e) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President may enter into contracts with one or more private organizations or individuals to assist in implementing this section.

PROHIBITION ON ASSISTANCE

SEC. 209. No assistance may be provided under this Act to any group which maintains within its ranks any individual who has been found to engage in gross violations of internationally recognized human rights (as defined in section 502B(d)(1) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961).

USE OF THE AFRICAN EMERGENCY RESERVE

SEC. 210. Whenever the President determines that such action is necessary or appropriate to meet food shortages in southern Africa, the President is authorized to utilize the existing, authorized, and funded reserve entitled the "Emergency Reserve for African Famine Relief" to provide food assistance and transportation for that assistance.

PROHIBITION ON ASSISTANCE TO ANY PERSON OR GROUP ENGAGING IN "NECKLACING"

SEC. 211. No assistance may be provided under this Act, the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, or any other provision of law to any individual, group, organization, or member thereof, or entity that directly or indirectly engages in, advocates, supports, or approves the practice of execution by fire, commonly known as "necklacing".

PARTICIPATION OF SOUTH AFRICA IN AGRICULTURAL EXPORT CREDIT AND PROMOTION PROGRAMS

SEC. 212. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or any other provision of law, the Secretary of Agriculture may permit South Africa to participate in agricultural export credit and promotion programs conducted by the Secretary at similar levels, and under similar terms and conditions, as other countries that have traditionally purchased United States agricultural commodities and the products thereof.

TITLE III—MEASURES BY THE UNITED STATES TO UNDERMINE APARTHEID

PROHIBITION ON THE IMPORTATION OF KRUGERRANDS

SEC. 301. No person, including a bank, may import into the United States any South African krugerrand or any other gold coin minted in South Africa or offered for sale by the Government of South Africa.

PROHIBITION ON THE IMPORTATION OF MILITARY ARTICLES

SEC. 302. No arms, ammunition, or military vehicles produced in South Africa or any manufacturing data for such articles may be imported into the United States.

PROHIBITION ON THE IMPORTATION OF PRODUCTS FROM PARASTATAL ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 303. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no article which is grown, produced, manufactured by, marketed, or otherwise exported by a parastatal organization of South Africa may be imported into the United States, (1) except for agricultural products during the 12 month period from the date of enactment; and (2) except for those strategic minerals for which the President has certified to the Congress that the quantities essential for the economy or defense of the United States are unavailable from reliable and secure suppliers and except for any article to be imported pursuant to a contract entered into before August 15, 1986: Provided, That no shipments may be received by a national of the United States under such contract after April 1, 1987.

(b) For purposes of this section, the term "parastatal organization" means a corporation or partnership owned or controlled or subsidized by the Government of South Africa, but does not mean a corporation or partnership which previously received start-up assistance from the South African Industrial Development Corporation but which is now privately owned.

PROHIBITION ON COMPUTER EXPORTS TO SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 304. (a) No computers, computer software, or goods or technology intended to manufacture or service computers may be exported to or for use by any of the following entities of the Government of South Africa:

(1) The military.

(2) The police.

(3) The prison system.

(4) The national security agencies.

(5) ARMSCOR and its subsidiaries or the weapons research activities of the Council for Scientific and Industrial Research.

(6) The administering authorities for controlling the movements of the victims of apartheid.

(7) Any apartheid enforcing agency.

(8) Any local, regional, or homelands government entity which performs any function of any entity described in paragraphs (1) through (7).

(b)(1) Computers, computer software, and goods or technology intended to service computers may be exported, directly or indirectly, to or for use by an entity of the Government of South Africa other than those set forth in subsection (a) only if a system of end use verification is in effect to ensure that the computers involved will not be used for any function of any entity set forth in subsection (a).

(2) The Secretary of Commerce may prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this section.

PROHIBITION ON LOANS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 305. (a) No national of the United States may make or approve any loan or other extension of credit, directly or indirectly, to the Government of South Africa or to any corporation, partnership or other organization which is owned or controlled by the Government of South Africa.

(b) The prohibition contained in subsection (a) shall not apply to—

(1) a loan or extension of credit for any education, housing, or humanitarian benefit which—

(A) is available to all persons on a nondiscriminatory basis; or

(B) is available in a geographic area accessible to all population groups without any legal or administrative restriction; or

(2) a loan or extension of credit for which an agreement is entered into before the date of enactment of this Act.

PROHIBITION ON AIR TRANSPORTATION WITH SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 306. (a)(1) The President shall immediately notify the Government of South Africa of his intention to suspend the rights of any air carrier designated by the Government of South Africa under the Agreement Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Union of South Africa Relating to Air Services Between Their Respective Territories, signed May 23, 1947, to service the routes provided in the Agreement.

(2) Ten days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall direct the Secretary of Transportation to revoke the right of any air carrier designated by the Government of South Africa under the Agreement to provide service pursuant to the Agreement.

(3) Ten days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall direct the Secretary of Transportation not to permit or otherwise designate any United States air carrier to provide service between the United States and South Africa pursuant to the Agreement.

(b)(1) The Secretary of State shall terminate the Agreement Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Union of South Africa Relating to Air Services Between Their Respective Territories, signed May 23, 1947, in accordance with the provisions of that agreement.

(2) Upon termination of such agreement, the Secretary of Transportation shall prohibit any aircraft of a foreign air carrier owned, directly or indirectly, by the Government of South Africa or by South African nationals from engaging in air transportation with respect to the United States.

(3) The Secretary of Transportation shall prohibit the takeoff and landing in South Africa of any aircraft by an air carrier owned, directly or indirectly, or controlled by a national of the United States or by any corporation or other entity organized under the laws of the United States or of any State.

(c) The Secretary of Transportation may provide for such exceptions from the prohibition contained in subsection (a) or (b) as the Secretary considers necessary to provide for emergencies in which the safety of an aircraft or its crew or passengers is threatened.

(d) For purposes of this section, the terms "aircraft", "air transportation", and "foreign air carrier" have the meanings given those terms in section 101 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1301).

PROHIBITIONS ON NUCLEAR TRADE WITH SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 307. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

(1) the Nuclear Regulatory Commission shall not issue any license for the export to South Africa of production or utilization facilities, any source or special nuclear material or sensitive nuclear technology, or any component parts, items, or substances which the Commission has determined, pursuant to section 109b. of the Atomic Energy Act, to be especially relevant from the standpoint of export control because of their significance for nuclear explosive purposes;

(2) the Secretary of Commerce shall not issue any license for the export to South Africa of any goods or technology which have been determined, pursuant to section 309(c) of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978, to be of significance for nuclear explosive purposes for use in, or judged by the President to be likely to be diverted to, a South African production or utilization facility;

(3) the Secretary of Energy shall not, under section 57b.(2) of the Atomic Energy Act, authorize any person to engage, directly or indirectly, in the production of special nuclear material in South Africa; and

(4) no goods, technology, source or special nuclear material, facilities, components, items, or substances referred to in clauses (1) through (3) shall be approved by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission or an executive branch agency for retransfer to South Africa, unless the Secretary of State determines and certifies to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate that the Government of South Africa is a party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, done at Washington, London, and Moscow on July 1, 1968, or otherwise maintains International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards on all its peaceful nuclear activities, as defined in the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978.

(b) Nothing in this section shall preclude—

(1) any export, retransfer, or activity generally licensed or generally authorized by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission or the Department of Commerce or the Department of Energy; or

(2) assistance for the purpose of developing or applying International Atomic Energy Agency or United States bilateral safeguards, for International Atomic Energy Agency programs generally available to its member states, for reducing the use of highly enriched uranium in research or test reactors, or for other technical programs for the purpose of reducing proliferation risks, such as programs to extend the life of reactor fuel and activities envisaged by section 223 of the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982 or which are necessary for humanitarian reasons to protect the public health and safety.

(c) The prohibitions contained in subsection (a) shall not apply with respect to a particular export, retransfer, or activity, or a group of exports, retransfers, or activities, if the President determines that to apply the prohibitions would be seriously prejudicial to the achievement of United States nonproliferation objectives or would otherwise jeopardize the common defense and security of the United States and, if at least 60 days before the initial export, retransfer, or activity is carried out, the President submits to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a report setting forth that determination, together with his reasons therefor.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTH AFRICA BANK ACCOUNTS

SEC. 308. (a) A United States depository institution may not accept, receive, or hold a deposit account from the Government of South Africa or from any agency or entity owned or controlled by the Government of South Africa except for such accounts which may be authorized by the President for diplomatic or consular purposes. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term "depository institution" has the same meaning as in section 19(b)(1) of the Federal Reserve Act.

(b) The prohibition contained in subsection (a) shall take effect 45 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

PROHIBITION ON IMPORTATION OF URANIUM AND COAL FROM SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 309. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no—

(1) uranium ore,

(2) uranium oxide,

(3) coal, or

(4) textiles,

that is produced or manufactured in South Africa may be imported into the United States.

(b) This section shall take effect 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

PROHIBITION ON NEW INVESTMENT IN SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 310. (a) No national of the United States may, directly or through another person, make any new investment in South Africa.

(b) The prohibition contained in subsection (a) shall take effect 45 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) The prohibition contained in this section shall not apply to a firm owned by black South Africans.

TERMINATION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS

SEC. 311. (a) This title and sections 501(c) and 504(b) shall terminate if the Government of South Africa—

(1) releases all persons persecuted for their political beliefs or detained unduly without trial and Nelson Mandela from prison;

(2) repeals the state of emergency in effect on the date of enactment of this Act and releases all detainees held under such state of emergency;

(3) unbans democratic political parties and permits the free exercise by South Africans of all races of the right to form political parties, express political opinions, and otherwise participate in the political process;

(4) repeals the Group Areas Act and the Population Registration Act and institutes no other measures with the same purposes; and

(5) agrees to enter into good faith negotiations with truly representative members of the black majority without preconditions.

(b) The President may suspend or modify any of the measures required by this title or section 501(c) or section 504(b) thirty days after he determines, and so reports to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, that the Government of South Africa has—

(1) taken the action described in paragraph (1) of subsection (a),

(2) taken three of the four actions listed in paragraphs (2) through (5) of subsection (a), and

(3) made substantial progress toward dismantling the system of apartheid and establishing a nonracial democracy, unless the Congress enacts within such 30-day period, in accordance with section 602 of this Act, a joint resolution disapproving the determination of the President under this subsection.

(c) It is the policy of the United States to support the negotiations with the representatives of all communities as envisioned in this Act. If the South African Government agrees to enter into negotiations without preconditions, abandons unprovoked violence against its opponents, commits itself to a free and democratic post-apartheid South Africa under a code of law; and if nonetheless the African National Congress, the Pan African Congress, or their affiliates, or other organizations, refuse to participate; or if the African National Congress, the Pan African Congress or other organizations—

(1) refuse to abandon unprovoked violence during such negotiations; and

(2) refuse to commit themselves to a free and democratic post-apartheid South Africa under a code of law, then the United States will support negotiations which do not include these organizations.

POLICY TOWARD VIOLENCE OR TERRORISM

SEC. 312. (a) United States policy toward violence in South Africa shall be designed to bring about an immediate end to such violence and to promote negotiations concluding with a removal of the system of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democracy in South Africa.

(b) The United States shall work toward this goal by diplomatic and other measures designed to isolate those who promote terrorist attacks on unarmed civilians or those who provide assistance to individuals or groups promoting such activities.

(c) The Congress declares that the abhorrent practice of "necklacing" and other equally inhumane acts which have been practices in South Africa by blacks against fellow blacks are an affront to all throughout the world who value the rights of individuals to live in an atmosphere free from fear of violent reprisals.

TERMINATION OF TAX TREATY AND PROTOCOL

SEC. 313. The Secretary of State shall terminate immediately the following convention and protocol, in accordance with its terms, the Convention Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Union of South Africa for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and for Establishing Rules of Reciprocal Administrative Assistance With Respect to Taxes on Income, done at Pretoria on December 13, 1946, and the protocol relating thereto.

PROHIBITION ON UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT PROCUREMENT FROM SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 314. On or after the date of enactment of this Act, no department, agency or any other entity of the United States Government may enter into a contract for the procurement of goods or services from parastatal organizations except for items necessary for diplomatic and consular purposes.

PROHIBITION ON THE PROMOTION OF UNITED STATES TOURISM IN SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 315. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by any provision of law may be available to promote United States tourism in South Africa.

PROHIBITION ON UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO, INVESTMENT IN, OR SUBSIDY FOR TRADE WITH, SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 316. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by any provision of law may be available for any assistance to investment in, or any subsidy for trade with, South Africa, including but not limited to funding for trade missions in South Africa and for participation in exhibitions and trade fairs in South Africa.

PROHIBITION ON SALE OR EXPORT OF ITEMS ON MUNITIONS LIST

SEC. 317. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), no item contained on the United States Munition List which is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States may be exported to South Africa.

(b) Subsection (a) does not apply to any item which is not covered by the United Nations Security Council Resolution 418 of November 4, 1977, and which the President determines is exported solely for commercial purposes and not exported for use by the armed forces, police, or other security forces of South Africa or for other military use.

(c) The President shall prepare and submit to Congress every six months a report describing any license issued pursuant to subsection (b).

MUNITIONS LIST SALES, NOTIFICATION

SEC. 318. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the President shall:

(i) notify the Congress of his intent to allow the export to South Africa any item which is on the United States Munition List and which is not covered by the United Nations Security Council Resolution 418 of November 4, 1977, and

(ii) certify that such item shall be used solely for commercial purposes and not exported for use by the armed forces, police, or other security forces of South Africa or for other military use.

(b) The Congress shall have 30 calendar days of continuous session (computed as provided in section 906(b) of title 5, United States Code) to disapprove by joint resolution of any such sale.

PROHIBITION ON IMPORTATION OF SOUTH AFRICAN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND FOOD

SEC. 319. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no:

(1) agricultural commodity, product, byproduct of derivative thereof,

(2) article that is suitable for human consumption, that is a product of South Africa may be imported into the customs territory of the United States after the date of enactment of this Act.

PROHIBITION ON IMPORTATION OF IRON AND STEEL

SEC. 320. Notwithstandig any other provision of law, no iron or steel produced in South Africa may be imported into the United States.

PROHIBITION ON EXPORTS OF CRUDE OIL AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

SEC. 321. (a) No crude oil or refined petroleum product which is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States or which is exported by a person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States may be exported to South Africa.

(b) Subsection (a) does not apply to any export pursuant to a contract entered into before the date of enactment of this Act.

PROHIBITION ON COOPERATION WITH THE ARMED FORCES OF SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 322. No agency or entity of the United States may engage in any form of cooperation, direct or indirect, with the armed forces of the Government of South Africa, except activities which are reasonably designed to facilitate the collection of necessary intelligence. Each such activity shall be considered a significant anticipated intelligence activity for purposes of section 501 of the National Security Act of 1947.

PROHIBITIONS ON SUGAR IMPORTS

SEC. 323. (a)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no sugars, sirups, or molasses that are products of the Republic of South Africa may be imported into the United States after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) The aggregate quantity of sugars, sirups, and molasses that—

(A) are products of the Philippines, and

(B) may be imported into the United States (determined without regard to this paragraph) under any limitation imposed by law on the quantity of all sugars, sirups, and molasses that may be imported into the United States during any period of time occurring after the date of enactment of this Act, shall be increased by the aggregate quantity of sugars, sirups, and molasses that are products of the Republic of South Africa which may have been imported into the United States under such limitation during such period if this section did not apply to such period.

(b)(1) Paragraph (c)(i) of headnote 3 of subpart A of part 10 of schedule 1 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States is amended—

(A) by striking out "13.5" in the item relating to the Philippines in the table and inserting in lieu thereof "15.8", and

(B) by striking out the item relating to the Republic of South Africa in the table.

(2) Paragraph (c) of headnote 3 of subpart A of part 10 of schedule 1 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(iii) Notwithstanding any authority given to the United States Trade Representative under paragraphs (e) and (g) of this headnote—

"(A) the percentage allocation made to the Philippines under this paragraph may not be reduced, and

"(B) no allocation may be made to the Republic of South Africa, in allocating any limitation imposed under any paragraph of this headnote on the quantity of sugars, sirups, and molasses described in items 155.20 and 155.30 which may be entered.".

TITLE IV—MULTILATERAL MEASURES TO UNDERMINE APARTHEID

NEGOTIATING AUTHORITY

SEC. 401. (a) It is the policy of the United States to seek international cooperative agreements with the other industrialized democracies to bring about the complete dismantling of apartheid. Sanctions imposed under such agreements should be both direct and official executive or legislative acts of governments. The net economic effect of such cooperative should be measurably greater than the net economic effect of the measures imposed by this Act.

(b)(1) Negotiations to reach international cooperative arrangements with the other industrialized democracies and other trading partners of South Africa on measures to bring about the complete dismantling of apartheid should begin promptly and should be concluded not later than 180 days from the enactment of this Act. During this period, the President or, at his direction, the Secretary of State should convene an international conference of the other industrialized democracies in order to reach cooperative agreements to impose sanctions against South Africa to bring about the complete dismantling of apartheid.

(2) The President shall, not less than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, submit to the Congress a report containing—

(A) a description of United States efforts to negotiate multilateral measures to bring about the complete dismantling of apartheid; and

(B) a detailed description of economic and other measures adopted by the other industrialized countries to bring about the complete dismantling of apartheid, including an assessment of the stringency with which such measures are enforced by those countries.

(c) If the President successfully concludes an international agreement described in subsection (b)(1), he may, after such agreement enters into force with respect to the United States, adjust, modify, or otherwise amend the measures imposed under any provision of sections 301 through 310 to conform with such agreement.

(d) Each agreement submitted to the Congress under this subsection shall enter into force with respect to the United States if (and only if)—

(1) the President, not less than 30 days before the day on which he enters into such agreement, notifies the House of Representatives and the Senate of his intention to enter into such an agreement, and promptly thereafter publishes notice of such intention in the Federal Register;

(2) after entering into the agreement, the President transmits to the House of Representatives and to the Senate a document containing a copy of the final legal text of such agreement, together with—

(A) a description of any administrative action proposed to implement such agreement and an explanation as to how the proposed administrative action would change or affect existing law, and

(B) a statement of his reasons as to how the agreement serves the interest of United States foreign policy and as to why the proposed administrative action is required or appropriate to carry out the agreement; and

(3) a joint resolution approving such agreement has been enacted within 30 days of transmittal of such document to the Congress.

(e) It is the sense of the Congress that the President should instruct the Permanent Representative of the United States to the United Nations to propose that the United Nations Security Council, pursuant to Article 41 of the United Nations Charter, impose measures against South Africa of the same type as are imposed by this Act.

LIMITATION ON IMPORTS FROM OTHER COUNTRIES

SEC. 402. The President is authorized to limit the importation into the United States of any product or service of a foreign country to the extent to which such foreign country benefits from, or otherwise takes commercial advantage of, any sanction or prohibition against any national of the United States imposed by or under this Act.

PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION

SEC. 403. (a) Any national of the United States who is required by this Act to terminate or curtail business activities in South Africa may bring a civil action for damages against any person, partnership, or corporation that takes commercial advantage or otherwise benefits from such termination or curtailment.

(b) The action described in subsection (a) may only be brought, without respect to the amount in controversy, in the United States district court for the District of Columbia or the Court of International Trade. Damages which may be recovered include lost profits and the cost of bringing the action, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

(c) The injured party must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the damages have been the direct result of defendant's action taken with the deliberate intent to injure the party.

TITLE V—FUTURE POLICY TOWARD SOUTH AFRICA

ADDITIONAL MEASURES

SEC. 501. (a) It shall be the policy of the United States to impose additional measures against the Government of South Africa if substantial progress has not been made within twelve months of the date of enactment of this Act in ending the system of apartheid and establishing a nonracial democracy.

(b) The President shall prepare and transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate within twelve months of the date of enactment of this Act, and every twelve months thereafter, a report on the extent to which significant progress has been made toward ending the system of apartheid, including—

(1) an assessment of the extent to which the Government of South Africa has taken the steps set forth in section 101(b) of this Act;

(2) an analysis of any other actions taken by the Government of South Africa in ending the system of apartheid and moving toward a nonracial democracy; and

(3) the progress, or lack of progress, made in reaching a negotiated settlement to the conflict in South Africa.

(c) If the President determines that significant progress has not been made by the Government of South Africa in ending the system of apartheid and establishing a nonracial democracy, the President shall include in the report required by subsection (b) a recommendation on which of the following additional measures should be imposed:

(1) a prohibition on the importation of steel from South Africa;

(2) a prohibition on military assistance to those countries that the report required by section 508 identifies as continuing to circumvent the international embargo on arms and military technology to South Africa;

(3) a prohibition on the importation of food, agricultural products, diamonds, and textiles from South Africa;

(4) a prohibition on United States banks accepting, receiving, or holding deposit accounts from South African nationals; and

(5) a prohibition on the importation into the United States of strategic minerals from South Africa.

(d) A joint resolution which would enact part or all of the measures recommended by the President pursuant to subsection (c) shall be considered in accordance with the provisions of section 602 of this Act.

LIFTING OF PROHIBITIONS

SEC. 502. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the President may lift any prohibition contained in this Act imposed against South Africa if the President determines, after six months from the date of the imposition of such prohibition, and so reports to Congress, that such prohibition would increase United States dependence upon any member country or observer country of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (C.M.E.A.) for the importation of coal or any strategic and critical material by an amount which exceeds by weight the average amounts of such imports from such country during the period 1981 through 1985.

(b)(1) Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Commerce shall prepare and transmit to the Congress a report setting forth for each country described in subsection (a)—

(A) the average amount of such imports from such country during the period of 1981 through 1985; and

(B) the current amount of such imports from such country entering the United States.

(2) Thirty days after transmittal of the report required by paragraph (1) and every thirty days thereafter, the President shall prepare and transmit the information described in paragraph (1)(B).

STUDY OF HEALTH CONDITIONS IN THE "HOMELANDS" AREAS OF SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 503. The Secretary of State shall conduct a study to examine the state of health conditions and to determine the extent of starvation and malnutrition now prevalent in the "homelands" areas of South Africa and shall, not later than December 1, 1986, prepare and transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a report setting forth the results of such study.

REPORT ON SOUTH AFRICAN IMPORTS

SEC. 504. (a) Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a report on the extent to which the United States is dependent on the importation from South Africa of—

(1) chromium,

(2) cobalt,

(3) manganese,

(4) platinum group metals,

(5) ferroalloys, and

(6) other strategic and critical materials (within the meaning of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act).

(b) The President shall develop a program which reduces the dependence, if any, of the United States on the importation from South Africa of the materials identified in the report submitted under subsection (a).

STUDY AND REPORT ON THE ECONOMY OF SOUTHERN AFRICA

SEC. 505. (a) The President shall conduct a study on the role of American assistance in southern Africa to determine what needs to be done, and what can be done to expand the trade, private investment, and transport prospects of southern Africa's landlocked nations.

(b) Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall prepare and transmit to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a report setting forth the findings of the study conducted under subsection (a).

REPORT ON RELATIONS BETWEEN OTHER INDUSTRIALIZED DEMOCRACIES AND SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 506. (a) Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall prepare and transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a report containing a detailed assessment of the economic and other relationships of other industrialized democracies with South Africa. Such report shall be transmitted without regard to whether or not the President successfully concluded an international agreement under section 401.

(b) For purposes of this section, the phrase "economic and other relationships" includes the same types of matters as are described in sections 201, 202, 204, 205, 206, 207, sections 301 through 307, and sections 309 and 310 of this Act.

STUDY AND REPORT ON DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS OF SOUTH AFRICAN NATIONALS IN UNITED STATES BANKS

SEC. 507. (a)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall conduct a study on the feasibility of prohibiting each depository institution from accepting, receiving, or holding a deposit account from any South African national.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term "depository institution" has the same meaning as in section 19(b)(1) of the Federal Reserve Act.

(b) Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a report detailing the findings of the study required by subsection (a).

STUDY AND REPORT ON THE VIOLATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL EMBARGO ON SALE AND EXPORT OF MILITARY ARTICLES TO SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 508. (a) The President shall conduct a study on the extent to which the international embargo on the sale and exports of arms and military technology to South Africa is being violated.

(b) Not later than 179 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a report setting forth the findings of the study required by subsection (a), including an identification of those countries engaged in such sale or export, with a view to terminating United States military assistance to those countries.

REPORT ON COMMUNIST ACTIVITIES IN SOUTH AFRICA

SEC. 509. (a) Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall prepare and transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate an unclassified version of a report, prepared with the assistance of the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, the Director of the Defense Intelligence Agency, the National Security Advisor, and other relevant United States Government officials in the intelligence community, which shall set forth the activities of the Communist Party in South Africa, the extent to which Communists have infiltrated the many black and nonwhite South African organizations engaged in the fight against the apartheid system, and the extent to which any such Communist infiltration or influence sets the policies and goals of the organizations with which they are involved.

(b) At the same time the unclassified report in subsection (a) is transmitted as set forth in that subsection, a classified version of the same report shall be transmitted to the chairmen of the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate and of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives.

PROHIBITION ON THE IMPORTATION OF SOVIET GOLD COINS

SEC. 510. (a) No person, including a bank, may import into the United States any gold coin minted in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or offered for sale by the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

(b) For purposes of this section, the term "United States" includes the States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.

(c) Any individual who violates this section or any regulations issued to carry out this section shall be fined not more than five times the value of the rubles involved.

ECONOMIC SUPPORT FOR DISADVANTAGED SOUTH AFRICANS

SEC. 511. (a) Chapter 4 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 535. ECONOMIC SUPPORT FOR DISADVANTAGED SOUTH AFRICANS.—(a)(1) Up to $40,000,000 of the funds authorized to be appropriated to carry out this chapter for the fiscal year 1987 and each fiscal year thereafter shall be available for assistance for disadvantaged South Africans. Assistance under this section shall be provided for activities that are consistent with the objective of a majority of South Africans for an end to the apartheid system and the establishment of a society based on non-racial principles. Such activities may include scholarships, assistance to promote the participation of disadvantaged South Africans in trade unions and private enterprise, alternative education and community development programs.

"(2) Up to $3,000,000 of the amounts provided in each fiscal year pursuant to subsection (a) shall be available for training programs for South Africa's trade unionists.

"(b) Assistance provided pursuant to this section shall be made available notwithstanding any other provision of law and shall not be used to provide support to organizations or groups which are financed or controlled by the Government of South Africa. Nothing in this subsection may be construed to prohibit programs which are consistent with subsection (a) and which award scholarships to students who choose to attend South African-supported institutions.".

(b) Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall prepare and transmit to the Congress a report describing the strategy of the President during the five-year period beginning on such date regarding the assistance of black Africans pursuant to section 535 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and describing the programs and projects to be funded under such section.

REPORT ON THE AFRICAN NATIONAL CONGRESS

SEC. 512. (a) Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall prepare and transmit to the Congress a report on actual and alleged violations of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, and the status of any investigation pertaining thereto, by representatives of governments or opposition movements in sub-Saharan Africa, including, but not limited to, members or representatives of the African National Congress.

(b) For purposes of conducting any investigations necessary in order to provide a full and complete report, the Attorney General shall have full authority to utilize civil investigative demand procedures, including but not limited to the issuance of civil subpenas.

TITLE VI—ENFORCEMENT AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

REGULATORY AUTHORITY

SEC. 601. The President shall issue such rules, regulations, licenses, and orders as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, including taking such steps as may be necessary to continue in effect the measures imposed by Executive Order 12532 of September 9, 1985, and Executive Order 12535 of October 1, 1985, and by any rule, regulation, license, or order issued thereunder (to the extent such measures are not inconsistent with this Act).

CONGRESSIONAL PRIORITY PROCEDURES

SEC. 602. (a)(1) The provisions of this subsection apply to the consideration in the House of Representatives of a joint resolution under sections 311(b), 401(d), and 501(d).

(2) A joint resolution shall, upon introduction, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives.

(3)(A) At any time after the joint resolution placed on the appropriate calendar has been on that calendar for a period of 5 legislative days, it is in order for any Member of the House (after consultation with the Speaker as to the most appropriate time for the consideration of that joint resolution) to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of that joint resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is in order even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to. All points of order against the joint resolution under clauses 2 and 6 of Rule XXI of the Rules of the House are waived. If the motion is agreed to, the resolution shall remain the unfinished business of the House until disposed of. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is disagreed to shall not be in order.

(B) Debate on the joint resolution shall not exceed ten hours, which shall be divided equally between a Member favoring and a Member opposing the joint resolution. A motion to limit debate is in order at any time in the House or in the Committee of the Whole and is not debatable.

(C) An amendment to the joint resolution is not in order.

(D) At the conclusion of the debate on the joint resolution, the Committee of the Whole shall rise and report the joint resolution back to the House, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution to final passage without intervening motion.

(b)(1) The provisions of this subsection apply to the consideration in the Senate of a joint resolution under section 311(b), 401(d), or 501(d).

(2) A joint resolution shall, upon introduction, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

(3) A joint resolution described in this section shall be considered in the Senate in accordance with procedures contained in paragraphs (3) through (7) of section 8066(c) of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1985 (as contained in Public Law 98-473), except that—

(A) references in such paragraphs to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate shall be deemed to be references to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate; and

(B) amendments to the joint resolution are in order.

(c) For purposes of this subsection, the term "joint resolution" means only—

(A) in the case of section 311(b), a joint resolution which is introduced in a House of Congress within 3 legislative days after the Congress receives the report described in section 311(b) and for which the matter after the resolving clause reads as follows: "That the Congress, having received on the report of the President containing the determination required by section 311(b) of the Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986, disapproves of such determination.", with the date of the receipt of the report inserted in the blank;

(B) in the case of section 401(d)(3), a joint resolution which is introduced in a House of Congress within 3 legislative days after the Congress receives the document described in section 401(d)(2) and for which the matter after the resolving clause reads as follows: "That the Congress, having received on the text of the international agreement described in section 401(d)(3) of the Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986, approves of such agreement.", with the date of the receipt of the text of the agreement inserted in the blank; and

(C) in the case of section 501(d), a joint resolution which is introduced in a House of Congress within 3 legislative days after the Congress receives the determination of the President pursuant to section 501(c) and for which the matter after the resolving clause reads as follows: "That the Congress, having received on a determination of the President under section 501(c) of the Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986, approves the President's determination.", with the date of the receipt of the determination inserted in the blank.

(d) As used in this section, the term "legislative day" means a day on which the House of Representatives or the Senate is in session, as the case may be.

(e) This section is enacted—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking powers of the House of Representatives and the Senate, and as such it is deemed a part of the Rules of the House and the Rules of the Senate, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in the House and the Senate in the case of joint resolutions under this section, and it supersedes other rules only to the extent that it is inconsistent with such rules; and

(2) with full recognition of the constitutional right of the House and the Senate to change their rules at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of the House or Senate, and of the right of the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives to report a resolution for the consideration of any measure.

ENFORCEMENT AND PENALTIES

SEC. 603. (a)(1) The President with respect to his authorities under section 601 shall take the necessary steps to ensure compliance with the provisions of this Act and any regulations, licenses, and orders issued to carry out this Act, including establishing mechanisms to monitor compliance with this Act and such regulations, licenses, and orders.

(2) In ensuring such compliance, the President may—

(A) require any person to keep a full record of, and to furnish under oath, in the form of reports or otherwise, complete information relative to any act or transaction described in this Act either before, during, or after the completion thereof, or relative to any interest in foreign property, or relative to any property in which a foreign country or any national thereof has or has had any interest, or as may be otherwise necessary to enforce the provisions of this Act; and

(B) conduct investigations, hold hearings, administer oaths, examine witnesses, receive evidence, take depositions, and require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, and documents relating to any matter under investigation.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (d)—

(1) any person that violates the provisions of this Act, or any regulation, license, or order issued to carry out this Act shall be subject to a civil penalty of $50,000;

(2) any person, other than an individual, that willfully violates the provisions of this Act, or any regulation, license, or order issued to carry out this Act shall be fined not more than $1,000,000;

(3) any individual who willfully violates the provisions of this Act or any regulation, license, or order issued to carry out this Act shall be fined not more than $50,000, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both; and

(4) any individual who violates section 301(a) or any regulations issued to carry out that section shall, instead of the penalty set forth in paragraph (2), be fined not more than 5 times the value of the krugerrands or gold coins involved.

(c)(1) Whenever a person commits a violation under subsection (b)—

(A) any officer, director, or employee of such person, or any natural person in control of such person who knowingly and willfully ordered, authorized, acquiesced in, or carried out the act or practice constituting the violation, and

(B) any agent of such person who knowingly and willfully carried out such act or practice, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(2) Paragraph (1) shall not apply in the case of a violation by an individual of section 301(a) of this Act or of any regulation issued to carry out that section.

(3) A fine imposed under paragraph (1) on an individual for an act or practice constituting a violation may not be paid, directly or indirectly, by the person committing the violation itself.

(d)(1) Any person who violates any regulation issued under section 208(d) or who, in a registration statement or report required by the Secretary of State, makes any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, shall be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 imposed by the Secretary of State. The provisions of subsections (d), (e), and (f) of section 11 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 shall apply with respect to any such civil penalty.

(2) Any person who commits a willful violation under paragraph (1) shall upon conviction be fined not more than $1,000,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both.

(3) Nothing in this section may be construed to authorize the imposition of any penalty for failure to implement the Code of Conduct.

APPLICABILITY TO EVASIONS OF ACT

SEC. 604. This Act and the regulations issued to carry out this Act shall apply to any person who undertakes or causes to be undertaken any transaction or activity with the intent to evade this Act or such regulations.

CONSTRUCTION OF ACT

SEC. 605. Nothing in this Act shall be construed as constituting any recognition by the United States of the homelands referred to in this Act.

STATE OR LOCAL ANTI-APARTHEID LAWS, ENFORCE

SEC. 606. Notwithstanding section 210 of Public Law 99-349 or any other provision of law—

(1) no reduction in the amount of funds for which a State or local government is eligible or entitled under any Federal law may be made, and

(2) no other penalty may be imposed by the Federal Government,

by reason of the application of any State or local law concerning apartheid to any contract entered into by a State or local government for 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Before the gentleman from Florida is recognized, would the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] take the chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DIXON). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the matter which I bring before the House today is intended to assist in the formulation of a bipartisan United States policy toward South Africa, encouraging that Government to dismantle its system of apartheid.

During the 99th Congress, the House has passed several bills imposing sanctions on South Africa—none have been enacted into law. By approving the motion which I offer today, we have a real opportunity to have United States policy toward South Africa enacted into law. Both Houses of Congress have recognized the need for a change in U.S. policy. The motion I offer today is intended to bring about a change in that policy.

On June 18, the House passed a strong sanctions bill, H.R. 4868. The Senate amendment to that bill, while not as strong as the House bill, is a good bill. It will send a strong bipartisan message to the Government and people of South Africa.

I know many Members would like to strengthen the bill. It is important for the Congress to send a strong message South Africa but it is equally important to send a message which has the support of both Houses. In light of the shortness of time remaining in this session and in light of the need to expedite sending this important legislative policy initiative to the President, H.R. 4868, as amended by the Senate, is the most appropriate vehicle at this time.

Let me briefly discuss the resolution contained in the rule, House Resolution 548. During the debate on this matter statements were made that this legislation preempts State and local anti-apartheid laws. The resolution House Resolution 548 simply states that it is not the intent of the House of Representatives that this bill limit or preempt State of local financial or commerical activity respecting South Africa.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the motion.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in the face of a steadily deteriorating situation at home, and an increasingly united opposition abroad, the South African Government continues to cling to the debilitating system of apartheid. Let no one claim that there is confusion on this point: The Congress, the administration, and the American people deplore the system of apartheid and the human toll that lies in its wake.

Today, the House considers whether or not to accept the Senate amendment to H.R. 4868, the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986. This amendment, of course, is substantially different from the bill passed by the House in late June. I believe it is a better bill than the more extreme legislation passed by the House. However, in my judgment, the House should have appointed conferees to work out the differences in the respective bills with our Senate colleagues. I believe that many constructive changes could have emerged from a conference.

However, the Democrat leadership in the House has apparently chosen to accept in its entirety the Senate bill.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, in fairness, there are a number of aspects of this bill before us that will, if enacted, do a great deal of good. For example, title II contains provisions earmarking funds for scholarships for the victims of apartheid. It sets forth guidelines for assistance to disadvantaged South Africans. It earmarks funds for the promotion of human rights and takes steps to encourage blacks to use Export Import Bank facilities.

In addition, it does not require disinvestment, but requires U.S. companies to comply with a rigorous set of fair employment principles.

These are positive actions that provide assistance to nonwhite South Africans while maintaining numerous benefits to the black majority associated with the presence of the American business community in that country.

In other titles, the bill clearly sets forth U.S. policy toward South Africa. It calls for negotiations to reach international agreements incorporating sanctions against South Africa. Lastly, it prohibits after 90 days, the enforcement of State and local anti-apartheid laws with respect to contracts funded in whole or in part by the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me in response to this latter point that our Democrat colleagues included in the rule we just adopted a most unusual and probably unconstitutional provision. Section 2 of the rule provides that upon adoption of H.R. 4868, the House shall be considered to have adopted a House resolution containing a statement of intent of the House regarding the issue of preemption. Mr. Speaker, this is a highly unusual and alarming procedural twist which appears to attempt to reshape the bill passed by the other body without going to conference. The language of the rule appears to try to rewrite our Constitution to allow States and localities to independently conduct their own foreign policies.

I want to conclude by saying it is unfortunate that this unusual procedural situation has developed. It can only jeopardize the bill's acceptance by the President. The White House has notified me this morning that the President is strongly opposed to enactment of this legislation in its present form.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND].

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, today we are considering legislation that will put the United States on the legislative record against the continuation of South Africa's brutal and oppressive policy of racism.

Unfortunately, the legislation before us today is not as comprehensive as the legislation passed earlier by this body on June 18, 1986, which would have put an end to all United States investment in and trade with South Africa.

South Africa is the only country in the world that judges how much freedom, justice, or property a person is entitled to strictly on the basis of his or her color. After decades of this racial oppression by the minority government in Pretoria the American public—and many in the world community—has now developed a clear and unequivocal abhorrence to the continuation of apartheid and any action, or inaction, on the part of the United States that could in any way support the maintenance of this hideous and violent policy.

There has been some difference of opinion among Members of Congress on the effect of the implementation of economic sanctions on Pretoria's continuation of apartheid. Yet there are many, and the number is steadily growing, who believe that apartheid has been allowed to exist far too long and the only nonviolent action that will help facilitate the demise of that hideous policy is the implementation of economic sanctions.

The bill before us today is an initial step to legislatively demonstrate to South Africa and the world our great Nation's strong disapproval of apartheid. Although I would have liked to see this bill strengthened in conference, I recognize the political realities and time constraints of Congress and the White House. People in South Africa are dying every day. The United States cannot morally and politically afford to support our current political and commercial relationship with South Africa. It is for this reason, that I reluctantly support this legislation which has a strong chance of becoming law soon rather than fighting now to achieve a definitive anti-apartheid bill that would not pass the other body or be signed by the President.

I was very concerned, however, over the other body's statutory silence on the question of Federal preemption over more stringent and comprehensive local and State anti-apartheid ordinances and laws already approved by about 20 States and 80 cities. Because of my concern not to negate the results achieved by millions of Americans on the local and State levels, I actively worked with other Members of the Congressional Black Caucus to ensure that the rule for consideration of this bill would explicitly state this body's intention not to preempt local and State anti-apartheid ordinances. The inclusion of this language in the rule already adopted by the House helps us establish a legislative history of our intent not to preempt the advances against apartheid made on the local and State levels. I would like to reiterate the wording of that rule at this point in my statement:

Resolved, That in passing the bill, H.R. 4868, as amended by the Senate, it is not the intent of the House of Representatives that the bill limit, preempt, or affect, in any fashion, the authority of any State or local government, or the District of Columbia, or of any commonwealth territory, or possession of the United States, or political subdivision thereof to restrict, or otherwise regulate any financial, or commercial activity respecting South Africa.

Although this does not ensure the retention of the significant gains made by Americans across our great Nation, it does allow us to go on the record stating our intention not to supersede local and State anti-apartheid ordinances and laws.

The inclusion of this language in the rule is significant in protecting the strides already made in the struggle to end apartheid.

I, therefore, rise in support of the measure before us which I am hopeful will become law soon and help accelerate the collapse of apartheid in South Africa. Thank you.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation that is before us would impose tough, effective sanctions against South Africa; sanctions which would enable American policy to turn away from the failure of so-called constructive engagement.

The bill is not as strong as the original House version, and not as strong as many of us had hoped for. While the legislation does not go as far as we would have liked, there is no quarrel that it is effective and that House passage of its original legislation, in the form of the stronger substitute offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS], has played a key role in moving this process forward to where we are today.

I want to pay tribute to the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY], the author of the original House version of the legislation, and to so many others such as Mr. SOLARZ, Mr. WHEAT, Mr. LELAND, Mr. FISH, Mr. MILLER, Mr. ROEMER, and Mr. GILMAN, all of whom have had a key role in providing the leadership to the anti-apartheid movement nationally and within this body.

H.R. 4868, as amended by the Senate, bans imports of textiles, agricultural products, coal, uranium, and steel from South Africa, as well as any products produced, manufactured, marketed, or otherwise exported by South African para-statal agencies. It bans virtually all new investment of U.S. dollars in South Africa, and the overwhelming majority of new loans.

It ends landing rights for South African-owned aircraft in the United States, and vice versa. It contains a number of lesser sanctions, including legislative codification of the sanctions contained in the President's Executive orders of September 9 and October 11 of 1985.

Furthermore, the sanctions may not be lifted unless and until South Africa meets four of five stiff conditions aimed at fostering a negotiated political settlement with the representatives of the black majority and the dismantling of the apartheid system.

Finally, the bill threatens further sanctions within a year if the South African Government has not made substantial progress in ending apartheid and establishing a nonracial democracy.

Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Africa, I want to state my own view that there is nothing whatever in this bill that seeks to preempt or supersede State and city laws and policies which seek to ensure that the funds of those entities are used and invested in a socially responsible manner with respect to apartheid. In this regard, I would like to insert in the RECORD an excellent editorial by Gerald Warburg, foreign policy adviser to Senator ALAN CRANSTON, which was published in today's Los Angeles Times:

[From the Los Angeles Times, Sept. 12, 1986]

DIVESTITURE WILL SURVIVE

(By Gerald Warburg)

Will the South Africa sanctions legislation pending in Congress undermine California's new anti-apartheid law? Can federal authority require local governments to profit from apartheid against their will?

The answer to both vexing questions is yes, according to proponents of a sweeping federal preemption doctrine recently advanced by Sen. Richard G. Lugar (R-Ind.).

The specter that enacting the pending congressional measure on anti-apartheid trade sanctions would strike down broader state divestiture legislation has alarmed grass-roots activists. At stake is the fate of as many as 20 state statutes and more than 80 city and county regulations that address the South Africa issue.

There is valid reason for concern when one hears the views of Lugar, the respected Foreign Relations Committee chairman: "When we get into anti-apartheid law, the federal government is speaking for the nation . . . we cannot have individual states and cities establishing their own foreign policies."

Lugar rests his case on the presumptive constitutional grant of federal supremacy in international affairs, and concludes that any federal legislation on South Africa—no matter how limited its scope—preempts all state legislation on the matter.

But before the activists' concern turns to panic, the full record needs to be scrutinized. There is no reason for California to back away from the strong measures adopted in Sacramento. Lugar's is a minority opinion—one unlikely to prevail if pressed in a legal challenge.

"When I use a word, it means just what I choose it to mean," says the Queen in "Alice In Wonderland." So it often is with lawmakers struggling to place their own interpretation on legislation during the drafting process. Lugar currently is advancing his own preemption thesis as a selling point to persuade the White House and corporate leaders to live with the Senate bill, which Lugar maintains would at least get local authorities off their backs on the emotionally charged South Africa issue.

Yet the "Lugar bill" actually is a cut-and-paste job of legislation drafted by a half-dozen senators. These co-authors utterly rejected Lugar's interpretation, as the following statements culled from the long and tortured legislative history of the South Africa debate illustrate.

William Proxmire of Wisconsin, senior Democrat on the Banking Committee: "We have no intention of preempting state divestment laws."

Alan Cranston of California, Democratic floor manager of the measure: "Courts always recognize the distinction between the state as market participant and the state as a market regulator . . . we have no intention of compelling sovereign states to invest in companies that they do not wish to invest in."

Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, senior Democrat on the Judiciary Committee: "The law is clear that this legislation will not preempt the kind of state and local action against apartheid that has occurred throughout this country."

Advocates of total preemption make much of a vote last month against an amendment by Sen. Alfonse M. D'Amato (R-N.Y.). But this amendment pertained only to a special contracting issue (whereby federal funds for New York City might be withheld if local authorities, acting against companies still in South Africa, ignored U.S. civil-rights and budget laws requiring acceptance of low-bid contracts). D'Amato said explicitly that this debate "had nothing to do with divestiture."

Those who wish that the federal legislation explicity preempted local divestiture have failed to win their point in the congressional debate. The only effort to legislate a total ban on state laws pertaining to South Africa, an amendment introduced by Sen. William V. Roth Jr. (R-Del.), was withdrawn in the face of very strong opposition. The final legislative product has no substantive provisions whatsoever on preemption. And it is totally silent on the divestiture issue. This it is grasping at straws to maintain, as Lugar has, that the bill "occupies the field" on all South Africa-related matters.

While Lugar is correct that the Constitution yields supremacy to Washington in conducting foreign relations, the Supreme Court has defended repeatedly the right of states to manage their own funds—even if their trusteeship involves choices affecting international affairs.

As is often the case, Washington lawmakers have followed, not led, local governments, churches and university activities in addressing the South Africa issue. The federal courts are unlikely to sustain an illogical assertion that congressional action, which imposes trade sanctions but is silent on divestiture and preemption, could force states to keep their IBM stock. Yet, because of the stir created by Lugar's assertions, proponents of sanctions will move to enact new provisions that would make the case for total preemption legally untenable.

The bottom line is that local authorities already have a clear legal right (and moral obligation) to exercise discretion in how they invest their money. While a minority may wish that the emerging federal law would immobilize grass-roots action, wishing isn't going to make it so.

There are over 19 States, 68 cities, and 10 counties whose total divestment from securities of companies with operations in South Africa already amounts to some $18.5 billion and many other States and localities are considering similar action. Among the leaders in divestment are my own home State of Michigan, New Jersey, West Virginia, Nebraska, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Mexico, and, most recently, California.

In passing their bills, they do not seek—these municipalities and State governments—to regulate the activities of other private or government entities. These bills are therefore markedly different from the bill we will be voting on today. They do not violate any express constitutional mandate, treaty, executive agreement, or with the possible exception of rules governing bidding for Federal contracts, any Federal statutes.

If anything, they are consistent in principle with the national policy toward South Africa, and apartheid, articulated in the provisions of this bill.

I would also note that in many respects, the bill now before us is very similar to the bill passed by this House last year, the first session of this Congress.

If you go back to that debate, you will note that there was not a single suggestion made in the entire course of that debate by Members of either side of this aisle that the legislation has anything to do whatsoever with an effort at preempting or superseding State and local laws.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to make a special plea to the President. Please, Mr. President, heed the overwhelming bipartisan consensus that exists in this Congress and among the American people.

We, the Congress, are saying by the passage of this legislation that we do not want America any longer to be an accomplice to apartheid. We are also saying to the South African Government that they must understand that their hope of maintaining the system of apartheid in place, their hope of preserving minority rule in South Africa, is pure fantasy.

That their delay in negotiating with the credible black leadership, their delay in freeing Nelson Mandela, and unbanning the African National Congress, and entering into direct negotiations with the ANC and other representative groups within South Africa, will meet only with increasing economic pressure and growing international isolation.

Mr. President, throughout the world, people are puzzled by how different our approach has been to South Africa and to other cases of oppression and inhumanity around the world. They see how the United States has responded in the cases of Nicaragua and Cuba and Afghanistan and Poland and Libya and by contrast that with the way we have responded in South Africa.

There is a perception that we are pursuing a double standard, and it is that perception that is eroding America's moral authority and political influence around the world.

Mr. President, do not resist this sanctions effort. Instead, please use the influence and authority of your office to reinforce the bipartisan national consensus that is being expressed by the passage of this legislation by this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

□ 1115

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this is a constructive and responsible measure. This legislation, which enjoys the overwhelming support of both Houses of the U.S. Congress, is the strongest message yet that the American people want substantial progress toward ending apartheid now. This action makes clear our position on apartheid today as it preserves our hopes for the future of democracy in South Africa.

I believe this is an appropriate message to come from the United States. As the leader in the struggle for freedom and democracy in the world, as the leader in the fight against Communist oppression, we must be vigorous in our opposition to racist and political oppression.

The worldwide yearning for freedom and self-determination demands no less of us.

I am especially pleased, Mr. Speaker, that this measure expands on the positive approach I suggested over a year ago and which was adopted by this House. That is the linking up with and supporting groups working for democracy and a peaceful end to apartheid. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, I rise today in support of the resolution before us. I would have welcomed the opportunity to go to conference to strengthen this legislation, because I believe the position taken by the House was the correct position in light of the increased oppression and tyranny of apartheid that we have seen in the last 18 months. But unfortunately, we do not have the opportunity to go to conference and yet at the same time ensure that there will be a sanctions bill that can be signed into law, and the Congress can have the opportunity to vote on whether or not to override a Presidential veto. Thus, even though I would have preferred the House position, I rise today to urge all of my colleagues to support this resolution.

I do so with mixed feelings, because many of the provisions of this resolution which were written by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the other body, a Republican, I might add, were provisions that we wrote 5 years ago: No new investment, no bank loans, fair employment practices.

Clearly the situation in South Africa has progressed far beyond where it was 5 years ago. Thus, we need a more powerful signal, a more powerful restriction of the economic fuel for the political engine of apartheid.

However, in the interest of getting sanctions passed which would clearly show to the 28,000,000 black majority that we stand with them, will clearly say to our allies we want to restrict economic activity with the racist regime and at the same time put us strategically and morally in the correct position on human rights, I urge my colleagues to support the resolution before us.

This bill will maintain pressure on South Africa. It is not designed to knock down the economy of South Africa. It is perhaps designed to knock some sense into the Botha regime and apartheid. It is not going to bring about startling change overnight, just as our sanctions against Poland, Libya, Nicaragua, Afghanistan, and 16 other nations have not brought startling change.

But what it will say to the entire world is that the American people do not want to provide economic support for apartheid. It is important that we collectively, bipartisanly say that. We were willing to light candles for those oppressed in Poland. If we pass this legislation, and if we are willing to override a veto, today, we will light a candle for those oppressed in South Africa as well. That is the position that this great democracy should have in the world.

We must not simply talk about democratic values, but we must implement them as we have done in other places in the world.

There are those who will say, "Sanctions do not work." Well, why is it we have them in 20 other countries in the world? They will say," Sanctions hurt, they hurt the very people you are trying to help." Well, interestingly they never said that in Poland, they never said it in Iran, they never said it in Afghanistan, they never said it in Kampuchea, or North Korea. So why have that as the standard in South Africa?

But more importantly, they overlook the one important fact of racism in South Africa—sanctions may hurt, but apartheid kills.

Right now, as we debate, there are people who cannot even bury their dead who have been killed by the violence of Apartheid.

So, yes, there may be some pain. Bishop Tutu has acknowledged that and Reverend Boesak has also acknowledged that.

When I was there with my colleague, Congressman FAUNTROY, and Congresswoman LYNN MARTIN from this Republican side of the aisle, in January, even the labor leaders said, "Yes, restrictions will hurt, but we are prepared to endure that hurt if it means that our day of liberation and freedom may come closer because you raise the cost of apartheid for the minority who is living off of our oppression."

So, yes, sanctions may hurt but, remember when you vote today that apartheid kills.

Therefore, I urge you to vote so that we can stand with those oppressed.

Let us pass this measure and send it to the President of the United States and then override his veto if he will not lead a bipartisan consensus of the American Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DIXON). The gentleman from Forida has 16½ minutes remaining and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] has 24 minutes remaining.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRANE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, like all people should, I abhor apartheid but I rise in opposition to this legislation, although I am certainly under no illusions about the eventual outcome of the vote we will be taking today. And I do feel compelled to make a few remarks.

That additional sanctions are going to be imposed on South Africa seems beyond doubt. But what is equally beyond reasonable doubt is the fact that sanctions can only make a bad situation even worse. Throughout the several years that Congress has debated sanctions against South Africa, not one concrete argument has been produced in support of the contention that a de facto disengagement of American involvement in South Africa holds out the promise of anything better for that country.

A recent editorial in the Wall Street Journal declared that congressional advocates of sanctions against South Africa have seemingly embraced "the strange idea that economic collapse will somehow confer unity and true democracy" in such an extremely diverse and racially divided country.

I would suggest that South Africa defies neat and easy categorization. It is a country possessing attributes of both the first world and the Third World. And the salient reality about Southern Africa as a whole is that the political, social, and economic fabric of that region is such that sanctions or punitive actions taken against South Africa will also spill over into each of the neighboring countries. And all of this will take place with no likelihood that the apartheid system will be in any significant way either changed or done away with.

A recent editorial in the Washington Post suggested that many advocates of sanctions against South Africa are only now—somewhat belatedly—coming to the realization that sanctions against one country in Southern Africa really mean sanctions against all countries in that region.

The editorial went on to make the even more ominous observation that the South African Government, for its own perverse reasons, may even welcome such pressure in order "to show it can endure Western sanctions and dish out tougher ones itself." In fact, South Africa has already started with Zimbabwe and Zambia.

South Africa has begun demonstrating just how steep the cost of sanctions can be by recently levying an import tax on all goods bound for Zimbabwe and Zambia that traverse South Africa. According to the new regulations, importers in Zimbabwe and Zambia are required to place a cash deposit equal to 125 percent of South African customs duties on all goods bound for those two countries that are being shipped via South African-controlled facilities. Over time, the enforcement of such a requirement can only have a devastating impact on the economies of those two countries.

Throughout the many congressional debates on South Africa, I have always emphasized that we must resist the temptation of dealing with South Africa purely from an attitude of malice. And so I approach this vote today with a feeling of profound regret.

We must stand ready to help the South African people achieve change in a manner that does not foreclose their future—the continent of Africa is already littered with the wreckage of too many failed revolutions and ruined economies. Unfortunately, this bill isn't the way to do it.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to speak to the intent of this bill and any report language concerning outstanding obligations and current investments.

Mr. Speaker, in defining the term "loan" and "investment" in H.R. 4868, our colleagues in the U.S. Senate gave careful thought to the real and practical effect that the imposition of sanctions would have both on South Africa and on the United States. The Senate reached two broad conclusions about the ban on new loans and new investments that are embodied in H.R. 4868: Loans outstanding to South African residents are not prohibited—nor is rescheduling of such loans—and South African business operations of United States companies, including those of United States financial institutions, are not required to be terminated or reduced at this time. These conclusions are based on the sound judgment that imposing extraordinary losses on United States creditors and investors by making them in effect write off all or most of these financial or corporate assets injures those Americans and benefits South Africa: South Africa would continue to have full use of those financial resources and enterprises.

I commend the wisdom of these provisions of the Senate bill.

One of the purposes of H.R. 4868 is to codify the provisions of the Executive orders President Reagan issued last fall with respect to South Africa. To implement those Executive orders, the Departments of Treasury, Commerce, and others issued a variety of regulations. To the greatest extent possible, those regulations should be relied upon in implementing H.R. 4868.

For example, the Executive orders and the regulations issued under them do not bar U.S. financial institutions for making rand-denominated loans to the private sector. This is permitted so long as the making of these loans do not involve any transfers of new funds by the financial institution to its South African subsidiary. This practice of redeploying local assets is fully consistent with the ban on new investment contained in this bill.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, once again the House of Representatives has the opportunity to stop an emotionally driven legislative effort that will have the unfortunate impact of hurting the very people that it is trying to help—the blacks in South Africa. While from a moral standpoint this legislation certainly has a commendable objective, the sad reality is that it will not help to bring about a peaceful change in South Africa. In fact, it is likely to do just the opposite, further adding to the unrest and violence that already plagues that country. Consequently, each of us will have to live with the fact that the black South African will suffer to pay for our moral crusade. I, for one, do not want to live with that burden.

Repeatedly during the debate on the House sanctions bill, I heard proponents of the bill claim that the blacks in South Africa are willing to suffer to bring about an end to apartheid. That is easy to say from the comfort of a Capitol Hill office, but a recent Sunday Times—London—poll of 615 blacks throughout South Africa, indicates that nearly two-thirds are opposed to suffering and violence as a means to end apartheid. Furthermore, the polls revealed the 44 percent of the blacks surveyed thought they would be hurt personally by sanctions, as opposed to only 17 percent who thought they would not be hurt. Clearly then, those who claim that the blacks are willing to suffer the consequences of our sanctions are not representing the people who will do the actual suffering.

Those factions that support unrest and violence in South Africa as a means to end apartheid are also the very ones that stand to benefit from the turmoil that would accompany the fall of the Government. My fear is that the United States will act unwisely, and as a result, we will deliver the people of South Africa to a future which promises only the tragic shackles of economic chaos, civil war, and Soviet dominated totalitarianism.

The Reverend John Gugucha, director of a private black religious outreach program in South Africa, recently warned that "one man, one vote" in South Africa would lead to totalitarianism as it has in other African nations. "We have all seen what has happened in other African states," said Mr. Gugucha. "It's one man, one vote—once. Government by the majority tribe and then the minority tribes have no snowball's chance in hell of coming to power." Without exception, no Member of this body could possibly want to be responsible for condemning all South Africans to such a bleak and hopeless future. However, economic sanctions may well do precisely that.

Mr. Speaker, over the years I have warned proponents of economic sanctions against South Africa of the likely impact of such sanctions on South Africa, the neighboring African states, and on the United States. I have repeatedly cited black leaders in South Africa, such as Lucy Mvubelo of the black National Union of Clothing Workers and Chief Buthelezi of the Zulus, who genuinely believe that economic sanctions will only add to the unrest and violence, and will ultimately do more harm than good for the blacks in that country. Today I am again raising my concerns, this time citing a liberal member of the South African Parliament as my source.

Helen Suzman was first elected to the South African Parliament in 1953. As an opposition member of parliament, she has long been an articulate and outspoken critic of the Government's policy of apartheid. Although she is morally opposed to the system of apartheid, as am I, she warns:

> Those who believe that a quick fix is likely to follow the imposition of sanctions, and that the Pretoria regime will collapse within a short time thereafter, are sadly misinformed * * *. Far more likely is a retreat into a siege economy, more oppression and more violence.

Based on this fear, Mrs. Suzman concludes:

> Unpalatable as it may seem to the sanctions lobby, the most practicable way to get rid of apartheid and to achieve a nonracial democratic society in South Africa is through an expanding, flourishing economy.

In spite of the warnings from within South Africa, by pressing forward with economic sanctions against South Africa, we will again fall victim to the arrogant philosophy that "the U.S. Government knows what is best for your country despite what you might think otherwise." In the meantime, sanctions will surely reverse the progress that the Government of South Africa has recently made. This progress can be in part attributed to the positive example set by United States firms engaged in business in South Africa.

The American firms operating in South Africa stand in the vanguard of those who promote the continued advancement of the political and economic aspirations of all South Africans. Operating under the Sullivan principles, the majority of American firms have dedicated themselves to the dismantling of apartheid and the promotion of equal rights for nonwhite South Africans. To date, American firms have spent more than $140 million adding classrooms to schools, building health centers, awarding scholarships, and otherwise assisting their black employees.

For these very reasons, and in the face of warnings from a wide array of prominent South Africans, black and white, liberal and conservative, it remains a mystery to me why United States legislators still feel a need to take the moral high ground and impose severe sanctions against South Africa. Congress should carefully evaluate the action we are about to take before we realize Reverend Gugucha's ominous prediction that:

> As soon as the American people impose sanctions, they will pat themselves on the back and turn their attention to other trouble spots in the world, and blacks in South Africa will be left to pick up the pieces.

If you really want to vote your conscience today, do not vote in favor of punitive sanctions which are sure to bring pain and suffering to the very people we are trying to help. Instead, let's work together to bring about a positive and peaceful end to apartheid in South Africa. With determination, and serious consideration as to what will be in the best interest of the people of South Africa, I am confident that we can work out a solution that we will not have to feel guilty and responsible for in the future. I urge my colleagues to oppose the Senate sanctions legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I submit for the RECORD a letter from Raymond J. Celada, senior specialist in American public law, CRS, Library of Congress.

CONGRESSIONAL RESEARCH SERVICE,
THE LIBARY OF CONGRESS,
Washington, DC, September 10, 1986.

To: House Committee on Foreign Affairs; Subcommittee on Africa. Attn: Steve Weissman.

From: American Law Division.

Subject: Preemption of State and Local Laws by Federal Legislation Respecting South Africa.

Following our conversation earlier today, I discovered that one of my colleagues, Johnny Killian, previously prepared a paper on the above subject in connection with another South Africa sanctions bill. Although it is not dispositive of the present situation, it covers in detail the major points raised during our discussion, including our conclusion regarding the importance of the scope of the eventual federal law and statements made during its consideration. Although isolated statements made by individual members in the course of debate are not given much weight by the courts in determining congressional intent, statements by the chairman of the committee which reported the legislation are considered more persuasive of legislative intent. Accordingly, in light of Chairman Lugar's remarks of August 15, 1986, supportive of across-the-board preemption, and absent any probative contrary evidence a court holding in accord with that conclusion is not an unlikely eventuality. In the circumstances as you described them to me, your only recourse at this time is to fill House consideration of the Senate bill with as many corresponding statements by the chairman and leading spokespersons on South African sanctions and hope that these prove persuasive with the courts. The latter may not tilt the balance against preemption but, given the uncertainties that mine the legal landscape, it gives you a chance, to prevail.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COATS].

Mr. COATS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill that is before us today. I think it is a sensible and workable compromise of a very difficult and divisive issue before this Congress. There is no doubt in my mind that the House version went much too far. While disinvestment may have sent the right message, it is the wrong remedy. It works against those that we are trying to help and I think for that reason alone it was good that we adopted the Senate proposal. The Senate proposal is superior because it imposes both sanctions and incentives. The incentives and sanctions work together to provide a carrot and stick approach that I think has the best chance of bringing about a workable solution to the problem that we face. The Senate version is sensible, workable, it recognizes the positive contributions that investment, United States investment in South Africa have brought toward the people of that country. The incentives provided in the legislation are directed toward those very necessary first steps that the South African Government must take to end apartheid and bring about needed reform. This carrot and stick approach is one that can pass Congress this session. It can impact positively on South African policy this year, and hopefully it is one that can bring about much-needed change in the South African Government.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS].

Mr. DELLUMS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I thank the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago to the shock and surprise of many of our colleagues in the House, millions of American people around the country and, I might add, this gentleman, the author of the amendment in the nature of a substitute, the Congress of the United States in a voice vote passed it.

This gentleman suddenly found himself in a very interesting place, the winner of the floor of the Congress on a major issue of our time.

Now I came to the floor with no illusions, Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, and my distinguished colleagues. I thought that we would achieve a significant vote, but I did not come to the floor thinking that it would win; but only coming to the floor to try to fashion a solution, not that I thought that would pass the House of Representatives, be enacted by the Congress of the United States, signed into law by the President; but a bill that I thought would do the job, that is to bring South Africa to their senses.

But lo and behold, by some extraordinary fluke my colleagues found themselves stumbling into integrity, falling into principle and finding themselves on the correct side of history.

For that I thank all of them. But we now find ourselves confronted with a piece of legislation that has some substantial difference from that piece of legislation. I did not have any thought that it would pass, but my hope was that we could move back the fear barrier. Most of us as politicians operate in an incredible atmosphere of fear: "if I take this stance, will my constituents understand? If I take this position, will I be opposed in the next election? What will this do for my future?"

So in enacting what we did, we moved back the fear barrier. Many politicians and people around the country realized that out of idealism many things could happen. I think history would look back upon this moment and they will say that even though we are not at this moment confronted with the bill that we brought, because we had no illusion about the Senate enacting it, but our hope was to force the Senate to do more than they would normally have done. History will record that we were correct. But a number of things have moved around the country, including the great State of California, a conservative Republican Governor, about the business almost at this very moment of signing into law perhaps the most significant piece of divestiture legislation ever enacted by any State in this entire United States, I think as a direct result of what the House of Representatives did when the smoke cleared and this aggressive piece of legislation had indeed passed the House.

I would like to state clearly and unequivocally, Mr. Speaker, I am not happy about the legislation that comes to the floor.

□ 1130

I am concerned about the issue of preemption. I would have liked to see us go to conference and resolve that problem. I am not happy about the definition of new loans and new investments, that even watered down the version of the bill that was an alternative when our piece of legislation passed.

So there is not a great deal in this bill.

I took the different route. I said, why do we not go to conference and fight for a stronger bill and come up with a piece of legislation whose objective not was simply to pass a piece of paper. Our objective here is not ultimately to pass legislation, but to bring down apartheid in South Africa. And that what we do ought to always be evaluated against that backdrop. And if we believe in principle and integrity, that the legislation did not do that, then we should fight for something stronger.

But that position did not fail, Mr. Speaker. My colleagues felt, and I think it is a very important view, that Mr. Botha and Pretoria should not be able to celebrate as a result of no bill coming through, so that we should keep the momentum. It is out of that consensus that we find ourselves with the Senate bill.

We have now stated the House intent on the issue of preemption, so that is to some extent satisfying. We are now moving forward with some continued momentum of the issue of sanctions that brings us to this moment.

I would like to say that in January, if it is the will of our constituency, we will be back. We will fight again for a stronger piece of legislation, not simply because our objective is to pass a piece of legislation, but to bring significant sanctions that will ultimately bring down apartheid because it is the greatest human rights issue of our time.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I am willing to see this bill go forward, not because it is a satisfactory response to one of the most terrible situations on the face of this Earth, but it is the only thing that we have at this moment, and it ought to pass to keep the momentum going forward.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe what I just heard, that apartheid is the greatest human rights violation and horrible atrocity of our time. What about communism? What about millions of people who are dying in Ethiopia as a result of communism? I do not understand why we do not talk about that once in a while, but we do not.

But apartheid is repugnant, and I am opposed to it just as your folks are. It should be changed.

But I think we are involved today in an orgy of self-righteousness that is going to hurt the very people that we purport to want to help.

Has anybody been listening? Six hundred thousand South African blacks are going to lose their jobs. They each feed a family of five. That is 3 million people who are going to be without sustenance. The African National Congress that you want to recognize is controlled by the Communists, and the Soviet Union gave them $8 million in weapons last year. They want violent revolution. Those 3 million people who will not be able to eat or survive without some kind of sustenance, a job, are going to be ripe for revolutionary talk in a very short time. We are playing right into the hands of the ANC and the South African Communist Party and the Soviet bloc.

They want South Africa because of its vital minerals, because it provides a mechanism to strangle the West. Ninety-nine percent of our manganese and 88 percent of our platinum comes from South Africa needed for industry and defense of this country, and yet we are playing right into their hands.

I talked to the Inkatha people in my office yesterday, 12 of them, and they said exactly what I just told you. Not me speaking, the people from the Zulu tribe in Inkatha, 1.3 million South African blacks. It is going to hurt them severely. It is going to hurt the very people we want to help. I do not know if anybody else was listening earlier, but it is going to hurt America, too.

We were elected to represent America. Think about that just a little bit. Ninety-nine percent of our manganese comes from there which is used for steel, which is used for automobiles, which is used for farm implements, things that are vital to industry and economic health in this country. Yet we are going to charge the American people more money for those implements, which is going to cause inflation and possibly a loss of jobs. And the only other place you can get those minerals in quantity is from, you guessed it, the Soviet Union.

What about our farmers? Did anybody hear that a while ago? Two point seven million metric tons of corn was purchased by South Africa 2 years ago. We cannot afford to lose more markets. Our farmers are in the tank right now. Yet we are going to cut off another market. The South African Government has bought more wheat this year than the Soviet Union has, and they are a cash buyer. Did you hear that?

You go home and explain that to your farmers, to your auto workers, to the people in industry, because it is going to come back to haunt us. People say they will sell us the vital minerals because the bill allows us to buy them. Only 5 percent of their exports are in those minerals. If we embargo the others, they are not going to give us those minerals, and it is going to come back to haunt the United States of America.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. SHUMWAY].

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize the fact that we have before this body this day a great policy dilemma, one that is difficult for all of us to see a clear way in, and certainly one which is difficult for all Americans. Certainly the impact of the decision made here today will have significant and far-reaching overtones, moral and political and otherwise, not just for this country but for nations around the world.

But as we deliberate this issue, I think there are some basic questions that we should keep in mind, and I would just like to suggest these to Members and perhaps we can think about them as we go through this debate.

The first is, are we giving any recognition to what appears to me to be a strong likelihood that economic sanctions will turn out to be a two-way street? That is when South Africa cuts off the sales of precious metals to the United States and those metals are available to no other country in the world except the Soviet Union. What do we do then. And can there be any question that the South Africans would not so retaliate. I think there cannot be such a question.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we should ask ourselves, do we have any understanding of the impact of sanctions on other nations in the southern African hemisphere? Now we know there are many employees of South African firms that come from Botswana, from Zimbabwe, from Zambia, from other places, even Mozambique. If our purpose is to force the collapse of that South African economy, and I do believe it is in spite of the protestations of that purpose, do we realize that it is going to take other nations down with it and the implications of those nations falling?

Third, Mr. Speaker, is there any recognition given to the progress made thus far, including the repeal of pass laws? Is there any understanding on our part of measures taken by South African businesses, both American and domestically-owned, to aid the cause of minorities, including application of the Sullivan principles?

Is there any concern about the apparent hypocrisy of our own self-righteous indignation about apartheid when we have not eliminated racism here in our own society? Or how about the irony in this congressionally suggested foreign policy of making great efforts to achieve friendly relations, for example, with Red China while bashing a long-term reliable ally, South Africa.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that these are questions we should have foremost in our minds as we embark upon this debate, and that we would serve our purpose of policy in this country far better by striving to find ways to provide economic incentives for South Africa to help that country build up its economy and provide jobs for those who need them the most and social equality for those who are entitled to it, rather than tear down that economy as this kind of policy will eventually culminate in.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHUMWAY. I yield to the gentleman from the District of Columbia.

□ 1140

Mr. FAUNTROY. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman does raise serious questions. First, it is apparent that South Africa will respond by imposing sanctions on the neighboring front line nations. The question is what do we do about it.

The gentleman, I think, does know that the diamonds, the ferro-manganese, the platinum the precious metals that South Africa sells did not stop at the line of the border of South Africa. Those precious metals are available in all the front line nations. But they cannot produce and market them around the world because of the destabilization efforts of the South African Government in bombing and murdering and destroying the trade routes which would allow them to move them out and reduce our dependency upon this racist regime alone for these precious metals.

We ought to think in terms of a supplemental program that would assist the front line nations not only in developing their trade and developing routes, but also in bringing the technology and human resources to extract from the soil those same resources which we so vitally need.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 additional seconds to the gentleman from California [Mr. SHUMWAY] to respond.

Mr. SHUMWAY. I thank the gentleman for the additional time.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's suggestion and I really think that it goes hand-in-hand with the idea that I expressed in conclusion. That is we should be seeking ways to build up our neighbors and allies in South Africa not to bash them by trying to bring ruin and devastation to their economy.

I made no reference to diamonds but I did feel very strongly about those rare metals that we do obtain from South Africa. We have heard time and again from good authority that if we do not buy them from that nation they are only available from one other source and that is a source that we do not want to trade with. I think therefore that we need to keep that particular effect of sanctions in mind as we go ahead with this debate.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ].

Mr. SOLARZ. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I doubt in the short run that this bill will bring an end to the killing in South Africa. I rather doubt that it will result in the abolition of apartheid. I rather doubt that it will lead to the release of the political prisoners in that country, and I rather doubt that it will produce negotiations between the Government of South Africa and the legitimate black leadership of the nation.

The sad truth is that the situation in South Africa is likely to get much worse before it gets much better. But what this bill will do is to make it clear that the United States is on the side of change rather than the status quo. That the United States is not prepared to continue doing business as usual with the apartheid regime in South Africa. That the United States is willing to join with the commonwealth and with the European community and with other industrialized nations around the world in applying additional economic pressure to the racist regime in Pretoria.

This bill will make it clear that the United States has finally abandoned the policy of constructive engagement and replaced it with a new policy of constructive engagement in which we make it clear by deed as well as by word that we are opposed to the apartheid regime in South Africa.

For better or for worse, rightly or wrongly, a situation now exists where our willingness to impose sanctions against South Africa has become the litmus test of the sincerity of our opposition to apartheid. Without the adoption of this legislation, our rhetorical denunciations of apartheid will ring increasingly hollow.

Furthermore, even if this bill is unlikely to facilitate real change in South Africa in the short run, its adoption is critical if apartheid is going to be abolished in the long run. In the absence of increasing internal and international pressure, the incentives for the Government of South Africa to abolish the apartheid would be de minimis. In this sense, I would recall the words of the ancient negro spiritual, "God gave Noah the rainbow sign, no more water, the fine next time."

I fear that in the absence of legislation like this the accumulated rage and resentment and repression in South Africa will produce a fire that will consume that entire country, the region in which it exists, and perhaps even the world. So I believe that the adoption of this legislation may well be the last, best hope for peaceful change in South Africa.

Those who oppose the bill say that it would hurt the very people that we want to help. I think this is a serious and significant argument. I want to say this morning that if in fact I believe that the black leadership of South Africa were opposed to this legislation, I would vote against it myself. But the fact of the matter is that virtually all of the recognized black leaders of that country are in favor of additional economic pressure against South Africa.

Nelson Mandela favors increased sanctions against South Africa, so does Oliver Tambo, so does the Bishop Tutu, so does Reverend Bosack, so does Dr. Matwana and the Committee of Ten in Soweto, and Cosato and Cusa, the two largest federations of black trade unions in South Africa which represent the overwhelming majority of organized black labor in that country are on record in favor of additional sanctions as well.

The United Democratic Front which represents 700 organizations and over 2 million blacks in South Africa is strongly in favor of increased economic pressure against the Government of South Africa. In view of the fact that the black leadership of South Africa and the black people of South Africa are asking us to impose sanctions against their government and against their country in order to facilitate the abolition of apartheid, I say that it would be politically cynical and morally presumptious for us to take the position that we know what is in the best interests of the black people of South Africa better than they do themselves.

I say that by voting for this legislation we will be keeping faith with the black majority whom we say we want to help in South Africa, and so I call for the adoption of this bill today.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL].

Mr. PURSELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the chairmen on both sides. I think that this is a bipartisan foreign policy issue and that there has been a healthy debate over the years on sanctions against South Africa and apartheid. I was an original cosponsor of Congressman GRAY's bill when we introduced the first bill to implement sanctions with regard to apartheid.

I have been to Africa and I do not claim to be an African expert in foreign policy, but I think, in terms of human justice, it is reprehensible that 28 million black people in Africa do not have the right to vote and do not have the right to move around Africa or anywhere else in the world.

I think apartheid is a major human rights issue. I suggest to some people who think that communism is equally as bad how very important it is that the United States takes the right position as a moral leader of the world on moral issues. I suggest that the African nations will look some day to the West or to the East and decide who has been a supporter in terms of constructive policy and who has worked with the African leaders on the economic, social, political, and cultural development of this Nation and this world.

I think the President's policy on constructive engagement really has not worked. I also believe that the Sullivan code is not enough either. I have met with Dr. Sullivan, I know him quite well and I have studied the Sullivan code. I think that is a step in the right direction. In conclusion, I also think this bill is a step in the right direction. I am sure we have more to do, but I ask the President, in all of my humble experience as a Member of this Congress for 10 years, to consider this bill carefully and to look at it favorably. I hope that he has the courage and conviction to say that we should change our foreign policy and support the sanctions issue here. The embodiment of some sanctions that are not that difficult to adhere to hopefully will improve the situation and will abolish apartheid.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ZSCHAU].

Mr. ZSCHAU. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986 passed by the other body on August 15.

Last year, about this time, this body passed the conference report on H.R. 1460. It never became law, but some of its provisions, in fact, most of its provisions were implemented by the President by Executive order.

□ 1150

It was important that we did that last year because it made clear our abhorrence of the policy of apartheid, and that we were willing to back up our talk with actions. It was also important because it began to put pressure on the Government of South Africa.

We agreed at that time that we would monitor the situation and base future action on what occurred in the intervening period. Although there have been some small steps taken to improve the situation, on balance the situation has deteriorated dramatically. Stronger action is necessary, and we must take that action now. This legislation increases the pressure. It is that stronger action that we should be taking.

But I believe it is a balanced approach. It imposes greater pressure on the Government of South Africa. It has some positive measures to help the lives of blacks in South Africa, and it retains the possibility of United States firms that are Sullivan code-compliant to continue to do work there, to not only help in the lives of South Africans but also to set an example for others.

I believe we should continue to monitor the situation, and those provisions for monitoring are contained in this legislation. Specific objectives are set out. In addition, we should seek the support of other nations around the world to join with us in these stronger actions taken to put pressure on the Government of South Africa in a balanced and responsible way in order to bring an end to apartheid.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me, and I congratulate him on this compromise.

I want to assure all my friends that women do not want those diamonds from South Africa. We would rather wear our fake diamonds.

Mr. Speaker, apartheid is the equivalent of nazism. The former Prime Minister, Dr. Verwoerd, the "architect of apartheid," said, and I quote: "Any further admission of Jews into South Africa will lead to the defiling of our white race."

There is strong evidence that these laws in South Africa were derived from the Nazi Nuremberg Laws. If you look at them, you will see that the race laws of South Africa prevent the nonwhite races from interbreeding; inhibition and limitations with regard to nonwhite races from employing or giving orders to whites; and the laws which deprive the nonwhite races of citizenship and of political rights and most civil rights in this land which is devoid of human rights.

The least we should be doing, Mr. Speaker, is passing this legislation.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROEMER].

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill before us, and I would take the time to ask a few simple questions.

Should our country bar trade with and take the profit out of apartheid? Yes. Support the bill.

Should we in the Congress stand mute and allow this administration to continue its policy of so-called constructive engagement? No. The record clearly shows that this administration will continue to honor the economic contract with South Africa while ignoring the moral contract with its citizens. Support the bill.

Will the policy of sanctions outlined in this bill be imposed without risk or pain? Of course not. But inaction is more risky to America and to South Africa and, in the long run, more painful to both. Support the bill.

Finally, unlike most Members, I grew up on a farm in the deep South during the fifties and saw a great region and a decent people attempt to finesse and temporize the horror of apartheid, using all the economic arguments and seemingly practical arguments utilized by the Government of South Africa and this administration. From personal experience I can tell you there is no turning back, no temporizing. We cannot knowingly continue to do businss with a nation that treats a majority of its citizens like animals. Support the bill.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill, but I think it needs to be understood that those of us who are supporting this bill come from different perspectives on it from time to time.

I rise in support of a unified, coordinated, and comprehensive approach to foreign policy toward South Africa. That is what is contained in the bill that was brought to us by the other body.

The other body's specific intent in that bill was to keep the rest of the country; namely, State and local governments, and so on, from formulating their own foreign policy. Rather, their intent was to bring our whole foreign policy together in a coordinated kind of effort.

I think that is right. I think as this Nation expresses itself to the world, we ought to do it through the voices of the elected Representatives of this Congress, and that is the intent of the bill that we have before us. Many of us who support that bill are in fact supporting that approach to the foreign policy of this Nation, and I think it is extremely important that we understand that that is our intent.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DIXON). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] has expired.

The Chair wishes to state that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] both have 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, as a citizen of a nation born in revolution, as America was—we tend to forget that—I am proud to be a supporter of this legislation.

In 1960, when America came to grips with the ugly racism in this Nation, whether we liked it or not, whether we wanted to or not, we assumed the moral leadership of the world on the issue of a color bar, and it is for that reason, and that reason only, that nations around the world were puzzled and hurt and pained and disillusioned when our Government by word and deed supported the racist regime in South Africa and thereby kept millions of black people living out their lives in humiliation and degradation.

Is it any wonder that those black men and women in South Africa raised the question: How many years can a mountain exist before it is washed to the sea? How many years can some people exist before they are allowed to be free?

Mr. Speaker, these are the waning days for me in this Congress, and I feel proud of the action that this House will take. I will respect you forever for it, and I will respect you when you override the Presidential veto of this legislation.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Very little mention has been made today of what the President's position is. He has stated continually that he is diametrically opposed to apartheid, but he believes that if we pull stakes and run, we are going to end up hurting the people we want to help very severely. He thinks we should stay in there and work and not cut and run, as he has said in the past.

One of his quotes is this: "If postapartheid South Africa is to remain the economic locomotive of southern Africa, its strong and developed economy must not be crippled. Therefore," he said, "I urge the Congress and the countries of Western Europe to resist this emotional clamor for punitive sanctions."

And make no mistake about it, the South African sanctions contained in the Senate bill are punitive. For example, the Senate bill, as I said before, will ban the import into the United States of South African agricultural commodities and products. The impact on black employment in the agricultural area alone will be 446,000 jobs.

Banning the import into the United States of South African coal, iron and steel will have an impact on blacks of 145,000 jobs. The impact on the people that it will feed is 725,000 workers and their families. It is 2.2 million from agriculture alone, and we are not mentioning the other areas that are connected with those industries. The bottom line is that more than 600,000 jobs will be lost, and the livelihoods of more than 3 million blacks will be affected.

As I said before, we are playing right into the hands of the South African Communist Party. The African National Congress is controlled by the Communists, and I believe we are setting the stage for a major, major disaster in South Africa by the actions we are taking here today.

□ 1200

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to reconsider their actions. I know this thing is on rails and it is probably going to pass overwhelmingly, but I wish you would really think of the ramifications to the people we are trying to help and to the people of the United States as well.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, on June 18, I stood in this well and pleaded with my colleagues to support disinvestment as the last best hope to avoid a potential bloodbath in South Africa. Shortly after that speech, I put my money where my mouth is. I divested my portfolio of all stock of any company doing business in South Africa and, Mr. Speaker, it is going to be a hell of an expense, too.

Today we have an opportunity to vote for a Senate package that does not go far enough, but it is another step forward. I would prefer that today's vote be on sending a disinvestment package to the President, but that is not the reality. But we do have a sanctions package that puts the weight of this great country behind the effort to eliminate the evil and immoral system of apartheid. Sanctions hurt, you bet they hurt. But apartheid kills, and black leaders throughout Africa—including Archbishop Tutu, the United Democratic Front, and others—are calling for sanctions as the last defense against a holocaust of profound proportion in South Africa.

I urge my colleagues to vote for this bill, and I also urge that others join me in taking their own actions to convey their total opposition to apartheid by divesting stock they may hold.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY].

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues, on Thanksgiving evening in 1984 I took an action, together with a couple colleagues, Randall Robinson and Mary Francis Berry, that was a tribute to the wisdom of the Founding Fathers. They recognized that there might come times in the course of our democracy when the body politic might not respond to the legitimate concerns of even one citizen, so they guaranteed to us the right of peaceful assembly to petition the government for addressing grievances. When we have done that effectively in this country, it has done two things. It has raised consciousness and it has pricked the consciousness of the American people to take action.

I want to thank you all for responding to the legitimate concerns of millions of Americans, that we come down on the right side of this issue.

I urge, therefore, support for this measure, albeit weaker than that which ought to be done, as another step toward the elimination of this heinous system of apartheid in South Africa.

We in the Congressional Black Caucus look forward in the next Congress to providing other alternatives to strengthen the will of the coalition of consciousness around this world that this issue and this system be dismantled.

I thank the gentleman for yielding 1 minute of his precious time.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the Senate's amended version of H.R. 4868.

Though this measure is not strong enough and not as strong as I would prefer, it is a step forward. The values of our country which we should seek to express in our policy toward South Africa are equality, freedom and justice for all men and women.

South Africa's brutal system of apartheid threatens the very core of those values. Racism is in direct conflict with these basic values. It is an evil which we have fought long and hard to rid ourselves of in this country, and as has been said before, we are still fighting it in this country and to be true to those values here at home we must be true to those values throughout the world.

The Government of South Africa is intent on continuing its practice of organized racism. A country like the United States, whose Constitution is based on equality for all cannot subject itself to continuing a relationship as usual with such system. By not having a strong, well defined policy with regard to South Africa, we are in effect, condoning that country's racist behavior.

The President's Executive order does little more than dance around the issue. Since the order was issued last year, Pretoria has stepped up its intimidation of the black population in South Africa. People are taken from their homes for no reason at all. Many families have no idea where their loved ones are, or even if they are alive. Hundreds are tortured and brutally killed. In light of this increase in violence, it is unconscionable that the President would reissue his same do-nothing policy.

What does the President think his Executive order accomplishes? It surely does not express this country's values, and obviously has not put enough pressure on South Africa to force that country to abandon its racist practices.

Unlike the President's weak policy the Senate measure will raise the cost of South Africa practicing its policy of apartheid. It must be made clear, that the United States abhors apartheid and that if South Africa continues to practice these policies, they will totally alienate the rest of the world.

Again, this measure before us today is not as strong as I would prefer. However, the provisions contained in the Senate version would let Pretoria know, that the United States is committed to the total elimination of apartheid. Approval of this measure will let South Africa, as well as the rest of the world know, that the United States is committed to upholding those values on which our country is based, equality for all of mankind.

It is not time, as the gentleman from Louisiana said, to temporize or rationalize. It is time to act. It is time to act now. Vote for this bill and vote against the override when and if it comes.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I think we have had a very good debate on this subject. I think the House is obviously prepared to vote.

I want to indicate that my understanding from a phone call this morning from the White House is that the President does not like the bill in its present form. It is a clear signal, at least to me, this gentleman from Michigan, that he intends to veto the bill.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the pending motion, a motion to agree to the Senate amendments to the bill and sending the South African sanctions legislation to the President without the possible delay of a House-Senate conference.

Mr. Speaker, the South African Government simply must be placed on notice that it cannot expect to carry on "business as usual" with the American people while a state of emergency continues and scant progress is made in the move toward powersharing in that country. This bill sends a strong signal reflecting the attitude of the American people toward the system now in place in South Africa. Just as we have sanctions in place against Nicaragua and the Soviet Union, against Syria and Iran, we should exercise this peaceful weapon of economic sanctions as a means of attempting to influence the policies of another nation.

These sanctions include termination of the South African Airlines' landing rights, prohibiting importation of materials from South African Government-owned or controlled corporations, banking the importation of textiles, uranium, iron and steel, coal, and agricultural products. It bars new United States loans to South African businesses—except those owned by black South Africans. In addition to other important sanctions, it states that United States policy will be to impose more sanctions if South Africa does not make substantial progress toward ending apartheid in a year.

Mr. Speaker, this is a balanced, thoughtful piece of legislation.

A conference might result in some marginal improvements, but they would not be of any critical nature. It is important to take the opportunity presented to us to pass this bill now, without further delay. Accordingly, now, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the motion now pending.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am sure, regardless of what happens today, we hope this bill does pass and it will do something to improve the situation in South Africa and that everyone will be much better off for it.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, to close the debate, I yield such time as he may consume to our distinguished Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion.

Today, the House considers a vital matter of American purpose. Ever since World War II, our great country has offered itself as a force for freedom and independence in the world. We have opposed communism, and, at the same time, we have supported the end of European colonialism. We have fostered a third alternative, the alternative we enjoy here in America, the alternative of freedom and human liberty.

Today, we in the House vote on a measure that breathes life into our historic commitment to American values. We send to the President of the United States a document that clarifies our values, but, more than that, our determination to uphold these values.

Six years ago, this administration embarked on a new approach to South Africa. Rejecting the previous policy of public condemnation, it offered the carrot of constructive engagement. South Africa took the carrot, applauded the new administration's policy, and insisted on the right of that county's whites to monopolize supreme power over 22 million of its black citizens.

Constructive engagement, this policy of offering American sympathy to the government in Pretoria, has been a failure. After 6 years of failure, in my opinion it is time to abolish that policy. It is one thing to experiment. That might be forgivable in the eyes of history. What is not forgivable is to continue with a policy that has proven itself a failure, morally as well as politically.

President Reagan has a unique opportunity in the next few days to serve as a champion of freedom. He has a chance to make it clear that this great country of ours is willing to once again pay the price of freedom. We are willing to sacrifice short-term economic gain to support our long-term values. We are willing to tell our brothers in South Africa, black and white and Asian, that our bill of rights is not only alive in this country, but a valued treasure for all humanity.

As an American, I hope our President will not veto this bill and will join the Congress of the United States in listening to the call from the millions of Americans in the towns and cities of our country to sign the sanctions bill and send Pretoria and the world a message:

When it comes to basic human principles, Americans always stand together.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed feelings that I consider the Senate bill on sanctions against South Africa. While my constituents and I would have rather be sending the Dellums disinvestment language to the President, the Senate bill we will be voting on today is a first step toward bringing reform to that nation.

The bill has several worthwhile provisions. It ends landing rights in this country for South African aircraft, prohibits most new investment in South Africa, and prohibits the import of uranium ore, coal, and steel coming from that nation. It also provides educational and housing assistance for black South Africans disadvantaged by apartheid.

Mr. Speaker, I will vote for today's bill, but with no strings attached as to whether this measure will preempt the authority of State and local municipalities to enact disinvestment legislation on South Africa. I encourage these entities to pull their investments from South Africa. While this Congress may not be able to pass disinvestment legislation this year, there is no reason for us to preempt those legislative bodies that can.

We have not heard the last on this issue. While we will almost certainly be considering an override in the next few weeks, I am hoping that the 100th Congress will bring about new pressure on the other body to approve disinvestment. We must make the Pretoria government respect the rights of its black majority.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SKEEN].

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, shortly after returning from my trip to South Africa in February 1985 this body began to debate and struggle with the important question of how the United States might be a constructive influence toward change in that country. Since that time, the situation in South Africa has deteriorated and grown increasingly violent, yet Congress has been unable to reach agreement on the issue of sanctions.

The question is out as to whether or not the United States can still make a difference in South Africa; whether the United States can still make a positive contribution to help to bring an end to apartheid and a renewal of peace.

However, in approving the measure before us today (H.R. 4868) we have an opportunity to speak with one voice in telling the people of South Africa and the world, that the citizens and Government of the United States disassociate themselves, clearly and without reservation, from the system of apartheid. In passing this bill, we will be passing a measure that can, and I am confident will, be signed into law. After 2 years of debate, we can finally signify to the merging and legitimate black majority population that America stands with them in their efforts to obtain justice.

The bill puts into permanent law all of the sanctions that President Reagan imposed on South Africa in his September 9, 1985 Executive order. Those were bans on: the importation of Krugerrands; the importation into the United States of arms, ammunition or military vehicles made in South Africa; the export of computer software and related items to South Africa for use by Government agencies, such as the police; loans by United States banks to the Government of South Africa; and the export to South Africa of nuclear power equipment and supplies.

Additional sanctions are established in an attempt to achieve short-term objects, such as the lifting of the current state of emergency, and long term, broader objectives, including the creation of a truly democratic form of government. Among the sanctions are included: a ban on the import of South African textiles, uranium and uranium ore, iron and steel, coal, and agricultural products; a prohibition on any form of cooperation between United States Government agencies and South African armed forces; a ban on new United States loans to South African businesses, the Pretoria government or any entity it controls; no new investments in South Africa by American business; and termination of a 1947 air travel agreement between the United States and South Africa.

The bill reaffirms the U.S. commitment to help the victims of apartheid through direct financial aid and other efforts. Funds are included for education scholarships, housing, and human rights programs aimed at helping black South Africans help themselves overcome the weight of apartheid.

Sanctions can be waived if the South African Government undertakes five steps:

First, free African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela and all persons persecuted for their political beliefs or detained without trial;

Second, repeal the state of emergency and release all persons detained under it:

Third, legalize democratic political parties and permit all South Africans to join political parties, to express political opinions and participate in the political process;

Fourth, repeal the Group Areas Act and the Population Registration Act, which restrict where nonwhites live and work; and Fifth, agree to enter into good-faith negotiations with truly representative black leaders without precondition.

While denouncing government violence perpetrated by Pretoria, we must also condemn acts of violence, such as the horrid "necklacing" carried out by black militants. H.R. 4868 calls on the African National Congress to strongly condemn these acts and take immediate action to bring a halt to this violence.

I am not so naive as to think that the passage of this bill guarantees an end to either apartheid, or the violence that has resulted from its enforcement. It is up to the people of South Africa, black and white, to bring about an end to the bloodshed and injustice plaguing their nation.

However, if our goal is to promote freedom and democracy throughout the world, and at a minimum establish communications with blacks in all of Africa; we cannot stand by and allow the 85 percent of the population in South Africa to be denied their similar rights to freedom and majority rule. I strongly urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting the passage of this bill, in the hope that we may best promote America's interests, the interests of the South African majority and the cause of peace.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my total opposition to apartheid and my support for complete United States divestment from South Africa.

In the past I called for the toughest sanctions against the apartheid regime. In May, the House paid heed to that call. I call for those sanctions again today.

It is most unfortunate that the President refuses to join the House of Representatives, the American people, and the Eminent Persons Group in expressing total abhorrence to apartheid. Apartheid enslaves black South Africans. It is evil. The United States will be an accessory to this evil until all ties are cut with the apartheid regime.

I continue to believe that we must send the strongest message possible to the South African regime that we oppose apartheid. I also believe that we must, as a nation, wait no longer to move decisively. It is unfortunate that the Senate package is the toughest sanctions bill we can pass and sustain over a veto.

The sanctions the President imposed last year have simply not done the job. We must send a stronger message. I urge my colleagues to accept the Senate amendments: a compromise, but a stronger message nonetheless.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4868. The provisions of this bill, although not as stringent as those originally passed by the House, will go a long way toward pressuring the South African Government to begin negotiating with recognized black leaders of that country to work toward a nonviolent resolution of the unconscionable political, economic and social structure of South Africa. Passage of this legislation is the least that we can do today. As Members of the U.S. Congress, we have been entrusted by the people of this Nation with a moral and political obligation to strive for equity and peace, not only in America, but throughout all regions of the world. It is far past the time for us to take decisive action to end the grossly unjust situation in South Africa.

There are many critical elements contained in H.R. 4868, but I will take time to point out one of the most important from the standpoint of West Virginia, the bill's ban on the importation of South African coal into the United States. In recent years, the amount of foreign coal entering this country has steadily increased. The infiltration of imported coal into domestic markets obviously displaces coal mining jobs in this country.

Leading the attack on coal field employment is South African coal which is produced under conditions very different than those maintained in this country. There are virtually no health and safety standards enforced in South African coal mines and the right of the primarily black miners to organize against the atrocious conditions they are forced to work in has consistently been denied. How can we not act against a system that not only submits its workers to inhumane and dangerous conditions, but also contributes to the unemployment and suffering of workers right here in America?

How can we not enact this legislation, as limited as it may be? How can we not do at least this, in an effort to help the downtrodden majority of South Africa reach a level of respect due all human beings? Our efforts heretofore have gone unheeded by those in power in South Africa. We have no course other than to pass this bill and stringently enforce its provisions. I urge its adoption.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, as an original cosponsor of H.R. 4868, I rise in absolute support of this final version of this critically important legislation. If the Congress of the United States is going to take a stand on any foreign policy issue this year—and do so in a meaningful way—then it must take the kind of unequivocal stand against the evil of apartheid in South Africa that H.R. 4868 takes.

I would be the first to acknowledge that the bill before us today is not as strong as the House-passed version. I voted for that measure and stand by it. However, our objective in this process is to emerge with a final legislative product, not a one-House stand. The managers on the part of the House in the conference were able to negotiate from a position of strength because of the House vote in June.

The result is, we have not a compromise bill but a genuinely strong and viable piece of legislation to vote on today. The bill would provide for the following:

The bill would ban all new public and private sector loans or investments or other extensions of credit.

The bill bars the importation of uranium, coal, textiles, iron, steel, ammunition, military vehicles, agricultural products and food from South Africa. These bans would take effect immediately, except the uranium, coal and textile bans which take effect 90 days after enactment.

The bill would also ban any imports from South African state-owned companies, either directly or indirectly through third countries.

This bill bans the export of all crude oil petroleum products and munitions to South Africa. In addition, it would ban exports of computers, computer software and computer services to the South African military, police or other entities responsible for enforcing apartheid.

The bill terminates the air services agreement now in effect with South Africa and ends all South African landing rights in the United States.

The bill earmarks $40 million out of the Foreign Assistance Act economic support fund for assistance to South Africans disadvantaged by apartheid.

This legislation contains important penalties against those corporations which violate these sanctions. The absence of this provision would render this legislation meaningless in my judgment.

By enacting this measure, the United States is taking a strong stand. The message we convey is that we want no part of condoning the continued existence of apartheid in South Africa. We are able to exert genuine pressure to achieve peaceful change in this ravaged land. We must end our association with any elements who are in any way responsible for apartheid. Apartheid is a policy as abhorrent as any system the world has ever seen. It is a policy which imposes permanent subjugation on a group of people, namely the black majority in South Africa.

Mr. Speaker, there have been more than 100 legislative measures introduced this Congress to, in some way, condemn and/or end the normally repugnant system of apartheid in South Africa. I have cosponsored a number of those measures, including House Resolution 373, which would urge the South African Government to engage in meaningful political negotiations with their black majority; and H.R. 1460, a bill that passed this body last year to impose economic sanctions on South Africa. Today's measure is the strongest action yet, and it deserves our strong support. Simply put, apartheid and the bloody civil unrest it is spawning cannot be tolerated and this legislation will do more than merely mouth that message.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker. South Africa's racial policy of apartheid has been under attack since its institutionalization in 1948. More recently, world moral indignation has escalated to calls for direct action; that is, disinvestment. It is presumed that compelling corporations, banks, and other investors to cease their business activities in South Africa will force an end to apartheid. This is wishful thinking, and dangerously naive.

On June 19, the House of Representatives passed by voice vote a radical sanctions bill introduced by Mr. RON DELLUMS; allowing it to succeed without a fight was a calculated gamble since opponents of sanctions believe that such an extreme measure would never pass the Senate or be signed by the President. Should the legislation become law, all United States companies owning interests in South Africa must divest themselves of those interests within 180 days.

It is estimated that some 300 American firms have $1.8 billion in direct investments in South Africa, producing $2.2 billion in annual trade. Were sanctions instituted, and they were only 20 percent effective, it is projected that 90,000 whites and 343,000 blacks would lose their jobs; if 50 percent effective, the total rises to 1.1 million South Africans who would be unemployed.

An alarming aspect of sanctions would be the potential prohibiting of the importation of strategic minerals vital to the United States, minerals vital to our basic economy as well as to our national defense effort. It has been estimated by some experts that the loss of these minerals might effectively result in forbidding the importation of foreign automobiles, repealing the Clean Air Act, and, of course, paying much higher prices for those minerals obtainable elsewhere. American imports from South Africa include: 56 percent of chromium, 33 percent of manganese (which is essential in the manufacture of tanks, ships, and aircraft), 67 percent of the platinum group minerals (which includes rhodium, used in making catalytic converters which all cars sold in the United States must possess), 67 percent of industrial diamonds, and 44 percent of ferrochromium (used in making stainless steel). In many of these groups, including manganese, platinum, and vanadium, the only other major source is the Soviet Union. The loss—or greatly increased cost of having to purchase elsewhere—of these minerals would severely impact those industries most reliant upon them, including aerospace and defense industries in California.

Moreover, we would be unable to export our products to South Africa, currently amounting to about $125 million annually, primarily in computers and other high-technology equipment. Fully 47 percent of all South African computer purchases is from the United States. Again, California would be hard hit.

The question is asked: Is it right to choose an economic argument over a moral one? Are jobs and economic growth in the United States more important than the freedom and human rights of blacks in South Africa? It is an easy question to ask, but an elusive one for proponents of sanctions to answer. What morality is inherent in disinvestment?

Polls taken among South African blacks indicate that between 68 and 74 percent oppose sanctions. Neighboring countries who rely on South Africa for between 50 and 100 percent of their electricity and for 40 to 70 percent of their trade would suffer with any decline in the South African economy. We should heed the lesson of Rhodesia/Zimbabwe. We applied sanctions against that nation 20 years ago because the white minority government refused to hand control over to blacks. Rhodesia subsequently fell and a black regime now rules. Unfortunately, Marxism has devastated the economy and the faction in power is intent upon destroying all political opposition. We find that, instead of freedom, there is widespread violence and bloodshed. Is this what we have to look forward to in South Africa? It is important to note that not all blacks oppose the existing Government's program of reform. The Zulus, led by their Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi, are opposed to the radical African National Congress, which is heavily infiltrated and controlled by Communists. The ANC is a terrorist group trained in the Soviet Union, East Germany, Libya, and Angola, and which has received millions of dollars in aid from the PLO.

Progress toward ensuring human, economic, social, and political rights for all South Africans has been slow. But progress is being made: The hated pass laws were abolished this summer, the policy of forced resettlement has been revoked, more extensive voting rights are being negotiated, and spending on education for blacks has increased 600 percent since 1980. These are steps in the right direction. Of course, anything less than immediate change fails to satisfy promoters of revolution.

The United States has an option: We can make a stupid and counter-productive symbolic gesture which injures ourselves, fails to deliver on its promise of freedom, and plays directly into the hands of the Soviets; or we can help an ally solve very basic problems and seek a solution which maximizes common sense and genuine progress and minimizes carnage and catastrophe.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the H.R. 4868, the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986, before us today. This legislation is an important and necessary step in bringing about the abolition of the apartheid regime in South Africa.

I would like to bring to the attention of the House the portion of the bill over which the Committee on Public Works and Transportation has jurisdiction; that is, the section prohibiting South African aircraft from landing in the United States. I am pleased that the legislation on the floor today contains this provision, which is identical to the earlier House-passed bill.

This is an important provision of the legislation because air travel is a major means of commerce internationally, and if we intend to have an impact on the regime of apartheid, a sanction against convenient air travel from South Africa to the United States is crucial. Air travel is also a highly visible and symbolic means of commerce, so the significance of the sanction goes far beyond the economic value of the air service.

Again, it is most important that we send a strong message to the people and Government of South Africa that apartheid is abhorrent and unacceptable to the American people and that we expect changes in that Government's policies.

Again, I rise in support of the H.R. 4868 and urge it passage.

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, I rise once again to urge my colleagues to join me in strong support of legislation imposing sanctions on the white majority government of South Africa. This House now stands on the brink of historic legislation. Through H.R. 4868, the Anti-Apartheid Act, we will establish a national policy of opposition to South African racist governance by threat, violence and repression. One which defends essential democratic principles: the basic rights to vote and to participate on a one-person, one-vote basis in the National Government. We will establish a policy that puts us clearly on the side of change in South Africa.

H.R. 4868 would prohibit new United States business investment in South Africa, ban some imports, including steel and other products from corporations controlled by the Government, and deny landing rights in the United States to the Government-owned South Africa Airways, along with imposing a number of other restrictions aimed at the Government and its commercial enterprises.

H.R. 4868 threatens additional, stronger sanctions unless South Africa makes substantial progress within a year to end its apartheid system of racial segregation. The measure also provides for rescinding the sanctions if the South African Government takes steps such as lifting segregationist rules, freeing antiapartheid leader Nelson Mandela, legalizing all political parties and negotiating with black political leaders.

Importantly, this legislation allows States and local governments to continue to individually regulate financial or commercial activity with regard to South Africa. H.R. 4868 in no way preempts the efforts or decisions of State and local governments respecting South Africa.

These sanctions represent our first significant step to put moral force behind our rhetorical opposition to apartheid. If rhetoric would change the situation, the government would have long since folded, and there would be no apartheid today. But that has not happened. South Africa has continued its rule of institutionalized racism, sustained by United States companies.

The administration has come out quite soundly in support of the status quo in South Africa. Let us think for a moment what a status quo for South Africa means. Status quo in South Africa means repression of 22 million blacks who are deprived of the most basic rights such as the right to vote, to chose a job, an education or a place to live.

South Africa is the only nation on Earth that constitutionally enshrines racism by denying blacks the basic right to vote, the right to move about, freedom of association, equal protection under the law, virtually all of the constitutional freedoms that we know and cherish in this country.

Over the last 20 years some 3½ million blacks have been relocated by the Government, forcibly onto worthless patches of land. Eight million of them have been stripped of their citizenship. During the same period of time, U.S. investment has grown from about $150 million to a current combined direct and indirect investment of $14 billion. But as the American role has grown in South Africa, so has the tyranny of the South African Government.

Violence and Government repression have reached tragic new levels in South Africa. The news media carries daily reports of brutal and senseless attacks by the white government against the blacks of South Africa. We see blacks seeking political and humanitarian rights beaten and imprisoned. Meanwhile, the Government has prohibited almost all public dissent, closed opposition newspapers, and banned television and other press coverage of unrest and police actions.

Mr. Speaker, as the traditional leader of the free world, our Nation has to take a stand. H.R. 4868 puts us squarely behind liberty and equality. And this is in our own interest because I am certain that blacks in South Africa will inevitably come to power. As a nation, we must be at that time in a posture to be able to say that we were on the right side of this most important social justice issue. I hope my colleagues will join me in sending this message of U.S. support for peace and democracy. It is a message we can all be proud of.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, this vote on sanctions is a terribly hard one for me.

Essentially, all of us abhor apartheid, and want to do what is reasonable to hasten the demise of the system.

Essentially, I do not like sanctions, either. I do not like them as policy and I believe they are almost invariably unsuccessful.

Also, I believe that the Senate bill, on which we vote today, like the original House bill, and unlike the Dellums version, has as much protectionism as idealism as its basis. The usual suspects, the coal industry, the steel industry, and the textile industry have managed to isolate and protect their commercial interests in the name of human rights.

I am also troubled about the emphasis on only 1 of the 150 countries in the world which do not offer the basic human right of the democratic franchise to their people.

Apartheid is noxious, but so are the systems of dozens of other countries, many of them on the same continent. Free elections are the exceptions in this world, not the rule.

Despite my distaste for sanctions, I must now yield to a stronger distaste for apartheid. The democratic traditions of this country are too strong. The United States is too important as a symbol of freedom.

I shall, therefore, vote for the conference report not because I think it will change the conduct of the Botha government, but because I must. There is, at this time, no other way to express the strong feelings that demand expression now.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, in considering sanctions against South Africa, our foremost concern at this time must be how we can help the black people of South Africa to achieve a full political democracy which fully protects human rights and human dignity for all.

Apartheid, in every form must end and is demonstrably evil. Thanks to our American Declaration of Independence, we can all agree on that. But there are many persuasive voices who tell us that the only way to build a new society is to tear down the old. I disagree, violence does not beget peace. Nor does poverty beget prosperity.

It would be tempting to disregard the substance of this bill and to vote for it as a symbol, a gesture of solidarity with the oppressed minorities in South Africa. I believe it would also be, on balance, politically popular to do so and I know this bill will pass. I don't question motives, that would be easy to do, but wrong. Because the result of this bill, I believe, would be to hurt the prospects for the emergence of a just, peaceful, and free democratic society in South Africa.

We must hate evil with a divine hatred. But we should always keep in mind what we want to build—this is ultimately more important than what we are against. Yet I see no plan, for how punitive sanctions against the South African people will help build a democracy in which everyone has an equal opportunity and a society and economy in which everyone has a fair and free stake.

I want to join in devising such a plan. But I see no such plan connected in any way with this bill. I favor pressure in South Africa and have demonstrated by word and action my commitment to demolishing apartheid but I don't want anarchy and depression.

We do not build political democracy by tearing down economic opportunity. We do not improve the future for South African working people and their families by destroying their jobs. We do not improve the prospects for bringing the weight of world opinion to bear upon South Africa's unjust political system, by cutting that nation off from the rest of world society.

The way to help the people of South Africa is not to turn our back on the very principles which we proclaim as true not only for ourselves, but for all people everywhere—that human freedom, both political and economic, is the bedrock of political society. The future of the South African people will be best advanced through democratic self-determination, and free and growing economic opportunity, and I do favor a summit conference to help achieve that end.

I do not believe that the interests of the South African people, least of all South African blacks, are served by preventing new investment that creates jobs and increases their standard of living, as this bill would do. I do not believe that the people of South Africa are helped by prohibiting imports of any firm that receives any kind of Government subsidy. This would be equivalent to banning all agricultural products produced by American farmers although the bill hypocritically allows for subsidized grain sales to South Africa but not petroleum.

I can't believe it, but it's true.

I ask all people of good will on both sides of the aisle to join together in an effort to build up, not tear down. To be voices of reconciliation, not hatred. To bolster our natural love of human rights and human dignity which is in every conscience. Every person of good will can join in putting pressure for change toward observance of human right, but also in resisting pressure for violence and poverty. I agree that constructive employment is not enough, but we've sent signals, we are pressuring South Africa for an end to this evil.

I cast my vote against these ill-advised sanctions, and ask my colleagues that we begin together the vital work of reconstruction, reconciliation, and an end to racism in South Africa.

There are many of my colleagues and good friends who will not understand a vote against sanctions. I am profoundly sorry but I sincerely share the common goal of a summit conference on democratizing power, the release of Mandela, the repeal of the state of emergency, and repeal of the Group Areas and Population Registration Act. Let's eradicate apartheid not the economy.

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I am not satisfied with the current form of the South African sanctions bill, H.R. 4868. I will, however, support it as a step in the right direction.

The racist Government of South Africa has again proven its moral bankruptcy. Two weeks ago, demonstrators peacefully assembled in protest, were gunned down by security forces. When the families of those victims attempted to mourn their dead, they were refused permission to hold funeral services. Those who defied this inhumane restriction were met by bullets and tear gas.

Can you imagine such barbarity? To have one's children shot down in cold blood and then not to be able to give them a decent funeral. The Afrikaner government even went so far as to secretly bury many of these victims without their families' knowledge. The parents were not even told the location of the graves! Weeping mothers must now walk, in anguish, from grave to grave in the hopes of finding the final resting place of their sons and daughters.

Nothing could be more heartless and brutal. Not only does Pretoria kill its opponents, but it also intensifies the mental anguish and emotional suffering of the victim's families. The United States cannot stand idle in the face of this barbarity.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today is not nearly as strong as it should be. The Dellums version, which the House passed earlier, would provide far greater measures with which to attack apartheid. It did not simply institute economic sanctions, but did so in a manner designed to encourage Pretoria to undertake peaceful change. The bill before us today is far less comprehensive. Nevertheless, it does represent a step in the right direction and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Finally, I want to address a few words to the South African regime. I warn them, here and now, do not take our action lightly. Americans are a tolerant people, but they cannot abide repression and brutality—they cling too dearly to the ideals of human justice. Pretoria, you have shown your true face to this Nation and the American people will not forget its ugly form. The time for change is now! Continue on your present course, Pretoria, and you will bring upon yourselves the full wrath of all freedom-loving people.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the legislation being voted on today by the House. As a supporter of the House version of anti-apartheid legislation, I would have preferred to see stronger sanctions implemented. However, pragmatically, I understand that stronger sanctions might not have the legislative success which this version can hopefully attain. I feel that the imposition of effective sanctions is imperative at this time. The earlier passage of the strong House anti-apartheid bill has greatly facilitated the serious consideration of a sanctions bill. The version we have before us today would not, in all likelihood, be as strong as it is had the House not taken a dramatic stand on sweeping anti-apartheid actions. I commend all of the key players in the development of the anti-apartheid legislation.

I am pleased to see that some of the major House provisions are included in this version which we are considering today. One significant provision—vital to the people of New Mexico—bans the importation of South African uranium, coal, and steel into the United States. In 1985, South Africa exported 192 million dollars' worth of uranium, 117 million dollars' worth of steel and 44 million dollars' worth of coal into the United States. Despite the fact that our country has among the largest coal deposits in the world, we continue to increase our coal imports from South Africa, the leading importer of coal in the United States since 1980, coal imports from South Africa have more than doubled to over $27 million. In 1985, half of all of the coal imported into this country came from South Africa. This is at a time when 60,000 American coal miners are out of work.

Our uranium imports from South Africa and Namibia have increased 350 percent since 1981—at a time when the number of domestic uranium mines has dropped from 362 to a mere hand-full, and over 85 percent of our miners have lost their jobs. Since 1981, New Mexico alone has lost about 11,500 mining jobs—the largest decline was in the uranium ores subsector. The State's two remaining conventional uranium producers were forced to close their mines and mills in 1985, laying off hundreds of workers.

These statistics and lost jobs are not just indicators of the problems caused by foreign trade to industries in the United States. South Africa has been so successful at its exploitation of its mineral resources because it relies on exploitation of its population. Conditions for black miners reflect the adverse circumstances experienced by other blacks in South Africa. The labor conditions for black miners in South Africa and Namibia are frankly deplorable.

Black miners have virtually no job security. They must contract for a limited number of months and then reapply for their jobs. Black miners are not allowed to live with their families; white miners are. Black miners are prohibited by law from holding skilled labor positions. These slots are reserved for whites only. Black miners must pay for their health insurance; white miners receive free insurance. Black miners receive one-fifth of the wages of white miners—their low wage has artificially depressed the world price of uranium and coal, making U.S. coal and uranium less competitive.

This description of the status of black miners in South Africa is clearly a reflection of the greater oppression the entire black population in South Africa experiences. Since last year, when the House passed an anti-apartheid bill, the administration's policy of "constructive engagement," toward South Africa has clearly made no improvements in the situation there. Nowhere else in the world is the administration turning such a blind eye toward censorship, repression, and the implementation of a police state.

Congress has tried being patient. It has tried allowing the President to implement "constructive engagement" measures—the end result is that South Africa is now experiencing upheaval and violent turmoil which will likely result in a bloodbath. Since the administration is not willing to take active steps to force South Africa to democratize, to allow equal participation in all facets of life for all members of the society, Congress has no choice now but to once again pursue the course of sanctions. Sanctions are essential, and they are the only avenue left for the United States to pursue. We must act, and act immediately in order to salvage the region. The sanctions legislation we are considering today is a start—not only will it prove the United States to be against apartheid—but through provisions such as the one banning the importation of South African uranium, coal, and steel, we will be counteracting South African unfair foreign trade practices, and giving a much needed boost to American miners. Thank you.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DIXON). Pursuant to House Resolution 548, the previous question is considered as ordered.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 308, nays 77, not voting 46, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Rangel for, with Mr. Hansen against.

Mr. McKinney for, with Mr. Loeffler against.

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the motion just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DIXON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 548, House Resolution 549 is considered as having been adopted.

The text of House Resolution 549 is as follows:

Resolved, That in passing the bill, H.R. 4868, as amended by the Senate, it is not the intent of the House of Representatives that the bill limit, preempt, or affect, in any fashion, the authority of any State or local government or the District of Columbia or of any commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States or political subdivision thereof to restrict or otherwise regulate any financial or commercial activity respecting South Africa.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained earlier today. Had I been present I would have voted "yes" on rollcall No. 379; and I would have voted "yes" on rollcall No 380 providing for consideration of the Senate amendment to H.R. 4868, the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986.

WAIVING CERTAIN POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5313, DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT-INDEPENDENT AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT 1987

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 532 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 532

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5313) making appropriations for the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and for sundry independent agencies, boards, commissions, corporations, and offices for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes, all points of order against the following provisions in the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI are hereby waived: beginning on page 2, line 8 through page 7, line 9; beginning on page 7, line 22 through page 9, line 11, beginning on page 10, line 1 through page 13, line 21; beginning on page 14, lines 13 through 16; beginning on page 15, line 21 through page 16, line 9; beginning on page 16, line 23 through page 18, line 4; beginning on page 18, line 10 through page 19, line 12; beginning on page 20, line 10 through page 25, line 3; beginning on page 26, line 1 through page 29, line 4; beginning on page 29, line 13 through page 33, line 8; beginning on page 35, line 20 through page 36, line 9; and beginning on page 39, line 7 through page 41, line 22. It shall be in order to consider an amendment to the bill printed in section two of this resolution, if offered by Representative Boland of Massachusetts, and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI are hereby waived.

SEC. 2. On page 26, line 14, insert at the end of the sentence: ": Provided further, That of the funds appropriated under this heading, not to exceed $160,000,000 shall be provided for space station phase C/D development and such funds shall not be available for obligation until the enactment of a subsequent appropriations Act authorizing the obligation of such funds.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. ANTHONY). The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 532 is the rule waiving certain points of order against consideration of H.R. 5313, the Department of Housing and Urban Development and independent agencies appropriations for fiscal year 1987.

Since general appropriation bills are privileged under the rules of the House, the rule does not provide for any special guidelines for the consideration of the bill. Provisions related to time for general debate are not included in the rule.

Customarily, Mr. Speaker, general debate time is limited by a unanimous-consent request by the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee prior to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the rule protects specified provisions of the bill against points of order for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI. Clause 2 of rule XXI prohibits unauthorized appropriations and legislative provisions in an appropriations bill. The specific provisions of the bill for which the waiver is provided are detailed in the rule by page and line.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the rule makes in order an amendment offered by Representative BOLAND of Massachusetts. The amendment is printed in section 2 of the rule. The rule waives points of order against the amendment under clause 2 of rule XXI which, as I stated earlier, prohibits the inclusion of unauthorized appropriations and legislation in general appropriation bills.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5313 contains $54.6 billion in new budget authority for the Department of Housing and Urban Development and for 17 independent agencies in fiscal year 1987. The bill would provide $13.2 billion to the Department of Housing and Urban Development, which includes $8.1 billion for the assisted housing programs—sufficient to provide for 98,000 units. The committee has appropriated $3 billion for community development block grants, and $275 million for urban development action grants.

In addition to providing funding for HUD, this bill appropriates $26.1 billion for all of the programs of the Veterans' Administration. Of this total, the bill provides $14.4 billion for compensation and pensions, $9.5 billion for medical care and treatment, and $355 million for construction projects.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5313 appropriates funds for several other independent agencies including $34.5 million for the Consumer Product Safety Commission, $7.65 billion for NASA, and $1.6 billion for the National Science Foundation. The bill also would provide $1.2 billion for salaries, abatement and buildings for the Environmental Protection Agency and $2.4 billion for waste water grants administered by that agency.

Mr. Speaker, the rule would allow the House to fully consider the action of the Appropriations Committee on an important bill as we approach the beginning of the new fiscal year. I urge its adoption so that we can move expeditiously to consideration of the issues.

□ 1235

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to say that I support the rule in its present form. I want to advise the Membership, however, that there will be an effort made to defeat the previous question, which I do not support.

The purpose of the effort to defeat the previous question will be to make in order a line-item veto amendment which is only applicable to this bill. As much as I favor a line-item veto, it should be across the board and no individual appropriation should be singled out.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important measure, coming here on Friday in the closing days of this session, but there is no more important appropriation bill than this one appropriating for HUD and some independent agencies of this Government, including the Veterans' Administration and NASA.

We know how valuable the Veterans' Administration is to the veterans of this country, their health care and their well-being. Even though it is above the request of the administration, it will be possible to offer an amendment to reduce that amount. I support the rule. I support the measure. I urge a yes vote on the previous question.

Mr. Speaker, I do have two or three requests for time.

At this time, I yield 5 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY].

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I appreciate his generosity in giving me this time. I think it is reflective of the quality of people we have here that we are so generous in giving time to one another, even when we are in disagreement with each other.

Mr. Speaker, at the end of this debate when the previous question is moved, I will be asking for a recorded vote. Of course as the Members of this body approach that vote, they are going to wonder why somebody asked for a recorded vote in a manner that is not within our regular proceedings here.

The reason I do that, Mr. Speaker, is if I am successful, then, in defeating the previous question under the rules of the House I will be able to offer an amendment to the rule that will allow and protect against points of order, an amendment to the appropriations bill that will grant to the President a line-item veto authority.

I take this action not because I am disappointed in or lack any regard for the work done by the Appropriations Subcommittee on this HUD appropriations bill. I think it is very clear that we in this body must understand and appreciate the hard work and the sincere work done by the Appropriations Committee in fulfilling the limits of their 302(b) allocations, and even indeed in some cases going beyond.

The fact of the matter is we are about to close out a fiscal year with a $230 billion deficit despite what has been in effect good efforts of this body to control spending, the deficit stays out of control.

The American people have indicated in poll after poll that we must get this spending under control; and indeed, as you know, there have been efforts made on each appropriation bill that we have dealt with on this floor to amend the bill and reduce spending on a line item basis by Members of this body.

Some 26 amendments have been offered, and all but 2 or 3 have been voted down, giving us a clear indication that the body is not prepared to make these extra necessary cuts on a line item basis.

Realizing that, I hit upon the strategy to try then to give the President that authority which he requested in his State of the Union Message when he said, "Give me the authority to make the cuts; I'll take the heat."

If we cannot pass the cut amendments, we have got to pass the buck; but in one way or another, Mr. Speaker, we have got to gain control of this spending.

It is for that reason that I went to the Committee on Rules and requested, carrying with me a letter signed by over 90 Members of this body. I asked for a rule that would allow me to make this amendment to the HUD appropriations bill and I was denied.

Consequently, I am compelled, then, if I am to pursue this, to take this extraordinary action and ask the Members of this body to join me in voting no when the previous question is ordered; so that as we defeat the previous question, we can then bring that amendment to the floor and let the Members of this body work their will with an up or down vote that will allow line-item veto authority for the President of the United States.

I must remind the Members of the body that not only have the people of this Nation spoken in poll after poll about their concern about the spending, but they overwhelmingly support this kind of authority to be granted to the President.

I might also point out that in my peculiar amendment, we are by and large replicating the language of the Budget Impoundment Control Act of 1974 where indeed this kind of authority did exist for the President where, if indeed this body does not approve of his specific line item cuts, they can override him with a 50-percent or majority veto.

So it does not have the stringent two-thirds requirement of the regular veto power. We have given this body every opportunity to work its will, we ask now for the opportunity to give the President the power and the authority to assist us in this difficult business of cutting spending, while reserving for us in this body the right to override.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Members of the body to vote no on the previous question.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE].

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and in support of the bill, which this rule makes in order, H.R. 5313, the HUD-independent agencies appropriations bill for 1987.

In particular, I want to applaud the efforts of the gentleman from Massachusetts, Chairman BOLAND, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN], the ranking minority member of this Subcommittee on Appropriations as they relate to the housing and community development sections of the bill.

These programs fall under the authorization of the Committee on Banking, and I have had an opportunity to discuss the bill with both of these gentlemen, and think they have done a good job.

This past June, the House considered H.R. 1, the Housing Act of 1986. As an alternative to that, I offered a substitute, H.R. 4756, which I believe was a balanced, well-rounded legislative approach which stayed within the bounds of reality as dictated by the rather substantial budget deficit that we now face.

Although at that time I did not receive a majority of the Members votes in support of my substitute, I am pleased to see the HUD appropriations figures before us today for assisted housing do reflect the cornerstone of that substitute which I offered at that time.

□ 1245

That is a belief that it is necessary to set a new standard of priorities in order to provide the greatest amount of assistance for the least amount of money, or the amount of money which is realistically available for housing. The primary example of this is the issue of new construction units versus modernization of existing public housing units. In this regard the appropriations bill does provide no appropriation for new public housing units with the agreed-upon exception of Indian housing units.

The primary example of this is the issue of new construction units versus modernization of existing public housing units. In this regard, the appropriations bill provides no appropriation for new public housing units with the agreed upon exception of Indian public housing units. Such funds that would have gone to new construction have been used to increase funding for the public housing modernization program. This reflects a significant redirection in Federal housing policy and is consistent with the Bartlett amendment which overwhelmingly passed the House during consideration of H.R. 1.

Finally, for assisted housing the appropriations bill reflects the administration's request for 50,000 housing vouchers. Housing vouchers can be the key to alleviating some of the problems associated with low-income housing assistance at a much less expensive and faster rate than costly production programs.

The appropriations bill also contains credit limits of $80 billion for FHA and $132.5 billion for GNMA. In view of this past years FHA activity and a continued decline in mortgage rates I fear that the 1987 FHA credit limit of $80 billion will not be enough. I believe the level should be $100 billion and I will support efforts to raise the FHA figure to that level. I remind my colleagues these are credit limits only and do not represent increased Federal outlays. In fact, with regard to FHA we have negative outlays meaning that the Government collects receipts via premiums which technically reduces the deficit, rather than adding to the deficit.

The bottom line is that I hope the FHA credit limit contained in H.R. 5313 can be resolved so as not to repeat the fiscal year 1986 experience of having to increase the limit on two occasions. The lack of credit authority along with the short-term reauthorizations of FHA, were very disruptive to the American homebuyer and the home finance industry in general, as I'm sure my colleagues remember.

Finally, although I am in general support of the appropriations bill, I do have some concern over certain authorizing language which amends a provision I added to the 1983 housing authorization bill. That provision prohibits rent controls from being placed on projects funded under the Rental Rehabilitation Grant Program, if rent control ordinances were put in effect after November 30, 1983. The language in H.R. 5313 would negate this anti-rent control language and allow rent controls to be placed on projects that are assisted through State programs where the amount of the State assistance exceeds the amount of assistance provided under the Rental Rehabilitation Program.

I understand that this language was included in the bill because the State of New York established a housing trust fund after passage of the 1983 housing bill. Instead of the State changing their statute to conform to the Federal rental rehab statute, the State sought relief by seeking to change the Federal statute.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the legislative history on the issue of rent control with regard to the Rental Rehabilitation Program I do not believe an appropriation bill is the proper vehicle to modify our previously established position. While I will not contest the provision at this time, I would hope that this issue could be deferred until the committee with authorizing jurisdiction has had an opportunity to conduct hearings and review the issue of rent control, as well as other issues, that may be raised with regard to multifamily rental housing by the pending tax reform legislation.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I probably will not take all of those 3 minutes. I appreciate having the time in order to discuss two amendments that I will be bringing to the HUD appropriations bill.

The first one will be a strict limitation that any of the funds so expended under title I be used specifically for domestic goods, products and services. It is, I guess, the buy-American clause. I think it is necessary. I am hoping for support on it.

One of the conditions will be that it will not be able to be offered until the conclusion of the bill in its entirety. At that particular time if the committee, in objection to these particular two amendments, would decide to rise, I would try to have the motion to rise defeated. I would prefer not to do that. This is Friday afternoon, people want to leave. I certainly do not want to belabor this House. But I would like to say this; I think it is high time when you have a situation where we are able to get $4.5 million for the Youngstown Metropolitan Housing Association to refurbish existing low-income housing and they buy heating radiators from Sweden and pipe from Sweden and an LTV pipe factory 5 miles down the road ends up closing, then there is something intrinsically wrong with the thinking of Congress.

I do not want to keep anybody here, but I want to bring this issue and the awareness of these dynamics to the floor of the House.

The second one deals specifically with a parochial issue that I think is of great interest. We have only a part-time outpatient veterans clinic in my district. We have been noticed and notified that they will close down. We have 125,000 veterans who will have to travel at least 60 to 80 miles on an average to get reasonable medical care.

I am going to ask that no money in this particular HUD appropriation bill be used to transport, transfer or transport any of the items or other equipment in that clinic out. I want your help. Our mills helped us when those bombs were flying in the Second World War, and now our people, many of them retired or veterans, now even are being denied these basic types of services.

I will not be able to offer these if the committee says "no." I do not want to have to fight the motion to rise. That is the dilemma that I am in. I am going to be asking for your help. I would appreciate those of you who would support them, hopefully we will not have to go to the term with a contested vote to approve these two amendments; that is not the case. I would hope that there would be that empathy in the House to consider these two issues and, with resolve, give a firm hand of support.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I rise to urge my colleagues, as did the gentleman from Texas, to vote "no" on the previous question so that we can grant the Members another opportunity to debate an issue long desired by the general population, by the public, by our constituents, by the President of the United States, by many Members of Congress and a debate on this issue which has never been granted us on the floor of this House, namely, the line item veto.

We deserve a chance to record our sentiments on this vital piece of budgetary discipline and budgetary theme which we have never had the opportunity to do before.

I myself am contemplating, in the pattern just outlined by the gentleman from Ohio in his concerns, that if we should lose, if the previous question is not defeated, later on when the time comes on the motion to have the committee rise, to oppose that motion and I hope to introduce my own version of a limited line-item veto which would occur within the confines of the HUD appropriation itself and not beyond, but which will break the ice, open the door for an eventual contemplation by this body of the entire structure of a line-item veto to be granted to the President of the United States.

The public wants scrutiny line by line, not only by the Congress but by the President of the United States, whoever he may be.

I might say that whatever we may do in the exercise of trying to promote the line-item veto may not inure to the benefit, if that is what you want to call it, of this current President.

So we are not simply interested in furthering Ronald Reagan's policies, we want this for budgetary control into the next century, whoever may be the President, whoever may have the right to exercise it.

So let us vote down the previous question, give the gentleman from Texas the right to bring the line-item veto within the context of this appropriation and, failing that, I will have to consider very strongly opposing the motion to rise later on to bring in this limited line-item veto that would pertain and obtain to HUD appropriations alone.

I thank the gentleman for the time.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and urge Members to vote for the previous question and for the rule. I think the HUD and independent agencies appropriation bill would be a particularly futile place to experiment with the line-item veto. The fact of the matter is that those parts of the HUD appropriation of which the President disapproves are well known to this House. The administration earlier this year sought to impound some of those funds and defer others. This House did not go along with that. We specifically overrode the deferrals. We allowed the impoundments to expire. It seems foolish to go through that same exercise again in another form, a form, in my opinion, of dubious constitutionality when the mechanism is there in the Budget Impoundment and Control Act of 1974.

It was used by the President. This House and this Congress overruled the President on those issues. You are only going to tie this appropriation bill into knots by going that route.

There are many important policy issues that have to be resolved in this appropriation bill, particularly issues relating to NASA. I think it would be a terrible mistake if we do something which will almost certainly force this bill into a continuing resolution and will destroy any hope we have that we can move forward with this bill without regard to the continuing resolution.

So I would urge my colleagues do not get us in that quagmire. Please vote for the previous question and for the rule.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I urge a "yes" vote on the rule, a "yes" vote on the previous question, and a "yes" vote on the bill itself. It is an important measure that we must pass soon if we are to avoid funding these agencies through a continuing resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Armey amendment, which can only be made if the previous question on the rule is defeated. I, therefore, urge a vote against the previous question when that vote occurs in the House of Representatives.

With all due respect to my good friend from New York, Mr. GREEN, it is about time that the Congress experimented, stuck its toe, a tiny bit, into the waters of fiscal responsibility, and gave this good idea of the line item veto a chance to work in a cost center which is small compared with our whole Government spending program.

The gentleman suggested that a vote for the Armey amendment would throw the bill into the continuing resolution.

I suggest that the bill is already in the continuing resolution, and it is going to take a miracle to handle it otherwise. Give us a chance to vote once on the line item veto in one small place, and give those Members of the House, who want to stand for fiscal responsibility, a chance to vote for it.

I urge a vote against the previous question.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, but I do want to just close debate, taking 1 minute to respond to some of the comments in opposition to ordering the previous question. However, I do want to pause briefly before that to express appreciation to the able gentleman from Texas for his courtesy in advising the committee of his intentions here today. We appreciate that very much.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman urges the House to defeat the previous question so that he can offer an amendment to the rule to make in order a line-item veto amendment to the HUD appropriation.

I must note that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is clearly legislative in character, and requires a waiver of clause 2 of rule XXI. I also have some doubt as to whether the amendment is germane.

Mr. Speaker, there are better, much better, vehicles than the HUD appropriation bill for rewriting the Budget Act or, for that matter, the Constitution.

The people of this country have elected the Members of Congress to write the laws, including appropriations. The Founding Fathers viewed legislative control of the power of the purse as one of the most important safeguards of liberty, and vested it in Congress absolutely in the Constitution. I don't know if we can give away a responsibility that 200 years of history have won for us. But I have no doubt that we should not, and especially not under these circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution and the rules of the House give each Member a right to offer an amendment to the spending numbers in the bill. If the gentleman from Texas or any other Member of this august body feels that any amounts in the bill are too high, his rights or her rights are protected by the rule.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I urge the House to order the previous question and to adopt the resolution. I thank my friends on the other side, Mr. WYLIE, Mr. GREEN, and Mr. QUILLEN for supporting us in these efforts, and after yielding to the gentleman from Texas I will move the previous question.

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just want to clarify one point because I think it is an important point. We have researched our effort, we checked with the Parliamentarian. If we should defeat the previous question, then we will be offering not only an amendment the rule that allows an amendment to the bill but a protection waiver against rule XXI which is commonly given quite frequently by the Rules Committee, quite in conformity with that practice and which could have been granted to me and my 92 cosigners by the Rules Committee and was turned down. So I think we have covered these kinds of parliamentary bases. I appreciate the time of the gentleman.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the clarification of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEILENSON. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman is quite correct that this is not the best vehicle to rewrite the Budget Act or to set overall fiscal policy. The gentleman has done great work in this area, and I only wish that some of his ideas could have gotten before us. While it is not the best vehicle, all the other vehicles are in a locked barn upon blocks with no air in their tires, their battery disconnected. This remains the only one in sight. I thank the gentleman for his good work on the Budget Act.

Mr. BEILENSON. We thank the gentleman for his kind comments. We understand that there are problems and frustrations which the gentleman has.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 226, nays 137, not voting 68, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the note:

Mr. McDade for, with Mr. Daub against.

Mr. McKinney for, with Mr. Schuette against.

Mr. PURSELL and Mr. HERTEL of Michigan changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Messrs. WALGREN, WHEAT, and YATES changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the previous question was ordered.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill, H.R. 5313, and that I be permitted to include tables, charts, and other extraneous material.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT-INDEPENDENT AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1987

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5313) making appropriations for the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and for sundry independent agencies, boards, commissions, corporations, and offices for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to not to exceed 1 hour, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] and myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND].

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5313), with Mr. MACKAY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous consent agreement, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND].

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I might require.

Mr. Chairman, we bring before the Committee today the 1987 appropriations bill for HUD and 17 independent agencies. It is a bill that has the unanimous support of the Subcommittee on HUD-Independent Agencies and the support of the full Committee on Appropriations.

I want to express my appreciation to all the members who serve on the subcommittee, particularly the ranking minority member, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN]. His tireless efforts and constant attention at subcommittee meetings have made the job of all the members of this subcommittee a little easier.

May I also express my appreciation to all the Members on the majority side who have given me and the rest of the Members so much help.

Mr. Chairman, the bill this year totals $54,006,168,700. This amount is about $10.8 billion above the President's original 1987 budget request—with virtually all of that difference arising from assisted housing.

The recommended amount is some $4,141 million below the current 1986 level after Gramm-Rudman—the major difference being revenue sharing—for which no funds have been included in 1987. To date, that program has not been reauthorized.

This bill is within the subcommittee's section 302(b) allocation for both budget authority and outlays. It was a tight squeeze. There were some tough tradeoffs that had to be made to stay within those particular limits. But I think the bill we bring before you today is a fair bill, a balanced bill, and one the House will support.

And let me tell you why you should support it.

This bill, which totals $54,006,168,700, is about $5 million below the subcommittee's section 302(b) allocation.

The 1987 discretionary bill total of $38,895,848,700 is approximately $4 million below the subcommittee's section 302(b) allocation for discretionary accounts.

The 1987 bill total of $54,006,168,700 is $4,141,215,284 below the 1986 enacted level of $58,147,383,984.

The 1987 bill total of $54,006,168,700 is about $294 million below the Senate's section 302(b) allocation of $54,300 million.

And, finally, the 1987 discretionary total of $38,895,848,700 is approximately $504 million below the Senate's section 302(b) allocation of $39,400 million to the HUD Subcommittee.

So by almost any measure, this bill meets all the tests.

Briefly, let me give you some of the highlights. First, in the Department of Housing and Urban Development we have added $8,095 million for assisted housing. This mark is virtually identical to the assumption in the budget resolution for subsidized housing. When the accounting change recommended by the administration is factored in—converting public housing modernization to direct capital grants financing—assisted housing is about $50 million below the comparable 1986 level.

The bill provides a total of 81,500 incremental subsidized housing units. For the first time, we have not recommended funds for new public housing construction. Instead, we have directed much of that money to public housing modernization.

We provide for 50,000 vouchers, 12,000 section 202 elderly/handicapped units, 2,000 Indian housing units, 10,000 section 8 existing, 7,500 section 8 moderate rehabilitation units, and $250 million for approximately 35,000 rental rehabilitation units. In addition, we have provided $225,000 for 10,000 rental development [HODAG] units with bill language to assure that HODAG funds are targeted to areas with low vacancy rates—where the need for additional construction is greatest.

For public housing operating subsidies, we recommend a total of $1.3 billion. This should be sufficient to fully cover the performance funding system needs. Bill language would also make excess energy conservation savings available to help public housing authorities cover liability insurance costs.

The committee has provided increases above the budget request for both FHA and Ginnie Mae loan guarantees—based on the continuing high activity in the housing industry; $80 billion is set as the new FHA mortgage insurance ceiling and a total of $132.5 billion is provided for Ginnie Mae.

For community development block grants, the committee is recommending $3 billion. This is slightly above the current 1986 level after sequestration. For urban development action grants the recommendation is $275 million—or about $40 million below the current level. The committee has found it necessary to make substantial additions to staff at HUD to operate these programs. Altogether an increase of 2,140 FTE is provided above the budget request—due both to increased mortgage activity and to carry out the various assisted housing and community development programs.

Not included in our report are the President's August 14 budget amendments of an additional $3.06 billion for HUD. The increase in budget authority will provide for a $2.53 billion request in assisted housing, will provide a new level of $2.6 billion in community development grants—up from $2.1 billion, and will provide for a $605.3-million request in salaries and expenses, up from $573.8 million.

Also, the amendments provide increased GNMA authority for guarantees of mortgage-backed securities to $125 billion and an increase in FHA guarantee authority to $90 billion.

Now as we move on to title II, let me discuss the larger independent agencies. The Environmental Protection Agency operating programs receive and increase of $60 million above the budget request. These funds have been targeted at priority problems and to respond to critical needs related to the recently passed safe drinking water amendments. We have added $9.7 million for EPA research, $23 million for State grants and a total of 135 work-years in EPA operating programs.

For Superfund, the recommended appropriation is $861.3 million. That is the current level. Because of the delays in Superfund reauthorization, there should be about $600 million available at the end of 1986. So that carryover plus the new apprcpriation should provide a Superfund Program level of almost $1.5 billion in 1987.

In EPA construction grants, we have provided $2.4 billion, the historical program level. However, for both construction grants and Superfund we have included bill language reserving the money for release in a subsequent appropriations bill—after we have a chance to review the authorizing legislation.

For the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the committee has included a total of $614,250,000. This is an increase of $145 million above the budget request. The increase is comprised of $70 million to continue the Emergency Food and Shelter Program at its current rate and $75 million for disaster relief.

The committee made this addition to disaster relief to cover the additional costs that will result from rejecting the administration's proposed legislative and regulatory changes for disaster relief. These changes have been very controversial and bill language has been included preventing the proposed regulations from being implemented in 1987.

There have also been concerns raised over the administration's proposals to terminate the U.S. Fire Administration. The committee has added $6 million to continue the Fire Administration, and we have added $3.5 million for travel stipends and lodging costs for emergency and fire training. With respect to the Flood Insurance Program, report language has been included capping increases in flood insurance premiums to 10 percent in 1987—instead of the 27-percent increase proposed by the administration.

For the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the committee recommends $7,650 million. This is a decrease of $44.4 million below the budget request—but is an increase of $350 million above the assumption in the budget resolution. Basically, the 1987 NASA budget request is obsolete because of the Challenger accident. We have made a number of additions and subtractions, which are detailed in the report, in order to accommodate these changes.

For the space station a total of $410 million has been provided, which is the same as the administration's request. However, the committee has a number of concerns over the development of the space station, which are detailed on pages 43 to 47 of the report.

The thrust of our recommendation attempts to protect against the possibility of squeezes in NASA's budget reducing the benefits that this country will derive from the space station.

The United States is providing the basic infrastructure—and 80 percent of the total cost—and the foreign partners are providing two of the science modules. So our language is intended to assure that the space station is usable from the outset and will produce benefits to the United States commensurate with our investment.

One other point on NASA—as everyone knows. The President has supported a fourth orbiter—a replacement for the Challenger. In fact, just 2 days ago we received a budget amendment for $272 million for the replacement orbiter. Our bill does not include the moneys for that amendment now—but we will try to find those moneys later—either in our negotiations with the Senate or in the continuing resolution.

For the National Science Foundation, we provide a total of $1.550 million in 1987. This marks a new high in spending for the National Science Foundation, an increase of $92 million above the current level. The recommended amount, however, is $135 million below the requested amount. The committee recommendation is based on achieving overall balance in the bill. The National Science Foundation still gets the largest increase of any major agency in the bill. And again this year within the National Science Foundation, we have increased the request for science education—from $89 million to $99 million.

The Selective Service System receives a slight reduction from the budget request in their operating budget—maintaining their funding at the 1986 level. The Selective Service also has adopted regulations which have been controversial, concerning conscientious objectors and draft deferment. Bill language has been included to set aside these changes to the Selective Service System regulations.

For the Veterans' Administration, the committee recommends a total of $26,115,242,000. Again, in 1987 we are forced to provide major increases in the medical care account to maintain existing staffing in VA hospitals and other health care facilities to provide adequate medical care for the growing number of aging veterans. The requested amounts have been provided for the three major VA entitlement programs: compensation and pensions, readjustment benefits—and veterans insurance and indemnities.

So, all in all, I think this is a good bill. It is a balanced bill. It's within our 302 allocation for both budget authority and outlays. We take care of subsidized housing. We meet the most critical problems in NASA, in National Science Foundation, in VA, in EPA, in FEMA, and the other independent agencies. I urge your support of the bill.

I will include a table summarizing the amounts recommended in the bill with comparisons to the 1986 appropriations and the revised 1987 budget requests at this point.

[1] Appropriations in 1986, adjusted by Gramm-Rudman sequestration.
[2] Includes budget amendments of $3,060,605,000 for HUD and $272,000,000 for NASA.
[3] Limitation on corporate funds; administrative expenses.
[4] Limitation on direct loans.

Let me further indicate, Mr. Chairman, that I am conscious of the fact that Members had a very long day and night yesterday and most of the Members are anxious to get away this afternoon. My understanding is that there are relatively few amendments that will be offered to this bill, and I would hope that we could complete consideration of the bill and final passage in 1 hour.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to ask a question. My realtors, mortgage lenders, and first-time home buyers in my district have asked me a question regarding the FHA credit ceiling which I discussed with the gentleman a little earlier.

In this fiscal year FHA has already utilized more than the $100 billion in FHA credit.

What is the subcommittee chairman's information as to the demand for mortgages in the coming fiscal year? Does he anticipate a need to raise the limit above the $80 billion which is in the bill now or at some later date?

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, the subcommittee's recommendation was $97 billion. That level was reduced to $80 billion in full committee because of concern over exceeding the 302 credit allocation. It appears that even if the FHA credit ceiling is raised in the House, consideration of the conference report containing a higher number would be subject to a point of order. That assumes the Senate does not change the House-passed credit limitation amount.

However, if the Senate raises the FHA credit ceiling, the House can agree to a higher amount and bring the amendment back in technical disagreement—outside the conference report for a separate vote. This would only subject that amendment to a point of order, not consideration of the conference report and we could live with that.

Mr. Chairman, I can assure the gentleman from Ohio and all the members of this committee who have an interest in this credit allocation for FHA that we will support that position.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much for his answer.

My information from HUD is that we will need a credit limit of somewhere in the neighborhood of $100 billion for the next fiscal year, and I appreciate the gentleman's cooperation in that regard.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me on that point?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] has raised an important point, and I would like to deal with it a little further. I join, of course, in the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] as to how, as a practical matter, we can deal with that issue at this time. But I think there is a larger issue, and that is the way we count the credit for Budget Act purposes.

I think the Budget Act is right to look at Federal credit guarantees and to impose limits on them because they do represent Federal intrusions into the credit market every bit as much as direct Federal borrowings. However, I think they miscount because in fact much of the FHA activity this past year and probably next year has been and will be refinancings, and refinancings obviously are not intrusions by the Federal Government further into the credit markets. They are simply taking one federally guaranteed credit and replacing it with another. It seems to me that we ought to change the budget process so that we count that accurately and not count refinancings as new intrusions into the credit market.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman makes an excellent point, and I support him in that position.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not again cover the ground that the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on HUD and Independent Agencies of the Appropriations Committee has covered in his remarks. I do want to express my appreciation and, I am sure, that of all the other members of his subcommittee for the leadership he has given us this year, as in the past, in crafting a very important and complex appropriation bill.

Let me simply try to deal with a few of the issues that I think are implicit in what we have done in this bill. First of all, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] pointed out, we have stayed within our limits under the Budget Act, both with respect to budget authority and with respect to outlays, so I think there could be no criticism of the bill in that respect.

In terms of the housing programs, we have tried to conform what we have done in this appropriation bill to the will of the House as expressed during its consideration of H.R. 1 earlier this year. That is not everything that I would like to see in a housing program, but the House expressed itself very clearly, and I think we did the right thing by listening to what the House was telling us. We have gone very heavily into rehabilitation and the use of existing housing rather than new construction. In the one place where we have provided for new construction, the HODAG program, we have specifically provided in the report that that is to be targeted on housing market areas where there is a tight vacancy rate.

Turning to the NASA part of the bill, what was going to be a very difficult budget situation with respect to the NASA programs was, of course, greatly aggravated by the Challenger tragedy earlier this year. Only earlier this week did the Administration finally come to us with a request for $270 million for a replacement orbiter. Given the fact that we are right up against our budget authority limits in this bill, it is not possible at this time to deal with that request, but it is obviously one that we take extremely seriously, and it must be dealt with by the Congress.

We do in our report express a number of concerns with respect to the development of the Space Station Program. There is concern that NASA is over optimistic about how quickly it will be able to get the station into a permanently manned mode of operation, and we therefore are insistent that from the beginning the station when it gets up there be able to perform useful work for the country.

We are also concerned that, in our negotiations with foreign governments on their participation in the station, we will not wind up in a situation where because of budget pressures they are getting all the technological benefits of it and we are simply providing a transportation vehicle for their experiments. That, too, we have addressed in the report.

With respect to the National Science Foundation, although we did not provide all the money that the administration requested, that is proportionately the largest increase in this bill for the major agencies covered by the bill. I think it represents an important investment for the future in the development of American science and technology and in science education.

Finally, I should make the point that this bill does not deal with the problem of general revenue sharing. The full Appropriations Committee considered that issue and decided that in view of the lack of action by the House on the authorizing bill, this bill would not be an appropriate vehicle by which that question could come to the floor of the House. However, that is a question that the House may want to address before we adjourn, either via the authorization bill or the continuing resolution. I simply want the Members to understand that this appropriation bill has normally carried that appropriation, and it is not in here because the program is not authorized and is currently scheduled to expire on September 30.

In conclusion, I think we bring you a bill that is as good as it could be under the circumstances. None of us is happy with the limitations we face, but we have honored the limitations that are imposed upon us in the budget process. Within those limitations I think we have done a yeoman job in meeting the concerns in the various areas that this bill covers. I should hope the House would agree with us and would adopt the bill.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to a distinguished member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TRAXLER].

Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the bill. I commend the chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] for his excellent work on behalf of the committee in reporting both the bill and the report. I am very pleased with the language of the bill and the report, most especially those areas that deal with the Environmental Protection Agency and the question of ways to control fuel pump emissions.

The committee has directed that the EPA review a number of issues and report back to the Congress by December 1986 before proposing any regulations and it appears that based on current information their proposed rules may be ineffective and perhaps even unnecessary.

Also, I support the decision on the part of the committee not to further fund the Asbestos Hazard Abatement Program. It is my hope that we will be able to resume funding in the near future when we are convinced that the EPA will make use of appropriated funds that we have already done in a timely fashion and when we know, in addition, that appropriate and consistent reinspection is being accomplished, along with enhanced efforts to provide for contractor training and certification activities for which the committee has provided funding in 1987.

Mr. Chairman, the report of our committee regarding funding for the Environmental Protection Agency was amended during full committee consideration to bring to the attention of the Agency the concern that many of us have about the way in which the Agency is proceeding with respect to nationwide controls on gasoline vapor emissions from the refueling of motor vehicles.

There are two primary ways to control emissions: control them at the fuel pump, or control them at the fuel receptacle of vehicles, and this assumes that controls beyond the ones currently in place are both necessary and effective. Our concern is that EPA may not have developed sufficient data upon which to base a judgment of these alternatives. That is why the report specifically directs EPA to review a number of issues and report back to Congress by December 1986 before proposing any regulations that based on current information appear to be ineffective and unnecessary.

We expect EPA to comply with this directive.

I also rise, Mr. Chairman, to discuss the fact that the committee has postponed further funding for the asbstos hazard abatement loans and grants for our Nation's schools. I stress the word postponed, because it is my hope that we will resume funding in the near future, when we are convinced that EPA will make use of appropriated funds in a timely fashion and when we know that appropriate and consistent reinspection is being accomplished, along with an enhanced effort to provide contractor training and certification, activities for which the committee has provided funding in fiscal year 1987.

I remain a strong supporter of the Asbestos Hazard Abatement Program and was happy to join with the other Members of the House in approving H.R. 5073, the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act of 1986 in August. I look forward to the program's reauthorization and improvement in the coming months.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAXLER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan, the chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee, for a colloquy with the chairman.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Michigan, who is my dear friend, and I commend the committee and the distinguished subcommittee chairman for the outstanding work done here on the legislation before us.

I would thank the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Michigan especially for their support for the language found at page 62 of the committee's report accompanying H.R. 5313. That language directs the Veterans' Administration to adopt the so-called "dual campus" approach in replacing the existing VA hospital at Allen Park, MI. The dual campus approach, agreed to by all sectors of the southeastern Michigan veteran, educational, governmental, and business sectors nearly 2 years ago, will, I believe, and will in the mines of all, best serve the medical care needs of the veteran population of southeastern Michigan. I commend the distinguished chairman and the distinguished gentleman from Michigan for their support of this approach.

I would like at this time to ask my dear friend, the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] whether it is his intention and the intention of the committee that this language serve as an integral part of the legislative history of this appropriations bill and whether it is the gentleman's intention to use the very considerable powers of persuasion that he possesses and that the subcommittee possesses to insure that the VA complies with this language.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. TRAXLER. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to respond to the gentleman from Michigan, the all-powerful chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee, whose persuasive powers are well known, not only in Congress but in the executive branch, as well.

I would say to my distinguished colleague that it is the intent of the committee that this language serve as an expression of the committee's intent. The committee expects its directive to be complied with.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I thank my dear friend. He has served the Nation well.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAXLER. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey for the purpose of engaging in a colloquy.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, just for clarification on what the committee has done with regard to the Superfund, and I commend the committee because I think what they have done is appropriate and fitting.

It is my understanding that the actions that will be taken here today will result in making available appropriations in the amount of $1.46 billion for 1987 in two components, a $600 million carryover from last year and $861 million new spending authority to be carried next year, but that both of these provisions are contingent upon authorizing legislation being enacted into law by this body with the President's signature and that those appropriations will be available only upon that activity and that action being taken.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. TRAXLER. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, in response to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey, let me say that the gentleman is probably one who is as well versed on the problems of the Superfund as anyone in this Chamber.

The figures that the gentleman states with reference to Superfund are correct. There will be approximately $1,461,000,000 available for Superfund in fiscal year 1987, based on language carried in this bill and as the result of the carryover from 1986. And any of these funds not obligated in 1987 would carryover until 1988 and beyond to expand Superfund, and it would be subject to appropriations.

Mr. FLORIO. Subject to authorization?

Mr. BOLAND. Yes, subject to authorization and appropriation.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his cooperation.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to note an unfortunate omission in H.R. 5313—funding currently authorized under the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act [ASHAA] for schools to clean up hazardous asbestos. I would like to add that Chairman DINGELL and Mr. LENT share my concern regarding this omission. We all know that asbestos is a known human carcinogen which can cause lung cancer, mesothelioma and asbestosis when airborne fibers of the mineral are inhaled. Since children breathe five times faster than adults, they are particularly susceptible to the effects of asbestos inhalation. For this reason, asbestos-containing material in school buildings is such a potentially disastrous problem.

The House recently passed H.R. 5073, the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act, which is a comprehensive response to the asbestos-in-schools problem. The legislation requires the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] to prescribe proper inspection procedures, difine the circumstances when asbestos must be cleaned up and set standards for the proper transport and disposal of asbestos wastes. EPA must also establish a contractor accreditation program that the States must adopt to ensure that only qualified contractors are hired for any asbestos-related work.

H.R. 5073 mandates that schools must complete an inspection or reinspection according to the EPA standards, develop a management plan describing the manner in which any asbestos will be responded to, and clean up any potentially hazardous asbestos.

Chairman BOLAND, in urging the House to support H.R. 5073, stated that it addresses the problems the Appropriations Committee had with regard to the existing school grant and loan program, most notably that money was being spent on shoddy cleanup work. With the passage of H.R. 5073, we can feel confident that work will be performed properly. As a result, the authorized funds in the grant and loan program should be appropriated.

We require much from the schools in H.R. 5073. From reinspection to abatement, schools will incur many expenses to provide for the safety of the Nation's schoolchildren. While I am pleased that the Appropriations Committee has included $5 million in H.R. 5313 to help schools cover the cost of performing the reinspections, I am concerned that no money has been appropriated to assist the schools in cleaning up the asbestos.

To date, over $90 million has been provided to schools to cleanup asbestos under the grant and loan program. But that is not enough to cover much of the cost of abating asbestos. Providing any portion of the authorized level of $100 million is truly necessary.

ASHAA is not a gold-plated program. Money is provided to schools that most need it. School districts receiving the assistance must show that they have both financial need and hazardous conditions in their schools. Furthermore, 75 percent of the money is distributed as loans while just a quarter of the money is provided in the form of grants. We can be sure the money will be spent properly given the strict guidelines set forth in H.R. 5073.

This grant and loan program is important. By providing money to schools to assist cleaning up hazardous asbestos, we are making a sound investment in America's future. We will be protecting the 15 million school children—almost one-third of the Nation's school population—who are currently exposed to the potentially deadly substance in their school buildings.

Mr. TRAXLER. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me say that there is one other important area in the bill and the report that the Members should be aware of, and I am sure they are. That relates to FEMA and disaster relief funds. As you know, the administration has been attempting, through the administrative rulemaking process, to significantly cut back on the Federal share of disaster relief. This bill and the report directs language that blocks those rules from being implemented. In addition, the bill provides $175 million for disaster relief for FEMA, which is up from the requested level of $100 million.

Now, we have no control over when disasters occur, nor have we any control over how severe they are going to be.

Let me say right now at this time in my district we have Lake Michigan. We are under water, very, very severe flooding. It is a tragedy. It is harming us and unfortunately it has killed a number of people in our State. It is going to harm small business and farmers. It is a booming disaster. The intervention and the assistance from FEMA are going to be critical and absolutely necessary, as my State is suffering, regretfully, millions and millions of dollars of damage now. We are going to need this program. We are going to need this money.

I am confident that the committee, should the administration later on want more funding for FEMA, I am confident the chairman, as he has in the past, and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] will honor such a request.

This is an essential and vital program. I wish to extend my personal thanks to the chairman and the other members of the committee for making certain that the language is in the bill which stops that rulemaking takeaway language from going into effect that the administration was proposing.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT].

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to commend the very able chairman of the HUD and Independent Agencies Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. BOLAND of Massachusetts. I commend also the very able ranking member, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. GREEN]. They and the other members of the subcommittee have rendered yeoman service to the veterans of our Nation by their works on the Veterans' Administration appropriation for 1987.

Mr. Chairman, in these times of careful and very necessary congressional scrutiny of all appropriations requests, the Veterans' Administration is treated very fairly by the bill before us, and I support it as it relates to veterans programs.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 5313 is immensely fair to Veterans' Administration medical programs. It essentially provides for a current services budget by restoring a suggested reduction of some 8,800 employees. It also provides money to implement the new Veterans' Administration health care reforms which were legislated earlier this year. It increases the research budget by some $5 million over the budget request. It provides sufficient construction funds for that program to proceed in an orderly way. It further provides funds to implement a new Veterans' Administration policy on parking facilities. And it doubles the Federal commitment for State homes, a program that is an excellent example of Federal/State relationships. All in all, Mr. Chairman, it is an excellent Veterans' Administration medical budget.

Mr. Chairman, the suggested funds for the central office management of the medical program, the suggested funds for compensation and pensions, the suggested funds for the GI bill and for vocational rehabilitation, and the suggested funds for general operating expenses are also adequate unto the need.

Mr. Chairman, this is a frugal but adquate budget. Of course, it doesn't do all the things or pay for all the things that many would want it to do. But in these times of fiscal restraint, veterans have fared well and, again, I commend the members of the subcommittee and particularly Mr. BOLAND and Mr. GREEN.

Mr. Chairman, the annual congressional process on budgets for the several departments and agencies of our Government always provokes alarm at its beginning. However, it is the end result that counts. This year that result tells us the Congress understands its commitment to our Nation's veterans, their dependents and survivors. It tells us the Congress keeps its commitments. I am pleased to wholeheartedly endorse the veterans section of H.R. 5313 and I urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN], who preceded me as the ranking minority member on this subcommittee.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from New York, and let me join in congratulating the very distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] and the distinguished minority member, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN], whose expertise in crafting this bill is tremendous. I think we are very proud to have the bill before us.

Having served on this subcommittee for some 12 years now, let me just say that this bill is a critical bill in many areas.

First, it is a bill for our cities. It is really a cities' bill because it contains funding for our housing programs, our urban development action grant programs, our community development block grant programs. I have seen the results of this program as they are at work in our cities today in leveraging private capital, in improving the cities and the quality of life in our cities themselves.

Second, also it is a bill for the environment, because it does provide a little funding for our environmental programs, so it is also very responsible for the quality of life in that area and is a critical bill particularly for its funding of the Superfund, which is important at this time.

This is a bill for our sciences, our future, our technology, because that is all funded in this bill. Those of my colleagues who are interested in that area must realize that this bill is critical to the future of our scientific progress.

Finally, of course, it is a bill for our veterans. It takes care of our veterans. It provides them benefits. It provides for all kinds of veterans benefits, health, education, and programs in other areas.

So as my colleagues consider this critical piece of legislation, I hope they understand that this is a bill that is a major piece of legislation, that has been the product of a great deal of work by the staffs, by the chairman and the ranking minority member and the other members of the subcommittee.

Mr. Chairman, I heartily endorse the bill.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES], a valued member of the subcommittee.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, I thank my distinguished chairman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5313. As a member of the subcommittee which drafted this important bill, I wish to say that it continues to be one of the great privileges of my tenure to work with the distinguished chairman from Massachusetts, ED BOLAND. He is an extremely hardworking chairman, who is responsive and imminently fair when considering programs that are important to the people of this Nation. I, personally, appreciate his cooperation and consideration. Additionally, I want to express by appreciation to the very able ranking minority member, BILL GREEN. It is a great privilege to serve on this subcommittee with both of these distinguished gentlemen.

Mr. Chairman, This bill is one of the most important and diverse of the 13 appropriations bills that this body will consider this year. This bill fulfills one of the most basic human needs of thousands of individuals and families throughout America, the need for decent and affordable housing. This bill ensures that adequate funding is provided in our effort to see that our environment is clean and free from the threat of toxic substances. It takes the lead in embarking the Nation on an exciting and promising new venture, as we prepare for the next quantum leap in space, the building of the space station. This bill appropriates vital funding for science education and scientific research programs, and disaster relief funding to aid areas of our Nation that face unanticipated natural disasters. It appropriates funding to ensure that quality medical care and an appropriate level of benefits be made available to our Nation's 27 million veterans. Certainly, residents of my district, and the people of this Nation rely heavily on the services that this bill makes possible.

In total, H.R. 5313 provides $54.0 billion in new budget authority for fiscal year 1987. The total is $10.4 billion more than the administration requested, and $1 billion less than was appropriated for comparable programs in fiscal year 1986. The bill provides $9.6 billion in fiscal year 1987 for a variety of housing programs, including $8.1 billion for housing assistance. Low-income citizens of this country cannot afford to have the Federal Government withdraw its commitment to public housing programs, which have tragically been cut by 65 percent since this administration came to power.

In addressing the critical needs of large public housing authorities throughout the Nation, the bill includes $1.3 billion for public housing operating subsidies. This funding is particularly important for my district of Cleveland, OH, which has the oldest housing stock in the Nation, some of which is 50 years old. According to public housing officials in my district, because HUD has so severely underfunded modernization needs, it will take more than $80 million in the coming years to redress this critical problem. The Congress has already exercised wise judgment in rejecting the administration's request to rescind all modernization funds appropriated for fiscal year 1986; and, I further believe that this bill properly rejects the administration's request to make modernization money available only in emergency situations.

I am expecially pleased that this bill appropriates $3 billion in fiscal year 1987 for the Community Development Block Grant Program, and $275 million for the Urban Development Action Grant Program, two Federal programs that have served as valuable tools in moving our Nation's cities away from deterioration and decay, and toward economic revitalization and community pride. In Cleveland, OH, these programs have been effective in creating jobs, providing social services for the low-income elderly and handicapped, weathering homes, developing deteriorating communities, and stimulation private capital investment.

This bill also includes $7.7 billion for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, with $410 million earmarked for continuing our efforts on space station development. My constituents are eager to see that we move forward with this enormous undertaking, in which Cleveland, OH, will serve as the NASA center for the development of space station power. As I know my colleagues are fully aware, 1986 has been an especially difficult year for NASA, as the agency continues to recover from the aftermath of the shuttle accident of January 28. As a nation, we all share a deep sadness at the loss of the Challenger and its brave crew. As NASA continues to recover from this national tragedy, I urge all of my colleagues to join together in support of Dr. Fletcher, NASA's Administrator, as he continues the difficult task of rebuilding our space effort. Although we may disagree on methods, we must not lose sight of or jeopardize our long-term goal for a space program that both ourselves and our children can look to with pride.

Additionally, I strongly support the $99 million recommended in H.R. 5313 for science and engineering activities under the National Science Foundation account. This represents a $10 million increase above the administration's request, and is urgently needed to address the critical problem of year's of underfunding science and engineering education. In addition, these funds will assist more minorities and women in entering the scientific job market, where they are currently highly underrepresented. Blacks for example, make up only 2 percent of all employed scientists and engineers in the United States, even though they represent over 10 percent of the overall labor force. Only by continuing a strong Federal commitment to science education can we hope to seriously redress this problem.

Mr. Chairman, the 15 agencies that will receive new budget authority through H.R. 5313 administer hundreds of programs that substantially benefit the people of this Nation. I strongly endorse H.R. 5313, and urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY], the chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I want to pay tribute to the very able chairman of the subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND], and to the very able ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN], for their leadership in bringing to the House a very good appropriations measure for veterans' programs. If this measure is adopted, veterans benefits and services during fiscal year 1987 will be secured. Given the current economic situation, I think the committee on appropriations has treated veterans very fairly.

During the past several years, I have taken the floor to express my appreciation to my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee for their work in behalf of veterans. Seldom do conflicts arise between the authorizing and Appropriations Committees on veterans' issues. We work together and year after year the House lets veterans know that it cares about them.

The administration talks a lot about its commitment to veterans, but year after year its budget is woefully inadequate. For example, this year the administration's proposed budget would require a staff reduction in VA hospitals and clinics of more than 8,000 employees; inpatients treated would be reduced by 57,000 from the previous year, and outpatient visits would be cut by 1,114,000. The administration proposed a 41 percent reduction in VA construction program, a cut of more than $330 million from the current fiscal year. It proposed that the funding fee paid by veterans to get a home loan be increased from 1 percent to 2 percent—a 100 percent increase over the current fee. The administration's proposal would set the fee at 3.8 percent in 1990 and thereafter. None of these things will occur if the reported bill is adopted and becomes law.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, despite the clear intent of the House to maintain current services for the VA budget, the Administration plans to cut beneficiary travel for veterans by $90,000,000 in the next fiscal year, a cut that would eliminate the travel allowance for all veterans, including the service connected, except in emergency cases.

Mr. Chairman, the Appropriations Committee has rejected most of the reductions proposed by the Administration and I commend my distinguished colleagues for doing so. Rather than cut back on veterans programs, the committee is proposing a budget that would generally allow for current services during the next fiscal year. The reported bill would:

First, provide $396,159,000 above the administration's request to restore the 8,848 health care personnel cut proposed by the administration. It is expected that these additional resources will permit the VA to provide treatment for an estimated 65,482 inpatients and 1,264,000 outpatients above the administration's 1987 requested levels.

Second, provide $8,470,000 to support 459 full-time personnel to implement medical care eligibility reforms enacted by the Congress last year (Public Law 99-272). This is the level of resources originally requested of OMB by VA. These additional staff will assure that veterans will not experience delays in gaining timely admission to VA hospitals and clinics. In addition, adequate staff can be provided to administer the third-party reimbursement legislation enacted earlier this year.

Third, increase the medical and prosthetic research budget by $5 million over the President's request.

Fourth, increase the budget for major construction projects by $81,500,000 over the administration's request. This increase will provide funds for the outpatient and clinical addition project at New York City; $6 million to acquire the site for a new medical center at Palm Beach, FL; design funds for the replacement medical center at Pittsburgh, and design funds for a 120-bed nursing home care unit at New Orleans.

In addition, the bill contains $26,000,000 for the revolving fund authorized several years ago by our committee for parking garages to be constructed in urban areas where parking facilities are not available to hospital employees and visitors. From the inital appropriation to the revolving fund, we would expect parking garages to be constructed in Baltimore, Durham, San Francisco, and Syracuse.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that the bill contains $42,400,000 for the construction of state extended care facilities, about double the appropriation made last year. We should do everything we can to assist States who want to help provide health care to our Nation's veterans, especially nursing home care, and I am very pleased that the committee has appropriated all of the funds requested by the administration for this program for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, veterans can be proud of this bill and I hope they fare as well in the other body.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take just a few minutes to call to my colleagues' attention what is a small, easily overlooked but vital expenditure in this appropriation: The Federal Emergency Management Agency's Disaster Fund. This fund provides the moneys to assist both the communities and individual victims of disasters.

When the President's budget was forwarded to the Congress earlier this year only $100 million was requested for FEMA's Disaster Fund. Last year that request was for $196 million and over the last 10 years, average annual obligations have totaled $342 million. I, along with several of my colleagues, expressed serious doubts about the agency's ability to fulfill its congressional mandate at a funding level that was far below what has been needed in recent years.

It quickly became clear that FEMA was going beyond the normal cost-saving initiatives that the entire Federal Government has responsibly been adopting in recent years. Instead, the agency was undertaking a concerted, but indirect effort to relieve the Federal Government of its congressionally mandated responsibility to provide meaningful peacetime disaster assistance. Specifically, by rules offered in the Federal Register on April 18 of this year, FEMA proposed to drastically reduce, by $75 million, the amount of funds available to assist local communities that are trying to recover from the devastating effects of hurricanes, floods, tornadoes, and fires.

My deep concern regarding FEMA's national priorities in 1986 was precipitated by a series of devastating tornadoes that ripped through my district resulting in a Federal disaster declaration for the area. I witnessed the most powerful series of tornadoes in Pennsylvania's history cause 65 deaths and an estimated $250 million in damage. To date, FEMA has provided $7 million to help Pennsylvania's communities and non-profit institutions recover from this tragedy. There is no conceivable way that the communities in my district, many of which were literally sawed in half by tornadoes with wind speeds ranging from 150 to 300 miles per hour could have even started the recovery process without a considerable amount of support from all levels of government and the private sector.

Today, I remain convinced that FEMA's assistance was essential to the recovery effort. However, under the proposed regulations of April 18, the communities in my district would have received no money for reconstruction. FEMA would have labeled the catastrophe a "smaller disaster" thereby rendering the affected communities ineligible for any Federal disaster assistance. Incredibly, by FEMA's own estimation 61 of the last 111 Presidentially declared Federal public disasters would not qualify for any help from the Federal Government. Nearly every State in this country would have found itself with drastically reduced and, in some cases, no funds to help return their disaster devasted communities to their predisaster condition.

There is, in my opinion, absolutely no substantive justification for FEMA's use of the regulatory process to drastically curtail public disaster assistance. I'm pleased to report to you today, however, that the Appropriations Committee has wisely stopped FEMA from decimating Federal disaster assistance. The bill orders FEMA to withdraw the proposed regulations. It also restores the estimated $75 million that would have been saved thus bringing the total appropriation to a more realistic $175 million. In addition, I will continue my efforts to amend the Disaster Relief Act by mandating specific fiscal responsibilities for the Federal Government that I believe will reflect the Congressional intent of making the Federal Government a meaningful partner in the recovery effort after a disaster.

Congress never has and must never retreat from its responsibility to the victims of natural disasters. This appropriation will allow FEMA to meet that responsibility and I urge my colleagues to vote for passage.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] for his appearance before our committee. He was one of the many effective spokesmen who disagreed with the regulations established by FEMA with respect to disaster relief. And he was right.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to discuss and to support the priorities that are set in the subsidized housing section of this bill, and I commend the efforts and the good will of the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND], and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee [Mr. GREEN], in establishing priorities that are set by this appropriations bill.

I have one caveat, and that is that in the aggregate this total piece of legislation, H.R. 5313, is still a large appropriations bill. There are a number of agencies that are included, and I understand that the administration and others have some objections to some of the spending levels in other sections of the bill. So I will listen to the debate on those sections.

In the housing section—and I serve on the housing authorizing subcommittee—it is my judgment that the committee has done a good job—not perfect—but they have adopted the priorities that have been set by this House in the appropriation sections of subsidized housing, adopted the priorities that were set by the housing legislation at the end of a week-long debate on this floor.

I have a good deal of respect, as do all Members, for these two gentlemen. They have earned the respect of this entire House by their skill and by their legislative fairness, because I know that they do not necessarily agree with each of the priorities in every respect, and they participated in the debate rather vigorously. It is to their credit and the credit of the entire Committee on Appropriations that they did enact the priorities so far as they can do within the appropriations process.

I would specify some of those priorities. For example, in the area of new construction the House has said several times that before we spend scarce Federal dollars to build new units of Government housing at a cost of some $60,000 per unit, that we ought to spend those scarce resources to repair units instead, and so last year, in fiscal year 1986, the appropriations bill on final passage had built some 5,000 new units of public housing at a cost of $1 billion in total, and this year there are no funds appropriated for new construction.

Second, this committee report, this bill, virtually doubles the funding for repair and modernization, thus increasing the living standards and the livability of tenants of public housing throughout this country. It is estimated that some 36 percent of all the public housing in this country is in need of repair, and if you allow for the new capital grant formula that is in this bill, the $1.4 billion that is appropriated in this bill after adjusting for the change in the financing method doubles from fiscal year 1986 the money spent for repair and modernization.

In section 202 the committee maintained 12,000 new units, and that is consistent with the views of this House.

In the area of certificates and vouchers this bill provided for 60,000 new certificates and vouchers, thus providing an emphasis on those items of assistance directly to low-income families where you can obtain the maximum assistance and allow people to live where they want to and not where the Government chooses where they live. And within that 60,000 this bill provides 50,000 of those certificates in the form of vouchers, which has the maximum flexibility.

Overall new units in this bill are some 92,750 units, about the same number that we had all agreed on all along, but what is important is that this appropriations bill maximizes the scarce Federal resources to obtain those 90,000 new units in the most cost-effective way possible.

I would note that there are two sections with which I do have some concern. First is the very large increase in the HODAG programs, from some $75 million to $225 million, and second is that I think we did make a mistake in the bill by modifying the 1983 prohibition of rent controls on units assisted by the Federal Government.

But the bottom line is that this appropriations bill does set the right priorities and sets the priorities that we would hope to achieve in the authorizing legislation.

In my remaining minute I will speak on the authorizing legislation, because reform is needed now—reform in aggregate spending, reform of the nature that was adopted by the housing bill, and it is now at the point that it is going to be up to everybody in the other body, in this body, in the administration, in HUD, and elsewhere, to decide that we are not satisfied with the status quo, and the only way to change the status quo of assisted housing programs in this country beyond what the Appropriations Committee has done is going to be to adopt authorizing legislation of a reform nature, of a nature that has been contemplated by the housing bill by this committee, adopt with that some limit on aggregate spending, and change the status quo through the adoption of authorizing legislation.

It is my hope that this body, that this Congress, this year, adopts authorizing legislation and gets on with that task of reforming assisted housing programs, and I commend the committee for their fine work.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5313—the fiscal year 1987 HUD-independent agencies appropriations bill. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Space Science and Applications, I particularly wish to commend Chairman BOLAND and his subcommittee for their insight and their leadership concerning our Nation's space future.

In the time since the Challenger tragedy, NASA and America's space program have been lacking in direction. We have reached the nadir and have just begun the resurgence to regain our preeminence as the leading spacefaring nation in the world.

Last week, we witnessed the successful launching of a Delta rocket at the Kennedy Space Center. NASA has a new, experienced Administrator. A number of new managers at NASA are providing fresh insight and decisiveness. This appropriations bill and our authorizing bill—due on the floor shortly—are providing direction to the help NASA to get back on its feet.

And, finally, the administration has recently requested the funding to begin construction of a fourth orbiter. These are all positive indicators—America will retain its position as the number one spacefaring nation—but we cannot hesitate.

This bill at a level of $7.65 billion is sufficient under the Gramm-Rudman budget realities. In truth we should be spending much more on the Nation's civilian space program to keep our leadership.

I share the concern of Chairman BOLAND and his subcommittee about progress in the space station program.

We have new and very able management in the space station program at NASA, but progress has not been as fast as originally anticipated. The Congress has the duty to exercise its oversight and to be sure that the taxpayer gets the best space station for the money. Not only do we need to get our shuttle fleet back into operation, we need to proceed to this next logical step—the space station. America cannot afford to slip back from the edge of technology.

I commend the chairman for his leadership on this bill before us. I urge its adoption by my colleagues.

□ 1355

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

I would like to propose a question to the gentleman from Texas concerning Mr. LOEFFLER's amendment adopted in the full committee on the HUD—independent agencies appropriations bill. Basically, that amendment restricts the movement of any employee from the Johnson Space Center to any other NASA facility. I recognize why that amendment was offered, And I understand the gentleman's position and his concern in regard to the Houston Space Center and that Center's contribution to the Space Station Program. Those concerns are being addressed by NASA currently and I am hopeful that something can be worked out that will be satisfactory to both the Marshall Space Center and the Johnson Space Center.

But in the meantime, as the gentleman knows, one of the objectives of NASA was to move a small number of people from the Johnson Space Center and other NASA centers to Washington in order to consolidate at headquarters the management of the Space Station Program. That move is essential to good management—and perhaps most importantly—it was in response to a direct recommendation of the Rogers Commission. The Commission emphasized the importance of NASA having program control and accountability through the strong centralized management of all NASA programs.

With that as background, it is my understanding that Mr. LOEFFLER and the gentleman do not object to the movement of a small number of Space Station Program management personnel from Houston to Washington—their objection is to the movement of space station personnel and program content from Houston to Marshall.

Is that correct?

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is correct. As he knows, myself and other Members of the Texas congressional delegation are concerned that the traditional role for the Johnson Space Center—which has been to oversee the manned aspects of U.S. space flight—not be seriously eroded by moving pieces of the space station from Houston to Marshall. However, it is not my intention, nor do I believe the intention of the Members of the Texas delegation, to prevent moving the overall program management to Washington—and we would not want to block this from happening.

Mr. BOLAND. I thank the gentleman for that response.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, over the last several weeks, a debate has progressed over the future of the space station program. I as well as many of my colleagues on the Space Science Subcommittee raised concerns over the design of the station and the wisdom of work package changes embodied in Dr. James Fletcher's June 30 announcement.

Today, I am pleased to note that we have made important and encouraging progress toward resolving these questions. The work of the space station design review team at the NASA-Langley Research Center is nearing completion, and I am hopeful that they will report to the Congress soon on design modifications that will answer key safety and efficiency concerns.

At the same time we are hearing resolution on the management efficiency concerns we raised over the distribution of space station work package duties between the Johnson Space Center and the Marshall Space Flight Center.

I would like to take this opportunity to compliment NASA on the good faith progress that has been made recently. I look forward to the completion of these reviews in the near future and to the opportunity to fully study their results. Once we have completed this process, I am confident that the space station program will be on a firm foundation for future progress.

However, as we debate appropriations for NASA, I would like to discuss some other areas of deep concern I have about our Nation's space program—concerns which I know are shared by many of my colleagues.

Mr. Chairman, there is a desparate need for strong leadership in our space policy. Since the devastating loss of the space shuttle Challenger and her crew, our national space effort has been adrift. Decisions that must be made have piled up. Direction and purpose have been lacking. It seems that all we can do is repair some of the physical damage caused on January 28. But no actions have been taken to mend the deeper wounds to the space program: the morale of NASA is at an alltime low: the continuing departure of our veteran NASA personnel, representing decades of experience, could cripple our ability to make new advances in space; and the siphoning off of funds away from the space effort is nothing less than a retreat from our national commitment to leadership in space science and exploration.

How can we solve these deeply disturbing problems in our space program? The key to correcting this discouraging situation lies in regaining the precious momentum that NASA has lost this year, and the leadership to regain that momentum must come from the White House. The Congress stands ready to work with the President in going forward in space.

Today, I call upon the President to act and assure him that we are ready to join him. There are several fronts upon which his leadership is needed.

First, we must have a fourth shuttle orbiter. It is that simple. Without it, the space station, our most daring venture in space since going to the Moon, will be in doubt. Until we have a viable, four orbiter fleet, our capability to do manned work in space will be hobbled. But this is not an area of dispute between Congress and the President; we have called repeatedly for a replacement orbiter, and the President has replied that he too sees this need. Not long ago, we all heard the White House announce its intention to build the replacement for the Challenger. However, one thing seriously lacking in that announcement was a forthright explanation of where the funds will come from. It does no good to commit to a fourth orbiter without accompanying that commitment with a hardnosed and prudent plan for paying for it.

I am deeply disturbed by those in the administration who say that the cost of the fourth shuttle should come out of NASA's ongoing budget. Anyone familiar with NASA's budget knows that they have been squeezed tight as a drum for years. Promising scientific work has been hacked back in all areas, and we have foregone excellent opportunities for space science probes to other parts of our solar system. In fact, the Rogers Commission noted that a contributing factor to the shuttle disaster was insufficient funding for the job we asked them to do. Are we going to repeat that error by exacerbating those very funding problems? I truly hope not.

If the administration will come forward with a reasonable proposal for funding the fourth shuttle, we will support it.

Another area of concern to me is the meager overall funding for NASA. Americans have always been proud of our civilian space effort. We gloried in the heyday of the Apollo Program. And yet today we wonder why we have all these problems. What happened to the giant leaps of advancement we remember from other years? Well, that's pretty simple. We have starved NASA. If you look at the trend in NASA's funding since the Moon shots, there should be no surprise at their difficulties. I am frankly amazed at their successes given such meager funding over the years.

I feel it is time we broke out of that self-defeating approach to our space effort. The President has committed himself to a space station, yet there is uncertainty about coming up with the funding to support that commitment. We need to work together to make NASA healthy again, to build morale among those who have dedicated much of their lives to the space program, and to regain the crucial momentum we have lost.

The time has come to rededicate ourselves to achievement in space. There is no lack of vision and daring on the space frontier, but there is a lack of investment. Let us work together to assure that our investment matches our vision.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. lBOEHLERT].

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I just want to take a moment to commend my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee for producing an outstanding bill which balances our social responsibility with fiscal responsibility. It will be a pleasure to vote for a bill which includes funds for several very important programs, while remaining within the targets set by the budget resolution.

I am especially pleased by the committee's commitment to continuing CDBG's and UDAG's. Although the funding is well below the demonstrated need, it will help to produce jobs and economic development in towns and cities across the country.

Just ask the citizens of Utica, NY, where a UDAG-financed convention center has exceeded expectations, creating jobs and a revitalized downtown. In fact, in 1984 the GAO found that UDAG-financed projects tend to exceed expectations for the number of jobs created and private investment realized. That's a program that pays off, and I am pleased to see the committee realize it.

I am also pleased by our increased commitment to the EPA, whose mandate to protect the environment seems to grow more pressing every year. Poll after poll shows that the American people are willing to pay for a pristine environment, and whether the challenge is acid rain, the Superfund, or clean water, the EPA must be given the resources it needs to research these tough problems and enforce our environmental laws.

The bill provides funds crucial to continue America's commitment to scientific excellence. While the funding levels should be higher, this bill provides money for the National Science Foundation, whose basic research is increasingly concentrating on problems faced by industry. Advances in robotics, supercomputers, and other engineering challenges are vital to improve our economic competitiveness into the 21st century.

And finally, the bill includes money for two small but very important programs, the National Fire Academy and U.S. Fire Administration. These programs help train local firefighters, and enhance prevention and arson investigation. They have contributed to a 50-percent drop in lives and property lost to fire in the past 10 years.

Mr. Chairman, the members of the Appropriations Committee have brought before us a bill which balances many competing interests. As I have explained, they have continued and in some cases strengthened programs which are investments in America's future, and they have done so without losing their fiscal heads. I urge my colleagues to vote yes on this legislation.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend the members of the Appropriations Committee, the chairman and ranking members for their fine work in crafting this important legislation. I especially want to call attention to an important directive which the committee has included in its report accompanying this bill. In its report, the committee has taken notice of legitimate concerns over the safety and effectiveness of using soil blending technology in the disposition of radioactive soil from Superfund remedial action sites.

In my district, these concerns are very real and close at hand. In fact, the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection has announced plans and presently engaged in litigation to dispose of tons of radium-contaminated soil from the Monclair/Glen Ridge Superfund site in Vernon Township, NJ. This State proposal to move 10,000 cubic yards of contaminated soil is only a small part of a larger Federal Superfund cleanup involving up to 200,000 cubic yards of additional waste. The DEP's decision has prompted a justifiable outcry from residents in Vernon, because this State lead agency has failed to follow basic public notice procedures which should be standard practice in all Superfund cleanups.

The DEP has failed to convince the people of Vernon that its disposal technology will not pose a real health risk now or in the future. Its decision to dump this contaminated soil was made by the DEP without consulting Sussex County leaders, without notifying the residents of Vernon Township and without full disclosure of its effects on health and safety.

While the State lead agency in this case has sought to avoid Federal public notice and comment regulations by using extraordinary power granted by an Executive order signed by Governor Kean in 1983, the committee today is putting the Environmental Protection Agency on notice that this kind of disregard for establish process will not be tolerated during the Federal second phase of this cleanup action. EPA is directed by the committee to conduct all necessary studies and follow all standard Superfund procedures for review and comment. This assessment should include an evaluation of all reasonable cleanup alternatives, including alternative disposal methods for this radium-contaminated soil. There can be no shortcuts taken when so many questions as to the safety and effectiveness of this new disposal process remain unanswered.

I commend the committee for including this important directive in its report, and I thank Chairman BOLAND and ranking Member, Mr. GREEN (for their efforts on behalf of my constituents in Vermon.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut. [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, first of all, I want to take this opportunity to commend the chairman of the subcommittee for his hard work in putting this important bill together and bringing it to the House today.

This bill is significant for many reasons, not the least of which are the provisions appropriating funds for the Federal Government's housing assistance programs and for the Veterans Administration. As the chairman of the subcommittee knows, I have served on the Subcommittee on Housing and Urban Development since being first elected to the Congress and, for that reason, I particularly appreciate the dedicated leadership he has shown in the area of housing.

I take this time today, however, not to talk about our housing programs, but rather to discuss the Veterans Administration Hospital in West Haven, CT, and the potential threat posed to its cardiac unit by the VA's plan to close up to one-third of the 51 existing VA heart surgery units.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, the VA hopes to close less busy units and has established 150 heart surgery procedures as its benchmark in determining whether enough procedures are being done to guarantee that our veterans receive medical care from surgeons who are sufficiently experienced.

This plan is shortsighted because it uses an arbitrary figure on the number of procedures, rather than focusing more broadly on the overall quality of care and mortality rates.

Unlike the cardiac units at many other VA hospitals, the VA's cardiac unit in West Haven is almost completely integrated—not merely affiliated—with a teaching hospital, Yale-New Haven Hospital, which indeed is one of the great hospitals of the world.

According to Dr. Irving Modlin, chief of surgery at the Veterans Administration Hospital in West Haven, just under 100 cardiac procedures were performed there in both 1984 and 1985. However, the combined totals for the West Haven VA facility and affiliated Yale-New Haven cardiac unit is 690 procedures in 1984 and 731 procedures in 1985.

The West Haven VA cardiac unit does not have any itinerant surgeons or doctors who can't make the grade elsewhere. Every surgeon appointed at the West Haven heart surgery facility must be a full faculty member at Yale Medical School. Dr. Modlin himself is vice chairman of the university's medical department.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, the West Haven facility's mortality rate is significantly lower than the average mortality rate for similar procedures. The average mortality rate for heart surgery procedures in VA hospitals is 5.3 percent. At the six VA facilities with the greatest number of procedures the mortality rates range from 5 to 6 percent. In West Haven, the average mortality rate over the last 5 years is 4.8 percent and for 1986 now stands at 2.9 percent.

I am quite familiar with the heart surgery program at the West Haven hospital. They have a comprehensive approach to heart care that includes sophisticated diagnostic work and postoperative care, including a solid postoperative support group system which helps patients make necessary adjustments to their lifestyles and stick with them.

If this unit is closed, the VA will lose one if its best facilities and veterans in my district and throughout Connecticut will be forced to travel to either New York City or Boston for surgery and most diagnostic procedures. Others will have to get their treatment at non-VA hospitals, but at the VA's expense.

This isn't going to save the Government any money or assure that my constituents get the best quality of care.

I wonder if the chairman would enter into a colloquy with me to discuss whether he thinks the VA's heart surgery unit in West Haven is the kind of unit that should be closed down.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has spoken to me and I understand he has spoken to the minority with reference to the VA's position on cardiac surgery units. This committee is concerned about the movement within the Veterans Administration to limit some of these activities and to change procedures within veterans hospitals.

The statistics that you have enunciated and that you have indicated today, I think, will clearly indicate that the cardic unit in the West Haven Veterans Administration Hospital should not be closed—for the very simple reason that the procedures that are used there are identical to the procedures that are used in the Yale University Medical Hospital. And the personnel involved in operations there are also used at Yale-New Haven; is that correct?

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BOLAND. I think the gentleman makes a very clear, compelling and forceful case with reference to the VA hospital in West Haven. You have indicated that the mortality rate is running around 2.9 percent, compared to the mortality rate throughout the VA system of better than 5 percent. In addition, the number of procedures has risen to about 700 per year.

Those are impressive statistics. I do not know of any other combination in the United States where you have that kind of affiliation between a hospital of the importance of Yale-New Haven and the West Haven VA that could equal those procedures and those statistics.

I certainly believe that there is great deal of sense to the theory that the quality of heart surgery will depend to a great extent on the experience of the surgeons. To the extent that experience is significant in making a determination about the quality of care at a given facility, it is the number of heart procedures performed by the surgeons themselves that should matter, not where those procedures happen to be performed.

I certainly would express my concern and my opposition, and I am sure the committee would, too, to the closing of the cardiac unit at West Haven.

I want to thank the gentleman for bringing this matter to the committee's attention and assure him that the subcommittee will closely monitor the Veterans' Administration's activity in this area.

□ 1405

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman. I will look forward to working with him if there are future problems on this, and I thank him for his comments.

Mr. BOLAND. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN], a member of the Committee on Science and Technology.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, I want to urge my colleagues to support the HUD-independent agencies appropriations bill which is before the House today.

This bill contains important dollars to improve the quality of health care services for nearly a half million veterans in western Pennsylvania.

Several years ago I became aware that the Veterans hospital and nursing home facilities in Aspinwall, PA, were outdated and inadequate to meet the needs of our veterans. In fact, the Veterans Administration has called the Aspinwall center one of the four VA centers in the country most in need of reconstruction.

Today, thanks to the leadership of committee Chairman JAMIE WHITTEN, subcommittee Chairman ED BOLAND, and committee member and fellow Pennsylvanian JACK MURTHA, this bill provides $5.3 million for the design and engineering of a new veterans medical center and 250-bed nursing home facility. This is the first step in replacing an outdated and overutilized facility, and I am grateful for the understanding that the Appropriations Committee has so obviously demonstrated to our needs in this area.

I also want to salute my colleague BOB EDGAR who, as chairman of the Hospitals and Health Care Subcommittee of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, visited the old hospital in my district and has worked hard to secure the authorization for this project. BOB, whose record on behalf of veterans is well-recognized, has shown a special sensitivity to the health needs of these citizens.

Mr. Chairman, our veterans deserve the best we can give them in health care in view of the sacrifice so many of them gave to our country. Medical needs of veterans are rapidly increasing as many veterans of World War II reach their sixties and seventies. This new Aspinwall facility will become increasingly important in the years ahead. Over 452,000 veterans live in western Pennsylvania.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting this appropriations bill.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to commend my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] for his legislative leadership in bringing the HUD-Independent Agencies appropriations bill to the floor. As chairman of the HUD-Independent Agencies Subcommittee, Mr. BOLAND has accomplished the difficult task of crafting a balance between the urgent necessities of subsidized housing and the important work of Federal agencies such as the National Science Foundation.

Recently, the Congress passed and the President signed the National Science Foundation Authorization Act for fiscal year 1987, Public Law 99-383. This new law reflects our shared belief that basic research and the National Science Foundation play a unique role in our long range economic well being.

No Federal agency other than the National Science Foundation provides such a wide scope of support to colleges and universities although the NSF budget is relatively small, it is the primary source of support for fundamental science and engineering research and education. As research advances the frontiers of basic scientific and engineering knowledge, our Nation grows stronger in world economic competition.

I want to take this opportunity to thank Mr. BOLAND for his continued support for research and the National Science Foundation. Also, I urge the Chairman and the other House conferees, to seek a level of funding for NSF, when negotiating with the other body, that reflects our near unanimous support for basic research.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such much time as he may consume to the distinguished ranking minority member of the full Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE]

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5313, the fiscal year 1987 appropriations bill for the Department of Housing and Urban Development and Independent Agencies.

This is the 11th regular fiscal 1987 appropriations bill to come before the House. It is, however, the 10th bill we have reported that is considered by OMB to be veto bait. For the RECORD, I will include a copy of the administration's official policy statement dated September 12. But I say to my colleagues that I do not agree with these objections. This is a good bill, and one that deserves your support.

At $39.8 billion, this is the second largest bill in terms of discretionary new budget authority that we have seen this year. Our largest, so far, of course, has been Agriculture at $42 billion. And we can only imagine how much larger that one will grow by this fall when the money trees are bare and we have to sprout another supplemental or two for the CCC.

I regret to say that we'll need a supplemental for this bill, too, Mr. Chairman, to release funds being withheld for lack of authorization. And I say that with all due respect for my colleagues from Massachusetts and New York, the distinguished and able managers of this bill.

Because they have produced a good bill under the most difficult of circumstances.

It is a bill that restores over $6.9 billion of unacceptable cuts in the area of housing and community development, and provides the maximum possible level of funding for veterans medical care and environmental protection.

It is a bill that fully funds our mandatory programs.

And—most important to those who have supported blind, across-the-board cuts—the bill lies within our 302(b) allocations of budget authority, outlays, direct loans, and loan guarantees.

And it totals $4 billion below the 1986 program levels, primarily because we were not able to include funds for the unauthorized general revenue sharing program.

As was pointed out during the debate on the rule, however, most of the funding recommended in this bill is for programs and activities whose authorities are currently expired or are soon to expire. These involved funds for 10 of the 18 agencies, offices, and boards covered by this bill.

With greater deference than is perhaps due at this late date to our authorizing colleagues, we are reserving over $3 billion in funds subject to release in future appropriations acts.

For the second year in a row, we are unable to provide Superfund or EPA construction grant funds without strings. This is a shame, Mr. Chairman.

In the case of NASA, clearly one of our most troubled Federal agencies, we have been forced to take the lead on issues ranging from the space station to the Orient Express without benefit of legislative guidance or timely budget amendments from the administration.

I think that most of the problems we have encountered in drafting this bill, Mr. Chairman, represent the worst-case scenarios regularly faced by our Appropriations Committee.

The Budget Committees present us with outlay ceilings that have little realistic relation to our budget authority ceilings. The legislative committees are unable to act in a timely manner or are unable to reach agreement with conferees from the other body.

The administration proposes reductions in programs that are impossible to accept. But we must juggle and shift, guess and commit.

I commend the members of the HUD subcommittee and all of my colleagues on the full committee for their efforts to make these tough choices and to make them well.

Most Members, I would hope, will be pleased with our recommendations. We have provided for 12,000 units of elderly and handicapped housing, we have $3 billion for CDBG's, we have another $70 million for emergency food and shelter grants, and $9.5 billion for veterans medical care.

But there are some who will be disappointed.

Our budget allocations have not left us enough for school asbestos abatement loans and grants. Our UDAG Program appears to be on its last, short leg.

And we can never add enough for public housing modernization.

Then there's revenue sharing. I have no doubt that we will see a provision in the conference report for $3 or $4 billion for revenue sharing. I have been a strong supporter of this program for many years.

I'd like to support it again if someone can tell me where we're going to get the revenue to share. We could not seem to find it over in that conference on the simplified tax bill, that's for sure.

We have our share of special legislative provisions, and we have assumed some increases in programs that our colleagues may not support. In some cases, I regret that we had to take cuts. For example, the UDAG Program has been cut 13 percent from the 1986 level; $275 million was all we could get. I have to wonder whether it's worth having a program at all at this level. But we ought to give full consideration to these issues here and now. If there are problems with our recommendations, let's determine the will of the House today.

Let's not surrender the authority and responsibility of 432 Members to one President with a red pen.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support for our bill.

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

SEPTEMBER 12, 1986.

H.R. 5313, HUD/INDEPENDENT AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS BILL, 1987

(Sponsors: Whitten, Mississippi; Boland, Massachusetts)

The President's senior advisors will recommend veto of this bill in its present form. The bill provides $1.6 billion more than the President's request and nearly $370 million more than the CBO/OMB average Gradison baseline specified by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings for budget authority for discretionary programs other than subsidized housing, substantial increases above the requested level for subsidized housing programs, and several objectionable language provisions.

Past economic activity as well as revised economic assumptions point to slower growth and a higher projected deficit than was forecast earlier. In the Administration's opinion, as well as that of the Congressional Budget Office, the Congressional Budget Resolution, including its allocation to the HUD Appropriations Subcommittee, will be inadequate to avoid the necessity of a Gramm-Rudman-Hollings sequester. The Administration believes Congress should act to cut spending in areas of lower priority in the bill so that a sequester, which would hit high-priority and low-priority areas alike, can be avoided.

The major areas of concern are:

The inclusion of $275 million in unrequested funding for HUD Urban Development Action Grants, continuing an inefficient and unnecessary program;

An increase of $600 million above the President's request for EPA construction grants;

An additional $403 million in unrequested funding for VA, Medical Care, which is not necessary for the continued provision of quality health care to the nation's veterans and for the administration of the means test and third party reimbursement;

$225 million in unrequested funding for the HUD Rental Housing Development Grant program, an expensive, poorly targeted program that subsidizes housing for middle and upper income families.

$250 million for the HUD Rental Rehabilitation Grant program that was not requested and that more than triples the 1986 appropriations.

Funding increases in salaries and expenses accounts that are not consistent with corresponding Committee action on related program levels;

The inclusion of language linking vouchers to the rental rehabilitation grant program, despite passage last month by the House of a bill that would relax this relationship; and Objectionable Committee language prohibiting the Veterans Administration from implementing their management proposal to consolidate the operation of insurance programs. The VA proposal would save $7.75 million over six years.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL].

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5313, HUD appropriations for fiscal year 1987. I would like to congratulate the chairman, Mr. BOLAND, and the ranking Republican, Mr. GREEN, as well as members of the Appropriations Committee on which I proudly serve for their efforts in producing this fiscally responsible and well drafted legislation.

This appropriations bill includes $1.6 billion in fiscal year 1987 for the National Science Foundation which is responsible for the development of a national science policy and for the support and promotion of basic science research and education. NSF also promotes the development and coordination of engineering education both at home and abroad. Through a variety of grants, contracts, and other agreements awarded to higher education institutions, such as the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, and nonprofit and other research organizations, NSF is able to support fundamental, long-term research in all the scientific and engineering disciplines.

Mr. Chairman, I support the funding levels included in this bill for the National Science Foundation and other programs and I am particularly gratified that this bill falls below levels set by the congressional budget resolution as well as appropriations provided in last year's bill. H.R. 5313 stands as both a fiscally responsible effort to reduce the Federal deficit and a well crafted initiative for necessary education and research programs.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH].

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the Committee on Appropriations for its work on the housing provisions of this legislation. The committee has placed the appropriate emphasis on rehabilitation and modernization, rather than on costly new construction programs. At a time when the Federal budget is stretched to the limit, the committee bill gives us the most possible housing for our money.

I especially want to commend the committee for its added emphasis on vouchers. The bill before us provides for 53,500 vouchers, which will be both free-standing and used in connection with the rental rehab program.

During the debate on H.R. 1, the Housing authorization, I added an amendment that removed the requirement that substantially all housing vouchers be used in connection with the rental rehabilitation program. This legislation effectively reinforces that position by providing funding for a significant number of free-standing vouchers.

The Housing Voucher Program offers greater freedom of choice than any other rental housing programs. It allows participating families to decide for themselves the tradeoff between choice of neighborhood, style of housing, and the share of the family budget they wish to devote to housing.

Vouchers essentially act as income supplements to improve a low-income family's ability to meet its shelter needs. The voucher allows an assisted family to obtain decent, safe and sanitary rental housing and guarantees payment to the landlord for a portion of the rent. The voucher approach makes use of existing rental stock on the private market and encourages recipients to shop for units.

Vouchers are much less costly and more efficient than new construction programs. They can serve more families immediately. They are more portable than other types of housing assistance and they allow recipients the maximum amount of freedom of choice and flexibility.

Many people believe that vouchers are the wave of the future in terms of housing assistance for low-income families. The Appropriations Committee's emphasis on vouchers will allow the program to operate more effectively, and will go a long way toward determining the future of the voucher program.

I want to express my concern, however, that this legislation caps the FHA's obligation ceiling at $80 billion. If the housing market remains strong through next year, the $80 billion limit will be much too low.

In the past year, the FHA has experienced six different shutdowns, causing great hardship for borrowers, lenders, realtors and a host of other third parties. FHA is a vital Federal housing program that has enabled millions of Americans to realize the dream of home ownership. If we are to continue to reap the full benefits of FHA, we must at all costs act to restore confidence and stability to the program.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished majority whip, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY].

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to engage in a colloquy with the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND], and to express my grave concern regarding a proposal currently being considered by the Veterans' Administration which calls for closing the Walla Walla Veterans Medical Center and converting the facility to an outpatient clinic. I hope you will concur with my assessment that this plan is ill-advised, unwise and should be withdrawn.

Currently as estimated 75,000 veterans residing in largely rural areas of southeastern Washington, northeastern Oregon, and central Idaho rely upon the Walla Walla veteran's facility for inpatient medical attention. If the current 150 inpatient beds at the Center are eliminated, these veterans and their families will not only be cut off from direct access to a VA acute care facility but will also be forced to travel great distances to receive needed inpatient care in urban VA facilities located hundreds of miles away in Spokane, Seattle, Boise or Portland. For many veterans who rely upon the Walla Walla VA Center for inpatient care—those with serious service connected disorders and countless destitute and older veterans, I fear closure of the Center's acute beds would effectively keep them in many instances from securing critically needed medical attention.

Equally significant in such cases is the profound impact such a far-reaching mission change would have on the Walla Walla economy which is already feeling the effect of a depressed farm economy. With an annual budget of $12 billion, the Walla Walla VA Medical Center stands as the third largest employer in the community, employing more than 300 medical and auxiliary staff members. In addition to an estimated $9 million annual payroll, the center infuses the local economy with several million dollars in service, supply and construction contracts. If this proposed mission change is implemented, it is predicted the Center's staff will be reduced to 40-50 employees and its annual budget slashed more than $89 million, a certain disastrous loss for any small community.

Perhaps most disturbing is the lack of consideration VA officials have shown toward the Walla Walla community which is understandably distressed by the prospect of this mission change becoming a reality. Since the proposal first surfaced earlier this year, community leaders and representatives of VA organizations have attempted to understand the VA's argument that budget constraints prevent continued full operation of Walla Walla facility and have tried to work with VA officials to reach some accommodation that would keep the facility open by substituting nursing home beds or other alternative services for the present inpatient beds. To date, the VA has largely ignored the local community's pleas to be drawn into the planning process and has repeatedly refused to share pertinent data that might justify such a major change of mission.

Finally, there is a great deal of dispute over whether this mission change would actually save the VA money. At a minimum, many of those workers who will likely be dismissed will have to be paid severance pay; the VA will certainly incur substantial close-out costs and some added costs by transferring the Walla Walla inpatient case load to either local hospitals on a contract basis or other VA facilities. Finally, part of the Center is listed on the National Historic Register and the VA will be required to maintain that portion of the facility.

Given these facts, I hope you would concur that the most prudent course would be to restrain the VA for fiscal year 1987 from proceeding with this plan.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I certainly agree with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY] that this proposal to convert a medical center to an outpatient clinic is unsound and would certainly have a devastating impact on the Walla Walla community. I share his concern that the VA has apparently not considered all of the ramifications of this proposal, and agree that we should do everything possible to see that the VA does not proceed on its current course. I will certainly work with the majority and minority members of the committee to that end.

I appreciate the comments of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. FOLEY. I thank the gentleman.

□ 1415

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the committee who supported the Loeffler amendment during committee markup of this bill. I especially want to acknowledge the bipartisan effort by my colleagues from Texas to ensure that the Johnson Space Center and the Houston area would not be dealt another and unwarranted blow. The adoption of the Loeffler amendment was recognition that the success and longevity of our space station are paramount.

With the space shuttle tragedy on January 28, NASA—and our space program—entered a difficult period of self-searching. NASA is now trying to regroup and regain its status as the world's premier space program.

On June 30, NASA announced a multipart restructuring plan for the space station program. The plan involved not only appointment of an associate administrator for the space station, but the movement of midlevel NASA management to Washington and the shifting of space station work between various centers.

Like many Members of Congress, I was shocked and outraged that NASA would make a significant structural change in the space station program without first conferring with Congress. I was particularly concerned that NASA failed to carefully study the cost effectiveness of shifting work between various centers.

These are the reasons I joined with my colleague TOMMY LOEFFLER, to draft an amendment that would force NASA to stop and closely reexamine its proposed restructuring plan. The Loeffler amendment simply gives Congress the opportunity to provide oversight and direction to NASA. It does not prevent the transfer of midmanagement personnel to Washington.

Finally, I would like to commend NASA for their great progress in the reexamination of the proposed space station reorganization plan. Since the announcement on July 31 to put the space station reorganization plan on hold, NASA has made every effort to work with Congress to reach a more acceptable plan for the space station program.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER], a member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to add my accolades to the chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking minority member for an excellent bill. It is no secret that in these days of budget constraints housing is under severe attack. What I would like to say to my colleagues here is that under this bill and under previous bills housing has really done its fair share in terms of the budget problems we face in America. We had a HUD bill that originally was close to $31 billion. We are now down in the vicinity of somewhere near $8 billion. We are building many fewer units of housing for people who cannot afford to house themselves. We have seen the effects of the crisis among the very poor with an increase in the number of homeless and the effect among the middle income for whom the American dream is fading rapidly into the dawn because they are running out, they do not have enough money to house themselves.

I want to particularly thank the chairman for adding an increased appropriaton for the HODAG Program and also the ranking minority member.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHUMER. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to rise in strong support of this bill. It provides $101.2 million for the construction of a new Veterans' Administration hospital for Baltimore, MD. For at least 5 years, members of the Maryland delegation and the veterans' organizations have been working hard and lobbying for the construction of this new hospital.

It has not been an easy or smooth path. Many people expressed concern over the construction of this hospital. The Veterans' Administration, the veterans of Maryland, and the members of the Maryland delegation never questioned the need for the hospital because it is needed to meet the needs of Maryland's veterans. This year, the President recognized the tremendous need and included funds for construction of the hospital in his fiscal year 1986 budget.

The chairman and the committee saw fit to provide the necessary funds in this bill. On behalf of the Maryland delegation, the city of Baltimore, and the veterans of the State of Maryland, I would like to express my sincere appreciation to the committee and its staff for their action and assistance.

I strongly urge the adoption of this legislation.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to my distinguished colleague on the subcommittee, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to express my compliments and appreciation for the work of both the chairman and ranking minority member of our Subcommittee on Appropriations. It should be pointed out once again to the House that the subcommittee has done its work extremely well. The bill as reported is approximately $4 million under BA and $407 million under in outlays. We are some 7 percent below the 1986 appropriations.

There has been considerable effort to restrain ourselves in this bill. I particularly would like to mention my support for the funding of NASA and add to that support the comment that last week NASA successfully launched a Delta rocket from Kennedy Space Center. The launch was perfect and the SDI-rated mission was considered 100-percent successful. In another successful launching of the Aries-class rocket from White Sands once again we saw that NASA is on course. We are indeed back in space, hopefully with more success for the future.

I appreciate the time and support of the chairman.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] has 4½ minutes remaining.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

May I say that on balance I think this is a very good bill. I think the committee has done its work well and has shown remarkable restraint in many areas in the bill, and that is something that I do not usually say.

As the ranking Republican on the NASA Subcommittee, I also want to thank the committee for their cooperative efforts with us for what they have done with regard to the NASA programs. I think it has been a very difficult time and that this bill reflects the need to rebuild NASA.

One thing I am somewhat disappointed by is in finding some of these spending cuts that the one place that the committee did go into was the hypersonic. The administration requested an appropriation of $45 million in order to get the hypersonic aircraft moving. This is really the future of out space program.

It offers low-cost delivery systems into space, it is the chance that by the next century this Nation will have really moved markedly ahead in space by having a vehicle that can take off from runways and fly into space as a single vehicle. That is a really important technology. We need to move on it very quickly because it offers hope not only for space transportation but also as the craft that will allow us to fly from New York to Tokyo in 2 hours or coast to coast in 15 minutes. That will change the economics of this country, it will change the economics of the world, it is an important advance for the future, and I think it is technology we have to be aggressive about pursuing. But beyond that, I think the committee has done an excellent job on NASA.

I thank the gentleman for yielding the time.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I note that this bill is below the BA of last year. I commend the committee on bringing in a bill of this kind. I have been making a number of amendments to try to insure a freeze. The subcommittee has frustrated me by bringing in a bill which makes it impossible for me to do such a thing. On the other hand, I note that most of the savings in the bill occur by reason of the elimination of any funds for revenue sharing, a total of about $4 billion, I think. Therefore, the savings in the bill are ephemeral. It is my understanding further that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations intends to put revenue sharing in our continuing resolution, thus making a mockery out of the savings that are in this bill. And I would ask the gentleman from New York if he understands that that is the case or if he can shed some light on this spurious or truthful rumor?

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I would not presume to speak for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but it is my understanding that in the allocation under section 302(b) of the Budget Act of the several subcommittees some $4 billion was reserved by the full committee. One potential for which it could be used would be general revenue sharing. But that was accounted for in the budget process. The full committee explicitly decided, and we did have a debate on this during the consideration of this measure in the full committee, not to proceed with general revenue sharing on this bill because general revenue sharing expires September 30 and has not been reauthorized by the House.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for his comment.

Mr. Chairman, it is obvious then we are looking only at the tip of the iceberg and there is $4 billion to follow. "Sic transit" frugality, it is gone again.

For that reason I am not going to be able to vote for the bill.

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5313, the fiscal year 1987 HUD-independent agencies appropriations bill.

Mr. Chairman, let me first acknowledge the great leadership and hard work of the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] and to the equally distinguished ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Mr. GREEN.

The bill they have helped to bring to the floor today, if it is adopted, will provide a current services budget for Veterans' Administration medical care for fiscal year 1987. This is the kind of budget that I recommended as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee on Hospitals and Health Care and this is the kind of budget that was recommended by the full Committee on Veterans' Affairs. With the authorizing and appropriating committees working together as they have done for this budget, the House will be able to continue telling our veterans in very real terms that our commitment to them continues.

Mr. Chairman, I am especially pleased that we have been able to secure funding for the design of the Aspinwall Division Replacement Medical Center in Pittsburgh, PA. It is a sorely needed project and one that is long overdue.

Mr. Chairman, it is important for us to understand how the VA has responded to the tight constraints in budgets over the last several years. Over these past years, the number of inpatients treated in VA Hospitals has grown by 24 percent. Visits to VA outpatient clinics have increased by 62 percent. The number of prescriptions filled by VA pharmacists has increased by 47 percent. The number of veterans over age 65 who are cared for in VA hospitals has increased by 51 percent. The number of beds operated by the VA has declined by 18 percent and the number of patients treated per year in the same VA bed has increased by nearly 50 percent.

That impressive increase in medical services has been accomplished with almost no increase in resources. The ability of the VA to achieve this remarkable record is partly due to changes in medical technology and computer support, but it is mainly due to the real dedication of the VA medical care staff and their ability to deliver high-quality medical care within a current services appropriation, such as the one we are considering today.

I know that the funds in H.R. 5313 for the VA will be used effectively for our Nation's veterans in maintaining our commitment to them and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the H.R. 5313, the Department of Housing and Urban Development-independent agencies appropriations bill for fiscal year 1987. The Appropriations Committee has done a fine job in crafting a bill that is in line with the budget resolution and the 1986 appropriated level.

I have heard from numerous constituents in Nebraska's Second Congressional District who have a strong interest in the funding for housing and veterans programs contained in this bill. H.R. 5313 provides essential funding in these areas, while also reflecting fiscal restraint.

H.R. 5313 to a large degree reflects the sentiments of the House that were promulgated during consideration of the housing authorization bill (H.R. 1) in June. Specifically, the bill we are considering today emphasizes public housing modernization by appropriating a total of $1,436,940,000 in this area. This level of funding reflects a vote during consideration of H.R. 1 that mandated an emphasis on repairing our existing public housing stock before proceeding with much more costly new units. Such a policy can dramatically improve this Nation's housing stock in a cost-efficient manner.

Also, H.R. 5313 provides essential funding for section 202 housing for elderly and handicapped units and for community development block grants [CDBG's]. I strongly supported congressional override of the administration's proposed deferral of CDBG funds in fiscal 1986, and I am pleased that H.R. 5313 provides the same level of funding in this area as in fiscal 1986.

With respect to the Veterans' Administration provisions contained within this legislation, I am in strong support. Included among the provisions: Funding for the proposed 3.7 percent cost-of-living [COLA] increase, financing of $741 million for veterans readjustment benefits, and $6.5 million which will be used to hire additional employees for the VA Loan Guaranty Program—a most welcome move to alleviate the application backlog resulting from dramatically reduced mortgage rates.

I commend the Appropriations Committee's inclusion of language in H.R. 5313 blocking the closure of the St. Paul Insurance Center. The VA has proposed to consolidate the St. Paul Center into the Philadelphia Insurance Center. The General Accounting Office is currently studying the feasibility of this approach, and by including a delay on the consolidation plan, we will prevent any unnecessary confusion and concern that may result from the premature implementation of this proposal.

Finally, I am especially pleased to highlight the inclusion of an additional $396 million to prevent any reductions in the staffing levels of our VA hospitals—which would have otherwise occurred due to a lack of adequate Federal support. This has been an ongoing concern of the growing number of veterans in Nebraska who rely on the quality of care they now receive in our VA hospitals.

Again, this is a good bill that provides essential funding for a wide variety of programs, and I urge the Members to support H.R. 5313.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I would be remiss if I did not point out that I would be rising to offer a line-item veto amendment to this bill if the rule permitted me.

This Appropriations Subcommittee, and all the subcommittees, have a difficult job when it comes to prioritizing funding contained in this and other spending bills. Under the leadership of Mr. Boland, the HUD and Independent Agencies appropriation bill is under last year's level of spending. For this, the chairman and the members of the subcommittee are to be commended.

But let me remind Members that last year's level of spending left us with a projected deficit of $230 billion. Coming in under last year's level just isn't enough, it won't begin to meet Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit targets. We must go further on this spending bill and all others.

Let me, then, put Members on notice that I'll be attempting to add limited line-item veto language to the continuing resolution when it comes before us. Business as usual, or even last year's level of spending, just isn't good enough. It amounts to a recipe for massive across-the-board cuts. We must go further, and I believe that line-item veto authority can help us put our Federal Government back on a sound financial footing.

Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support, along with my colleague from Ohio, TONY HALL, in behalf of the Veterans' Administration's budget which contains $8.4 million for the modernization of the VA Medical Center in Dayton, OH. This facility was constructed in 1931, and it has not been significantly renovated since that time.

In my view, if we are to continue our commitment to care for America's veterans, it is essential for the Congress to approve the funding for this project. Brown Hospital is the third oldest facility in the Nation. It serves 28 counties in southwestern Ohio and a total veteran population of 387,000. When the modernization of this hospital is completed, the building will accomodate medical, surgical, and psychiatric beds, as well as selected diagnostic treatment and support functions. But more importantly, this effort will enable the dedicated professional and medical staff of Brown Hospital to continue to give quality care to their patients.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge my colleagues in the House to support this important project and the veterans in southern Ohio.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my support for the provisions of H.R. 5313 relating to housing programs and community planning and development. In a time when so many in this Chamber are making their political mark by cutting every budget in sight, some of us must stand strong for programs without which many in our Nation will die a slow death.

I am proud to stand in agreement with my House colleagues, particularly those on the Appropriations Committee, who will vote for this bill's increase in funds for housing assistance and community planning programs. It is clearly apparent that we cannot throw money at all the Nation's problems given the deficit crisis. But we cannot act irresponsibly in stopping the flow of critically needed dollars for our communities.

Winter is coming. Winter kills homeless people on the streets. The homeless people are men, women, children—they are families. I urge my colleagues on both side of the aisle to vote in favor of sane and responsible spending to support our communities and the families and individuals in our communities in need for quality affordable housing.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5313, the HUD appropriations bill for fiscal year 1987. I commend Mr. BOLAND, Mr. WHITTEN, and my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for their hard work in bringing this comprehensive, bipartisan legislation to the House floor.

While I would have liked to have seen the Federal Government reclaim more of its responsibility for providing housing to low-income individuals, H.R. 5313 reaffirms Congress' belief that housing assistance to the neediest of Americans has been cut back to its barest minimum. For low-income Americans in particular, recent Federal budget cuts initiated by the President have intensified the severe shortage of suitable housing arrangements. In my own city of Los Angeles, for example, for every needy older adult who needs assistance, another 10 remain on the waiting list.

As the chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, I have received testimony throughout the country attesting to the complex challenge we face as a nation in meeting the housing and service-related needs of our rapidly growing older population. Older Americans differ greatly in terms of their health status, activity limitations, economic resources, and the availability of family or community supports. Housing policies must be flexible enough to adapt to a variety of circumstances and help facilitate timely living arrangements and assistance as they become necessary.

H.R. 5313 recognizes this fact by maintaining a number of highly successful and cost-effective policy initiatives for assisting low-income older Americans. The Congregate Housing Services Program (CHSP), for instance, prevents unnecessary institutionalization by providing both the shelter and service needs of functionally impaired or socially isolated seniors who do not require constant supervision or intensive health care. In many communities which have not benefited from the CHSP, a lack of supportive housing arrangements forces families to inappropriately place frail older adults in nursing homes—at great cost to families and to publicly supported programs. H.R. 5313 ensures that sufficient funding is available during fiscal year 1987 to prevent vulnerable low-income senior citizens who are presently assisted through the CHSP from being displaced from their homes.

This legislation also provides funding for approximately 12,000 units of one of the Federal Governments most successful efforts—the Section 202 Program. Combined with section 8 low-income rental assistance, this program has provided numerous communities with a major source of safe, decent and affordable housing for low-income senior citizens and handicapped individuals.

In short, Mr. Chairman, I support H.R. 5313 because it reaffirms the fact that low-income housing assistance cannot be reduced any further without substantial and tragic costs to older Americans, families, and other vulnerable individuals. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. BONER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the HUD-independent agencies appropriations bill, H.R. 5313.

As a member of the HUD Appropriations Subcommittee, I would like to express my appreciation to our chairman, Representative ED BOLAND of Massachusetts. Chairman BOLAND does a tremendous job each year leading our subcommittee in drafting a fair and balanced bill.

This year, he again led the committee in fashioning a good bill. And I would like to point out for the benefit of all Members that the chairman's task was particularly difficult, following as it did not only the passage of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, but also the tragic accident involving NASA's shuttle Challenger.

An outline of the bill's provisions has already been given to Members. I would like to briefly discuss two areas of the bill which concern me greatly. The first is NASA, its future, and that of our Nation's Space Exploration Program. The second area is the credit ceiling for the Federal Housing Administration's Mortgage Guarantee Program.

As Members know, the explosion of the shuttle interrupted the forward progress of our Nation's Space Exploration Program. The investigation of the explosion and NASA's own administrative practices has identified quite a few technical and administative problems that will be corrected. It has also reopened the debate on the role of the shuttle program, the future of space commercialization, and several other important policy areas.

I hope that the debate, particularly among administration policymakers, is nearing conclusion. Important decisions about the shuttle program, about, commercialization, and about the space station, need to be made—and soon. In this regard, I commend the efforts of our colleague BILL NELSON, chairman of the Space Science and Applications Subcommittee, in encouraging the administration to make recommendations and present them to Congress for consideration. To date, the absence of specific administration recommendations appears to be the result of infighting, inattention, and the lack of leadership.

Our Nation's Space Exploration Program is to important to allow it to languish. Progress in constructing the space station is too dependent on decisions that must be made soon to permit further unnecessary delay. Scientific research programs utilizing both shuttle and station are too promising to postpone indefinitely. Thus, as a member of the HUD Appropriations Subcommittee, I will work with my subcommittee colleagues and with members on the Science and Technology Committee in moving the decisionmaking process forward.

The second program which I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues is the Federal Housing Administration's Mortgage Insurance Program.

H.R. 5313 limits the FHA mortgage insurance credit ceiling to $80 billion. During the subcommittee markup, the members approved a $97 billion ceiling, which was the requested amount. This ceiling was reduced at the full Appropriations Committee markup because the higher level would have exceeded the subcommittee's section 302 credit allocation provided under the concurrent budget resolution.

Assuming that a healthy and active housing market continues through this coming year, the $80 billion FHA insuring authority provided in the bill for next year will fall far short of what will be needed. Members will recall that FHA's insuring authority ran out twice this year, resulting in a tremendous disruption in the housing market, including processing backlogs and delays and uncertainties for home buyers and sellers. To avoid repeating this result, I hope the HUD appropriations conferees will agree to a FHA ceiling of $100 billion. Thus, I appreciate Chairman BOLAND's continued commitment to join me and other members in supporting a higher level in conference.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
Washington, DC, September 10, 1986.

Hon. WILLIAM HILL BONER,
House of Representatives,
Wahington, DC.

DEAR BILL: Thank you for your efforts to increase the 1987 Federal Housing Administration mortgage insurance credit ceiling. We both agree that the FHA ceiling needs to be raised above $80,000,000,000.

The Subcommittee's recommendation was for a $97,000,000,000 ceiling. That recommendation was reduced to $80,000,000,000 in full Committee because of a concern with exceeding the Subcommittee's section 302 credit allocation.

Because of the parliamentary situation, I believe it would be better to let the Senate increase the FHA ceiling. Of course, I would support a higher level in conference.

Thanks again for your help in this matter.

Sincerely,

EDWARD P. BOLAND,
Chairman, Subcommittee on HUD-Independent Agencies.

H.R. 5313 is a fair and balanced bill. It provides funds for a number of important programs benefiting all Americans and continues our Nation's commitment to assist veterans, older Americans, low-income individuals and families, among others. The bill reflects many hours of hearings and many difficult program choices and I urge my colleagues to support its passage.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5313, which makes appropriations for the Environmental Protection Agency for fiscal year 1987.

The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. BOLAND, and the ranking minority member, Mr. GREEN, have brought to the floor a bill that provides funding for important EPA research programs.

In several key areas, the bill provides additional funding that is consistent with the research funding provisions of H.R. 4634, the EPA's research and development authorization bill, which was reported by the Natural Resources Subcommittee of the Committee on Science and Technology.

For example, the bill restores $3 million to a Competitive Grants Program in which leading university researchers can conduct peer-reviewed, long-range research needed to detect emerging environmental problems and to improve our understanding of environmental processes.

The bill also directs $3 million to support the Health Effects Institute, a unique and highly promising joint research effort equally funded by the automotive industry and the EPA. The Natural Resources Subcommittee has been highly impressed by the HEI Program to date and strongly supports this continued funding.

Research on indoor air pollution and residential radon mitigation, which have been previously identified as areas of critical importance in hearings before the Natural Resources Subcommittee, would also receive increased funding under the bill.

I am concerned, however, about the committee's reduction of $6 million and 100 positions from EPA's In-House Research Program. While the funding would not be significantly below current fiscal year 1986 levels, the bill rejects the administration's proposed 4-percent increase for EPA's in-house research. The administration apparently agreed with the Agency's independent Science Advisory Board that EPA's In-House Research Program had been cut to the bone and was "seriously underfunded."

While I share the committee's frustration with several aspects of the management of EPA's In-house Research Program, I do not share the view that the appropriate response is to reduce the funding available for research. The answer to bad research is not to end all research, but to correct the problems.

A new Assistant Administrator for Research has been nominated by the President, and we should give him the tools and the funds to make the necessary changes. We hope, in the coming months, to work cooperatively with the committee and the new Assistant Administrator to correct some of these problems.

Overall, however, the bill recognizes the fundamental importance of adequate funding for EPA's Research Program. Additional funding for extramural research provides a needed increase over the President's request. Time and again, scientific uncertainty has hampered the development of cost-effective, rational environmental regulations. Only an investment in the underlying research and science will help resolve those uncertainties.

I commend the Appropriations Committee for their work on this bill and I urge its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has one-half minute remaining.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back my one-half minute.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5313

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and for sundry independent agencies, boards, commissions, corporations, and offices for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes, namely:

TITLE I

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

HOUSING PROGRAMS

ANNUAL CONTRIBUTIONS FOR ASSISTED HOUSING

(INCLUDING RESCISSION)

The amount of contracts for annual contributions, not otherwise provided for, as authorized by section 5 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1437c), and heretofore approved in appropriations Acts, is increased by $638,280,885: Provided, That the budget authority obligated under contracts for annual contributions shall be increased above amounts heretofore provided in appropriations Acts by $8,095,000,000: Provided further, That of the budget authority provided herein, $366,120,000 shall be for assistance in financing the development or acquisition cost of public housing for Indian families; $1,436,940,000 shall be available as an appropriation of funds, to remain available until expended, for modernization of existing public housing projects pursuant to section 14 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1437l); $1,602,786,540 shall be for assistance for projects developed for the elderly or handicapped under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1701q); $790,950,000 shall be for the section 8 existing housing program (42 U.S.C. 1437f); $716,287,500 shall be for the section 8 moderate rehabilitation program (42 U.S.C. 1437f); $1,025,000,000 shall be available for the housing voucher program under section 8(o) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1437f), for use, notwithstanding the limitations in section 8(o)(1) of such Act that the Secretary conduct a demonstration, and in section 8(o)(4) of such Act that the Secretary use substantially all authority in connection with certain programs, in connection with the rental rehabilitation program under section 17 of such Act and for any other purposes as determined by the Secretary; $250,000,000 shall be available as an appropriation of funds, to remain available until September 30, 1987, only for rental rehabilitation grants pursuant to section 17(a)(1)(A) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1437o); and $225,000,000 shall be available as an appropriation of funds, to remain available until September 30, 1987, only for development grants pursuant to section 17(a)(1)(B) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1437o): Provided further, That with respect to grants as authorized by section 17(a)(1)(B) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437o) which are made using funds under this paragraph, notwithstanding the rental housing vacancy rate criteria of the third and sixth sentences of section 17(d)(2) of such Act, no unit of general local government shall be eligible for such a grant unless it has a percentage of rental dwelling units which are vacant of less than eight per centum, and a percentage of rental dwelling units which are vacant for more than two months of less than four per centum, except that the housing vacancy criteria specified in this paragraph shall not apply to grants authorized by the seventh sentence of such section 17(d)(2): Provided further, That none of the amounts available for obligation in 1987 shall be subject to the provisions of section 213(d) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1439): Provided further, That all amounts of budget authority (and contract authority) equal to the amounts of such budget authority (and contract authority) which are recaptured during fiscal year 1987, shall be rescinded.

Section 17(f) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "This subsection shall not apply to requirements relating to rents imposed on a structure by a State as a condition of receiving State financial assistance for the rehabilitation of such structure, if the dollar amount of such State financial assistance (including the principal amount of loans) exceeds the dollar amount of financial assistance provided for such structure under this section.".

RENT SUPPLEMENT

(RESCISSION)

The limitation otherwise applicable to the maximum payments that may be required in any fiscal year by all contracts entered into under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 (12 U.S.C. 1701s) is reduced in fiscal year 1987 by not more than $2,900,000 in uncommitted balances of authorizations provided for this purpose in appropriations Acts.

RENTAL HOUSING ASSISTANCE

(RESCISSION)

The limitation otherwise applicable to the maximum payments that may be required in any fiscal year by all contracts entered into under section 236 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1715z-1) is reduced in fiscal year 1987 by not more than $3,500,000 in uncommitted balances of authorizations provided for this purpose in appropriations Acts.

HOUSING FOR THE ELDERLY OR HANDICAPPED FUND

In 1987, $592,661,000 of direct loan obligations may be made under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1701q), utilizing the resources of the fund authorized by subsection (a)(4) of such section, in accordance with paragraph (C) of such subsection: Provided, That such commitments shall be available only to qualified nonprofit sponsors for the purpose of providing 100 per centum loans for the development of housing for the elderly or handicapped, with any cash equity or other financial commitments imposed as a condition of loan approval to be returned to the sponsor if sustaining occupancy is achieved in a reasonable period of time: Provided further, That the full amount shall be available for permanent financing (including construction financing) for housing projects for the elderly or handicapped: Provided further, That the Secretary may borrow from the Secretary of the Treasury in such amounts as are necessary to provide the loans authorized herein: Provided further, That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the receipts and disbursements of the aforesaid fund shall be included in the totals of the Budget of the United States Government: Provided further, That, notwithstanding section 202(a)(3) of the Housing Act of 1959, loans made in fiscal year 1987 shall bear an interest rate which does not exceed 9.25 per centum, including the allowance adequate in the judgment of the Secretary to cover administrative costs and probable losses under the program.

CONGREGATE SERVICES

For contracts with and payments to public housing agencies and nonprofit corporations for congregate services programs in accordance with the provisions of the Congregate Housing Services Act of 1978, $3,400,000, to remain available until September 30, 1988.

PAYMENTS FOR OPERATION OF LOW-INCOME HOUSING PROJECTS

For payments to public housing agencies and Indian housing authorities for operating subsidies for low-income housing projects as authorized by section 9 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1437g), $1,300,000,000.

HOUSING COUNSELING ASSISTANCE

For contracts, grants, and other assistance, not otherwise provided for, for providing counseling and advice to tenants and homeowners—both current and prospective—with respect to property maintenance, financial management, and such other matters as may be appropriate to assist them in improving their housing conditions and meeting the responsibilities of tenancy or homeownership, including provisions for training and for support of voluntary agencies and services as authorized by section 106(a)(1)(iii) and section 106(a)(2) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, as amended, $4,000,000.

TROUBLED PROJECTS OPERATING SUBSIDY

For assistance payments to owners of eligible multifamily housing projects insured, or formerly insured, under the National Housing Act, as amended, in the program of operating subsidies for troubled multifamily housing projects under the Housing and Community Development Amendments of 1978, all uncommitted balances of excess rental charges and any collections after September 30, 1986, to remain available until September 30, 1988: Provided, That assistance payments to an owner of a multifamily housing project assisted, but not insured, under the National Housing Act may be made if the project owner and the mortgagee have provided or agreed to provide assistance to the project in a manner as determined by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION FUND

For payment to cover losses, not otherwise provided for, sustained by the Special Risk Insurance Fund and General Insurance Fund as authorized by the National Housing Act, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1715z-3(b) and 1735c(f)), $272,955,000, to remain available until expended.

During 1987, within the resources available, gross obligations for direct loans are authorized in such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the National Housing Act, as amended.

During 1987, additional commitments to guarantee loans to carry out the purposes of the National Housing Act, as amended, shall not exceed a loan principal of $80,000,000,000.

During fiscal year 1987, gross obligations for direct loans of not to exceed $73,800,000 are authorized for payments under section 230(a) of the National Housing Act, as amended, from the insurance fund chargeable for benefits on the mortgage covering the property to which the payments made relate, and payments in connection with such obligations are hereby approved.

NONPROFIT SPONSOR ASSISTANCE

During 1987, within the resources and authority available, gross obligations for the principal amounts of direct loans shall not exceed $1,000,000.

GOVERNMENT NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

PAYMENT OF PARTICIPATION SALES INSUFFICIENCIES

For the payment of such insufficiencies as may be required by the Government National Mortgage Association, as trustee, on account of outstanding beneficial interest or participations in assets of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (including the Government National Mortgage Association) authorized by the Independent Offices and Department of Housing and Urban Development Appropriation Act, 1968, to be issued pursuant to section 302(c) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1717), $1,079,000.

GUARANTEES OF MORTGAGE-BACKED SECURITIES

During 1987, new commitments to issue guarantees to carry out the purposes of section 306 of the National Housing Act, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1721g), shall not exceed $132,500,000,000 of loan principal.

SOLAR ENERGY AND ENERGY CONSERVATION BANK

ASSISTANCE FOR SOLAR AND CONSERVATION IMPROVEMENTS

The funds appropriated under this heading in the Department of Housing and Urban Development—Independent Agencies Appropriation Act, 1985 (Public Law 98-371) shall remain available until September 30, 1987: Provided: That all funds recaptured from prior year appropriations under this heading shall be reallocated to eligible financial institutions.

COMMUNITY PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT GRANTS

For grants to States and units of general local government and for related expenses, not otherwise provided for, necessary for carrying out a community development grant program as authorized by title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended (42 U.S.C. 5301), $3,000,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1989: Provided, That not to exceed 20 per centum of any grant made with funds appropriated herein shall be expended for "Planning and Management Development" and "Administration" as defined in regulations promulgated by the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

During 1987, total commitments to guarantee loans, as authorized by section 108 of the aforementioned Act, shall not exceed $150,000,000 of contingent liability for loan principal.

During 1987 and each succeeding fiscal year, any city within a metropolitan area shall be considered to be a metropolitan city under section 102(a)(4) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5302(a)(4)) if such city—

(1) was classified as a metropolitan city under clause (B) of such section pursuant to the amendment made to such section by section 102(a) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1977 (Public Law 95-128);

(2) had, according to the 1980 decennial census, a population of 36,957; and

(3) received a preliminary grant approval on February 8, 1984, for an urban development action grant under section 119 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974.

URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACTION GRANTS

For grants to carry out urban development action grant programs authorized in section 119 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended (42 U.S.C. 5301), pursuant to section 103 of that Act, $275,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1990.

REHABILITATION LOAN FUND

During 1987, collections, unexpended balances of prior appropriations (including any recoveries of prior reservations) and any other amounts in the revolving fund established pursuant to section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1452b), after September 30, 1985, are available and may be used for commitments for loans and operating costs and the capitalization of delinquent interest on delinquent or defaulted loans notwithstanding section 312(h) of such Act.

URBAN HOMESTEADING

For reimbursement to the Federal Housing Administration Fund or the Rehabilitation Loan Fund for losses incurred under the urban homesteading program (12 U.S.C. 1706e), and for reimbursement to the Administrator of Veterans Affairs and the Secretary of Agriculture for properties conveyed by the Administrator of Veterans Affairs and the Secretary of Agriculture, respectively, for use in connection with an urban homesteading program approved by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development pursuant to section 810 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended, $12,000,000, to remain available until expended.

MODEL CITIES PROGRAM

Notwithstanding any other provision of law or other requirement, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may not require the City of New Orleans in the State of Louisiana to pay any amount relating to ineligible costs incurred with respect to the model cities grant numbered ME-17-001 under title I of the Demonstration Cities and Metropolitan Development Act of 1966.

POLICY DEVELOPMENT AND RESEARCH

RESEARCH AND TECHNOLOGY

For contracts, grants, and necessary expenses of programs of research and studies relating to housing and urban problems, not otherwise provided for, as authorized by title V of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1970, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1701z-1 et seq.), including carrying out the functions of the Secretary under section 1(a)(1)(i) of Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1968, $16,173,000, to remain available until September 30, 1988.

FAIR HOUSING AND EQUAL OPPORTUNITY

FAIR HOUSING ASSISTANCE

For contracts, grants, and other assistance, not otherwise provided for, as authorized by title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, as amended, $6,341,300, to remain available until September 30, 1988.

MANAGEMENT AND ADMINISTRATION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

For necessary administrative and nonadministrative expenses of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, not otherwise provided for, including not to exceed $4,000 for official reception and representation expenses, $649,085,000, of which $306,962,000 shall be provided from the various funds of the Federal Housing Administration.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISION

None of the funds appropriated by this or any other Act shall be used to implement or enforce the regulations published on April 1, 1986, at 51 Fed. Reg. 11198-11231.

Mr. BOLAND (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title I be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against title I?

Are there any amendments to title I?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. TRAFICANT

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRAFICANT: Page 14, after line 16, insert the following:

ADMINISTRATIVE LIMITATION

None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available in this title may be used to purchase any nondomestic goods or services.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I would ask to reserve time so that I may speak on the issue.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my point of order in deference to the mover of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that basically states that any expenditures under title I must be spent on American goods or services. It seems that every time we bring these types of legislative initiatives to the floor there is a technical point of order that is placed against it. We are not really able to bring this type of initiative through committees, we cannot really get it through the rules. We get it to the floor and we are subject to the technicalities of the given codes to strike down what may be the salvation of the country. I mean it. I have lost 55,000 jobs. Youngstown Metropolitan Housing Association, a $4.5 million grant, they turned around and bought Swedish radiators and heaters, Swedish pipe, and 3 months later an LTV pipe mill in my district closed down. Now, there are some Members here that are even laughing about it. Maybe you have the technicalities on your side, but I have never really asked for anything here. I have gone to certain Members and I have had the approval of both sides, supposedly I did, unless somebody was able to give me that horse and donkey act and get somebody to sabotage it through this type of maneuvering. I cannot hold the Parliamentarian at ill ease about it. I understand the duties that they have. But this particular amendment that I bring is strictly a limitation. And my argument is whether it is one piece of jute rope in a textile mill or if it is 100 particular items under a HUD title I bill that precedent from the past should hold. I do not know what other type of remedy we have. I have heard many people from the other side of the aisle saying "we can't get our good legislative initiatives to the floor. The committee won't hear them, the chairman won't hear them."

Well, that is bunk. That has been played too much politically.

Now you have a Democrat from Ohio who has lost more jobs than anyone else, who since 1977 has had the toughest unemployment area in the country, and no one in this Congress even wants to listen. And this is not demagoging for anybody on TV.

And I have gone to people and asked them to back up on it, and you have not. I am asking the Parliamentarian here to hold precedent similar to the amendment that was offered dealing with a restricting limitation on textiles that was offered and allowed to be brought to this floor. This amendment simply says that none of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available in this title, specifically title I, may be used to purchase any nondomestic goods or services. And it is about time we start passing this.

□ 1430

All this protection is bunk that I am hearing. Why do you not just send every job overseas, send all the money overseas, send the country overseas? No one in this House stood up when they sent $14 billion in foreign aid overseas and talked about points of order or American bankruptcy, the deficits. You talk about protecting one job and we have every technicality in the country. I do not like it.

I am now addressing the Chair on the point of order and asking that the Chair so rule.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MACKAY). The point of order must first be made.

Does the gentleman yield back the balance of his time?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must under the House rules yield back the balance of his time.

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] insist upon his point of order?

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I renew my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] constitutes legislating on an appropriation bill and is, therefore, in violation of rule XXI.

Mr. Chairman, there have been some what I consider to be borderline precedents set in this House on the basis of an old precedent which I consider no longer usable because of the way we now appropriate.

Not too long ago, a chairman ruled that one of these kinds of amendments was a limitation based on a precedent from another century. In those days, the appropriations were rather narrow and one could make that statement that, yes, it was a limitation because we are talking about buying mules for the Army or rope for the Navy.

Now we are talking about a bill here that has vast appropriations that are spread across the United States and across various agencies with all kinds of materials being bought. Many of those materials have components, some of which are fashioned in this country, some of which are not fashioned in this country; some of which have engineering done abroad, some of which have engineering done in this country.

The amendment by the gentleman from Ohio is clearly one that imposes a whole series of new duties upon the department in question, for it must determine whether any of those or all of those or part of those things that are being bid on have received bids which may have some foreign component. I think that in this case when we are talking about an appropriation as broad as the HUD appropriation, there is simply no question that this is legislating, is imposing broad duties on a department head, which we have not done in the regular legislative law.

Since we are speaking on the point of order, I will not respond to other statements made, but I hope that the point of order is sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] wish to respond to the point of order?

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I again stand on the ground here before the House and address the Chairman insofar as my contention is, if it is a limitation that is placed upon an appropriation measure only, that whether it is 1 item or 100 items, the precedent for 1 item should stand for the decision on the 100 since it imposes the same duty, nevertheless there is a duty imposed on previous precedential actions of the Chair.

I would ask the Chairman to strike down this motion to strike on the point of order, and sustain my position to bring this amendment to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MACKAY). The Chair feels that it is incumbent upon him to examine for the Committee of the Whole those principles which have led him to consider whether a decision previously made by the chairman of the committee, properly presented and on the same facts should be reversed. As Speaker Henderson stated in 1900, as carried in volume 4, Hinds' Precedents, section 4045, "It is a great advantage to the Congress to have before it the decisions of previous Congresses on any question liable to come up. If the decisions of the past are to be disregarded, confusion and uncertainly would constantly prevail." The Chair has equally, in proper and carefully examined cases, stated the principle that the decisions of the Chair on questions of order are not like judgments of courts which conclude the rights of parties, but may be examined and reversed. Speaker Carlisle followed that principle in 1888, as noted in volume 4, Hinds' precedents, section 4637, where he expressly overruled a decision made by the Chair to overrule a prior decision when the Chair, after mature consideration, concluded the decision was erroneous.

On July 30, 1986, the chairman of the Committee of the Whole held in order an amendment requiring "none of the funds made available in this act may be used to purchase any nondomestic goods or services" citing a 1930 precedent carried in volume 7 of Cannon's Precedents, Section 1697. The limitation in that instance concerned only a single item—twine—and the issue of whether the implementation of the amendment would impose additional duties on executive officials not required by law to ascertain the origin of that one product was never raised. In this case however, the amendment would require numerous officials in the Department of Housing and Urban Development making purchases of thousands of items ranging from pencils to trucks to ascertain the origin of each as well as all of the components. The amendment would require the same determinations by HUD as to purchases by all the recipients of the funds. In the opinion of the Chair this would impose a new investigative burden on those officials not required by law and in violation of clause 2 of rule XXI. The decision of July 30, 1986 is thus overruled, and the point of order is sustained.

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MR. TRAFICANT

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion is not at the desk and it is not in the proper form.

Mr. TRAFICANT. I have it here and I will present it to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TRAFICANT moves to strike all after the enacting clause of H.R. 5313.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion is not in the proper form.

The gentleman can be recognized for 5 minutes if he moves to strike the last word.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, everybody wants to get home because it is Friday. I think it is time that America should not be put on pilot and we should start dealing with the major problems that affect this country.

I am trying not to be upset, and I would like to start out with my comments as follows, that if you cannot get it through the committee and you cannot get it through the rules, and when you do get it to the floor, you continue to face these types of technicalities, then maybe it is time that we draw the lines and have the war that is necessary down here.

I am not talking about as a Republican who is upset. I am talking about a Democrat who represents the toughest district in America that has been overlooked and no one really cares. You will not care until the fire is at your feet, maybe at your behind. Me, I am going to try to put it there.

But one thing we did today is we put a clarification on the record here about these types of amendments, the buy-American amendment. Here is what I am announcing today. I believe HUD should have to look and see where every pencil comes from, every gallon of gasoline, every automobile, every piece of paper in everything they buy. I do not know what the technicalities are on continuing resolution, but I am going to be back. And now I am going to try to amend every program in this House.

I have had chairmen come to me and say, "Don't put us in a political position." I have had Members of the opposition party come to me and say, "Don't bring this now, it's election."

□ 1440

Now I do put the House on notice, while I am here, I will attempt to markup and amend the continuing resolution that has to be brought before this House and I am letting the chairmen know: I do not have any problem with anybody but I am prepared to stand up and take the chairmen on.

We have lost 55,000 jobs since 1977, we are continuing to lose them. We are replacing them with $3.50-an-hour jobs, and while you laugh, you are next.

I am very disappointed because this point of order and this objection need not have been brought today. When I hear the arguments we have to think of our NATO neighbors, damn it, they should have paid their war debts to this country. Now you are talking about the people who fought in those who cannot get a job, having their retirement benefits cut out, cannot get unemployment, do not even have hospitalization and medical benefits, and they are going to close the vet clinic in my district.

What do you want next? You are not getting from here. Maybe I should not be speaking to that side. The tragedy is that I have to oppose Members on this side.

You prepare yourselves for what technical language it takes. If I have to hire a constitutional attorney I am going to bring before the House amendments on the continuing resolutions and I am going to challenge this House on them.

I apologize to any Parliamentarian, recognizing the rules and order of the House, that you should not address the Parliamentarian. I did not mean to do that. They do a fine job; their advance has always been sound.

But I do not apologize for the statements made in behalf of the 17th District of Ohio and for every American who does not have a job and who is getting really run roughshod over by this administration. I do not apologize for anything.

I will see you in the continuing resolution.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that this past 10 or 15 minutes was made necessary. I yield to nobody in my admiration for the gentleman from Ohio and for the work that he is doing to try to protect jobs within his district. That is his duty, and he is doing it superbly well with great enthusiasm despite the frustration.

On the other hand, there are many of us who have had frustration with the rules. A group on this side was just denied an opportunity for a shot at the line-item veto which we think is very important to the Nation's economy.

I must say on my part that I am not raising points of order and have never done so to have fun with the rules. What I am trying to do is to protect the rules of the House and to protect certain jurisdictions which I think are important. In addition to that, I have the same feeling about American jobs as my distinguished friend from Ohio. I believe that the protectionist measures introduced in this House, by and large, sooner or later, and usually sooner, cost more American jobs than the protectionist principles that are introduced into our law to save them.

Over the years of history, it has been my observation that periods of time of increased trade have been periods of increased prosperity for our country and, before our county was invented, for the rest of the world as well.

I have no desire to disadvantage the gentleman or any of his constituents. I would just like him to know that I feel as strongly on the other side of the issue as he does for his constituents.

Again, I admire his work.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRAFICANT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fine comments, but all of the theories and all of these so-called trade strategies that the gentleman has talked about have led us to $160 billion in trade deficits, and whenever I continue to hear people saying "protectionist, protectionist," I think we should give a weighted advantage to a society that has the greatest standard of living of all. We should not roll it back to Taiwan or Korea. There is nothing wrong with the legislation that has been brought before this House. But you see we do not have the medium and the access to do it.

When we continue to argue this protectionism, I just want to say one thing to everybody about protectionism because it has become a dirty word. I think it is a word of patriotism for America, and if we have to protect this great, free country and protect it, we should not be hiding behind the word but implementing the action and doing what we have to do.

I think it is time we start looking at the people who fought in those wars, pay the bills, are basically taxed. They are losing their jobs; they are losing their homes. The rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer, and this country is languishing with great national debt, budget deficits, and you cannot separate that trade deficit from it.

I am not going to stand back, even though we may philosophically agree, there is nothing personal, but I am going to oppose you. I am saying here in the House of Representatives today that productionism is not a bad word to me. If it is, then I am guilty, because I am not going to back up from it. In fact, I am asking you to change and temper your position to take a look at some of the other dynamics that affect this and try and keep some of these jobs at home before we have no national security, no infrastructure in a country languishing, languishing with such a national debt that we will put $50,000 per citizen in this country in the next 12 years.

That is where we are going. Maybe this President is popular, but he is killing my district. I am not backing up. The continuing resolution? I will see you then.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his contribution. The response to his statement I think is better left for another time and another forum. I know the Members are anxious to proceed with the bill. I merely want to restate that I feel as strongly on my side of this issue as he does on his.

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate the gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on HUD-Independent Agencies, Mr. BOLAND, for developing the delicately balanced proposal before us. I am aware that achieving the subcommittee's budget allocation was a difficult task and required hard choices between reductions in subsidized housing and increases for other agencies in the bill.

I am concerned that the appropriation for the National Science Foundation [NSF] did not reflect more closely the authorization level the House passed for the Foundation by a vote of 405 to 2 on June 26, 1986. The authorization bill passed by the Senate included a budgetary level identical to the House version. The House and Senate agreement became Public Law 99-383 on August 21, 1986.

The National Science Foundation plays a unique role in the Federal support of science and engineering research and education. NSF accounts for less than 3 percent of the Federal support for total research and development. Yet, the Foundation provides about 25 percent of the Federal support for basic research at colleges and universities.

Basic research ultimately provides much of the knowledge base required for finding solutions to the Nation's current and future economic and technological challenges. Since the NSF supported research is conducted at universities, the research function is coupled effectively with the education of future scientists and engineers. Thus, the activities supported through NSF make significant, broad-range contributions to the Nation's future.

In view of the National Science Foundation Authorization Act for fiscal year 1987, I encourage the gentleman, in negotiations with the Senate, to seek the highest level of support for the Foundation. Investment in basic science and engineering is essential to improving our competitiveness internationally and reducing our trade deficit.

I am certain the gentleman will continue his strong support, and I again want to thank the gentleman from Massachusetts and his subcommittee on its hard work on behalf of the Foundation.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FUQUA. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to congratulate the gentleman from Florida for his invaluable service to the Science and Technology Committee, where he has served as an outstanding chairman, and to the Congress and the Nation as a whole.

I know all of us regret the gentleman's leaving this body. I am sure that the people in your district regret that you are leaving, but you have other fields to enter. I know this: That you will be missed, not only as chairman of the Science and Technology Committee, but you will be missed by the entire body.

I want to congratulate the gentleman on the great service you have given to your district, to this Nation, and to the U.S. Space Program.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FUQUA. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to join the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee in his expressions of gratitude to you for the service you have given this House, the Congress, this country on the Science and Technology Committee.

It has been a real privilege for me to have the opportunity, because of the appropriating jurisdiction of this subcommittee, to work with you. I want to wish you well in your future endeavors.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FUQUA. I yield to the gentlewoman from Louisiana.

Mrs. BOGGS. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to join my remarks with those of the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member of the subcommittee, and to add my own congratulations and expressions of gratitude for the tremendous service that you have rendered to our Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II

DISASTER RELIEF

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

For necessary expenses in carrying out the functions of the Disaster Relief Act of 1974, as amended (42 U.S.C. 5121 et seq.), $175,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That $5,385,000 shall, upon enactment of this Act, be transferred to the "Salaries and expenses" appropriation for costs of employees doing disaster assistance work located at headquarters and regional offices and the amount so transferred shall be available until September 30, 1987: Provided further, That the regulation changes proposed by the Federal Emergency Management Agency and set forth at 51 Fed. Reg. 13332-13373 (April 18, 1986), or any finally adopted regulations related to or developed or following from such proposed regulations, shall not be effective from enactment of this Act through September 30, 1987.

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For necessary expenses, not otherwise provided for, including hire and purchase of motor vehicles (31 U.S.C. 1343); uniforms, or allowances therefor, as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 5901-5902; services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109, but at rates for individuals not to exceed the per diem rate equivalent to the rate for GS-18; expenses of attendance of cooperating officials and individuals at meetings concerned with the work of emergency preparedness; transportation in connection with the continuity of government program to the same extent and in the same manner as permitted the Secretary of a Military Department under 10 U.S.C. 2632; and not to exceed $1,500 for official reception and representation expenses, $118,507,000.

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT PLANNING AND ASSISTANCE

For necessary expenses, not otherwise provided for, to carry out activities under the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968, as amended, and the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973, as amended (42 U.S.C. 4001 et seq.), the Disaster Relief Act of 1974, as amended (42 U.S.C. 5121 et seq.), the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977, as amended (42 U.S.C. 7701 et seq.), the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974, as amended (15 U.S.C. 2201 et seq.), the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, as amended (50 U.S.C. 98 et seq.), the Federal Civil Defense Act of 1950, as amended (50 U.S.C. App. 2251 et seq.), the Defense Production Act of 1950, as amended (50 U.S.C. App. 2061 et seq.), section 103 of the National Security Act (50 U.S.C. 404), and Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1978, $250,743,000.

NATIONAL FLOOD INSURANCE FUND

(TRANSFERS OF FUNDS)

Of the funds available from the National Flood Insurance Fund for activities under the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968, and the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973, $9,300,000 shall, upon enactment of this Act, be transferred to the "Salaries and expenses" appropriation for administrative costs of the insurance programs and $45,200,000 shall, upon enactment of this Act, be transferred to the "Emergency management planning and assistance" appropriation for flood plain management activities, including $4,720,000 for expenses under section 1362 of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968, as amended (42 U.S.C. 4103, 4127), which amount shall be available until September 30, 1988. In fiscal year 1987, no funds in excess of (1) $42,788,000 for operating expenses, (2) $117,950,000 for agents' commissions and taxes, and (3) $5,362,000 for interest on Treasury borrowings shall be available from the National Flood Insurance Fund without prior notice to the Committees on Appropriations.

EMERGENCY FOOD AND SHELTER PROGRAM

There is hereby appropriated $70,000,000 to the Federal Emergency Management Agency to carry out an emergency food and shelter program. Notwithstanding any other provision of this or any other Act, such amount shall be made available under the terms and conditions of the following paragraphs:

The Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall, as soon as practicable after enactment of this Act, constitute a national board for the purpose of determining how the program funds are to be distributed to individual localities. The United Way of America, the Salvation Army, the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., the National Conference of Catholic Charities, the Council of Jewish Federations, Inc., and the American Red Cross shall each nominate a representative to sit on the national board, and the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall designate a representative from each of these organizations to sit on the national board. The Federal Emergency Management Agency shall also designate a representative to sit on the national board, and the representative of the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall chair the national board.

Each locality designated by the national board to receive funds shall constitute a local board for the purpose of determining how its funds will be distributed. The local board shall consist, to the extent practicable, of representatives of the same organizations as the national board except that the mayor or appropriate head of government will replace the Federal Emergency Management Agency member.

The Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall award a grant for $70,000,000 to the national board within thirty days after enactment of this Act for the purpose of providing emergency food and shelter to needy individuals through private voluntary organizations and through units of local government.

Eligible private voluntary organizations should be nonprofit, have a voluntary board, have an accounting system, and practice nondiscrimination.

Participation in the program should be based upon a private voluntary organization's or unit of local government's ability to deliver emergency food and shelter to needy individuals and such other factors as are determined by the local boards.

Total administrative costs shall not exceed 2 per centum of the total appropriation.

As authorized by the Charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Corporation shall process and distribute surplus food owned or to be purchased by the Corporation under the food distribution and emergency shelter program in cooperation with the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION

CONSUMER INFORMATION CENTER

For necessary expenses of the Consumer Information Center, including services authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109, $1,272,000, to be deposited into the Consumer Information Center Fund: Provided, That the appropriations, revenues and collections deposited into the fund shall be available for necessary expenses of Consumer Information Center activities in the aggregate amount of $5,200,000. Administrative expenses of the Consumer Information Center in fiscal year 1987 shall not exceed $1,664,000. Appropriations, revenues and collections accruing to this fund during fiscal year 1987 in excess of $5,200,000 shall remain in the fund and shall not be available for expenditure except as authorized in appropriations Acts.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

OFFICE OF CONSUMER AFFAIRS

For necessary expenses of the Office of Consumer Affairs, including services authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109, $1,000,000.

NATIONAL AERONAUTICS AND SPACE ADMINISTRATION

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

For necessary expenses, not otherwise provided for, including research, development, operations, services, minor construction, maintenance, repair, rehabilitation and modification of real and personal property; purchase, hire, maintenance, and operation of other than administrative aircraft, necessary for the conduct and support of aeronautical and space research and development activities of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, $3,020,700,000, to remain available until September 30, 1988: Provided, That none of the funds in this bill shall be used to reassign programs and/or transfer personnel from the Johnson Space Center without the express authorization of Congress.

□ 1450

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BOLAND

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOLAND: On page 26, line 14, insert at the end of the sentence: ": Provided further. That of the funds appropriated under this heading, not to exceed $160,000,000 shall be provided for space station phase C/D development and such funds shall not be available for obligation until the enactment of a subsequent appropriations Act authorizing the obligation of such funds.".

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is really very simple. What it does is cap space station development funding at $160 million and provides that the release of the funds will be made in a subsequent appropriations act.

In effect, this mirrors the action taken in the report accompanying the HUD appropriations bill. But this amendment is important because it will strengthen the House's position and the committee's position in conference.

Mr. Chairman, after spending more than $150 million over the past 2½ years, the Space Station Program today is beset with a number of design problems. The bottom line is that unless NASA addresses those problems and the concerns expressed by this committee, we are going to spend $10 billion on a space station that will not enhance this Nation's scientific and technological capabilities.

To meet that concern, we imposed requirements on the space station before moneys requested for development are released. Those requirements are stated on pages 45 and 46 of our report.

The thrust of the requirements is that before the space station moves ahead with development funding, this committee and this House and this Congress can be assured that the station will provide useful and beneficial science as soon as possible to this Nation.

That's what the requirements that are detailed in our report are designed to do. So the purpose of this amendment is to ensure that before NASA proceeds with actual development of the space station, our committee's concerns and the concerns of others in this body are addressed.

Mr. Chairman, it is my fervent hope that NASA will take seriously these concerns so that we can release development funds and get on with building the next major U.S. step in space.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman and his committee on this bill and also for their position on being cautious about moving ahead on these big expenditures that we are talking about. The reason I say this is that for each $2.6 billion that is added in 1987 we will have to have an across-the-board cut of 1 percent out of all discretionary programs that have been appropriated heretofore.

So it is important that we watch these expenditures because whenever anybody votes from now on for increases in anything, what they are really voting for is to cut everything that has already been appropriated. That is the position we are in unless we do one of two things: Raise taxes or waive Gramm-Rudman. If we want to not raise taxes, if we want to keep Gramm-Rudman, then we have got to be cautious about these added expenditures. What we did yesterday on the floor of the House by an overwhelming majority was add 1 percent to the amount that will have to be cut across the board in all discretionary programs.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my support for this amendment. I know the Members want to get home, so I will not reiterate what the subcommittee chairman has already said as to the need for it. I would commend to the Members of the House the report which the subcommittee chairman submitted on behalf of the committee, particularly pages 44, 45, and 46 of that report, which details the concerns that the subcommittee and the full committee have had regarding the Space Station Program and which I think explains fully the need for this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the House to support this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SPACE FLIGHT, CONTROL AND DATA COMMUNICATIONS

For necessary expenses, not otherwise provided for, in support of space flight, spacecraft control and communications activities of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, including operations, production, services, minor construction, maintenance, repair, rehabilitation, and modification of real and personal property; tracking and data relay satellite services as authorized by law; purchase, hire, maintenance and operation of other than administrative aircraft, $3,038,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1988.

CONSTRUCTION OF FACILITIES

For construction, repair, rehabilitation and modification of facilities, minor construction of new facilities and additions to existing facilities, and for facility planning and design not otherwise provided, for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and for the acquisition or condemnation of real property, as authorized by law, $166,300,000, to remain available until September 30, 1989: Provided, That, notwithstanding the limitation on the availability of funds appropriated under this heading by this appropriations Act, when any activity has been initiated by the incurrence of obligations therefor, the amount available for such activity shall remain available until expended, except that this provision shall not apply to the amounts appropriated pursuant to the authorization for repair, rehabilitation and modification of facilities, minor construction of new facilities and additions to existing facilities, and facility planning and design: Provided further, That no amount appropriated pursuant to this or any other Act may be used for the lease or construction of a new contractor-funded facility for exclusive use in support of a contract or contracts with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration under which the Administration would be required to substantially amortize through payment or reimbursement such contractor investment, unless an appropriations Act specifies the lease or contract pursuant to which such facilities are to be constructed or leased or such facility is otherwise identified in such Act: Provided further, That the Administrator may authorize such facility lease or construction, if he determines, in consultation with the Committees on Appropriations, that deferral of such action until the enactment of the next appropriations Act would be inconsistent with the interest of the Nation in aeronautical and space activities.

RESEARCH AND PROGRAM MANAGEMENT

For necessary expenses of research in Government laboratories, management of programs and other activities of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, not otherwise provided for, including uniforms or allowances therefor, as authorized by law (5 U.S.C. 5901-5902); awards; lease, hire, maintenance and operation of administrative aircraft; purchase (not to exceed thirty-three for replacement only) and hire of passenger motor vehicles; and maintenance and repair of real and personal property, and not in excess of $100,000 per project for construction of new facilities and additions to existing facilities, repairs, and rehabilitation and modification of facilities, $1,425,000,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into under this appropriation for maintenance and operation of facilities, and for other services, to be provided during the next fiscal year: Provided further, That not to exceed $35,000 of the foregoing amount shall be available for scientific consultations or extraordinary expense, to be expended upon the approval or authority of the Administrator and his determination shall be final and conclusive.

NATIONAL CREDIT UNION ADMINISTRATION

CENTRAL LIQUIDITY FACILITY

During 1987, obligations of the Central Liquidity Facility for new loans to member credit unions as authorized by the National Credit Union Central Liquidity Facility Act (12 U.S.C. 1795) shall not exceed $600,000,000: Provided, That administrative expenses of the Central Liquidity Facility in fiscal year 1987 shall not exceed $850,000.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

RESEARCH AND RELATED ACTIVITIES

For necessary expenses in carrying out the purposes of the National Science Foundation Act of 1950, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1861-1875), title IX of the National Defense

Education Act of 1958 (42 U.S.C. 1876-1879), and the Act to establish a National Medal of Science (42 U.S.C. 1880-1881); services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109; maintenance and operation of aircraft and purchase of flight services for research support; acquisition of one aircraft; hire of passenger motor vehicles; not to exceed $2,500 for official reception and representation expenses; uniforms or allowances therefor, as authorized by law (5 U.S.C. 5901-5902); rental of conference rooms in the District of Columbia; and reimbursement of the General Services Administration for security guard services, $1,333,300,000, to remain available until September 30, 1988: Provided, That of the funds appropriated in this Act, or from funds appropriated previously to the Foundation, not more than $75,000,000 shall be available for program development and management in fiscal year 1987: Provided further, That contracts may be entered into under the program development and management limitation in fiscal year 1987 for maintenance and operation of facilities, and for other services, to be provided during the next fiscal year: Provided further, That receipts for scientific support services and materials furnished by the National Research Centers and other National Science Foundation supported research facilities may be credited to this appropriation: Provided further, That to the extent that the amount appropriated is less than the total amount authorized to be appropriated for included program activities, all amounts, including floors and ceilings, specified in the authorizing Act for those program activities or their subactivities shall be reduced proportionally.

UNITED STATES ANTARCTIC PROGRAM ACTIVITIES

For necessary expenses in carrying out the research and operational support for the United States Antarctic Program pursuant to the National Science Foundation Act of 1950, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1861-1875); maintenance and operation of aircraft and purchase of flight services for research and operations support; maintenance and operation of research ships and charter or lease of ships for research and operations support; hire of passenger motor vehicles; not to exceed $1,000 for official reception and representation expenses, $117,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That receipts for support services and materials provided to individuals for non-Federal activities may be credited to this appropriation: Provided further, That no funds in this account shall be used for the purchase of aircraft.

SCIENCE EDUCATION ACTIVITIES

For necessary expenses in carrying out science education programs and activities pursuant to the purposes of the National Science Foundation Act of 1950, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1861-1875), including award of graduate fellowships, services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109, and rental of conference rooms in the District of Columbia, $99,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1988: Provided, That to the extent that the amount of this appropriation is less than the total amount authorized to be appropriated for included program activities, all amounts, including floors and ceilings, specified in the authorizing Act for those program activities or their subactivities shall be reduced proportionally.

SCIENTIFIC ACTIVITIES OVERSEAS

(SPECIAL FOREIGN CURRENCY PROGRAM)

For payments in foreign currencies which the Treasury Department determines to be excess to the normal requirements of the United States, for scientific activities, as authorized by law, $700,000, to remain available until September 30, 1988: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available in addition to other appropriations to the National Science Foundation for payments in the foregoing currencies.

NEIGHBORHOOD REINVESTMENT CORPORATION

PAYMENT TO THE NEIGHBORHOOD REINVESTMENT CORPORATION

For payment to the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation for use in neighborhood reinvestment activities, as authorized by the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation Act (42 U.S.C. 8101-8107), $18,669,000.

SELECTIVE SERVICE SYSTEM

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For necessary expenses of the Selective Service System, including expenses of attendance at meetings and of training for uniformed personnel assigned to the Selective Service System, as authorized by law (5 U.S.C. 4101-4118) for civilian employees; and not to exceed $1,000 for official reception and representation expenses, $26,128,400: Provided, That during the current fiscal year, the President may exempt this appropriation from the provisions of 31 U.S.C. 1341, whenever he deems such action to be necessary in the interest of national defense: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated by this Act may be expended for or in connection with the induction of any person into the Armed Forces of the United States: Provided further, That upon enactment of this Act, the amendments to title 32 of the Code of Federal Regulations set forth at 51 Fed. Reg. 17618-17628 (May 14, 1986) shall be null and void.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

OFFICE OF REVENUE SHARING, SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For necessary expenses of the Office of Revenue Sharing, including hire of passenger motor vehicles, $5,560,000.

VETERANS ADMINISTRATION

COMPENSATION AND PENSIONS

For the payment of compensation benefits to or on behalf of veterans as authorized by law (38 U.S.C. 107, chapters 11, 13, 51, 53, 55, and 61); pension benefits to or on behalf of veterans as authorized by law (38 U.S.C. chapters 15, 51, 53, 55, and 61; 92 Stat. 2508); and burial benefits, emergency and other officers' retirement pay, adjusted-service credits and certificates, payment of premiums due on commercial life insurance policies guaranteed under the provisions of Article IV of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, as amended, and for other benefits as authorized by law (38 U.S.C. 107, 412, 777, and 806, chapters 23, 51, 53, 55, and 61; 50 U.S.C. App. 540-548; 43 Stat. 122, 123; 45 Stat. 735; 76 Stat. 1198), $14,364,400,000, to remain available until expended.

READJUSTMENT BENEFITS

For the payment of readjustment and rehabilitation benefits to or on behalf of veterans as authorized by law (38 U.S.C. chapters 21, 30, 31, 34-36, 39, 51, 53, 55, and 61), $741,150,000, to remain available until expended.

VETERANS INSURANCE AND INDEMNITIES

For military and naval insurance, national service life insurance, servicemen's indemnities, and service-disabled veterans insurance, as authorized by law (38 U.S.C. chapter 19; 70 Stat. 887; 72 Stat. 487), $4,770,000, to remain available until expended.

MEDICAL CARE

For necessary expenses for the maintenance and operation of hospitals, nursing homes, and domiciliary facilities; for furnishing, as authorized by law, inpatient and outpatient care and treatment to beneficiaries of the Veterans Administration, including care and treatment in facilities not under the jurisdiction of the Veterans Administration, and furnishing recreational facilities, supplies and equipment; funeral, burial and other expenses incidental thereto for beneficiaries receiving care in Veterans Administration facilities; repairing, altering, improving or providing facilities in the several hospitals and homes under the jurisdiction of the Veterans Administration, not otherwise provided for, either by contract or by the hire of temporary employees and purchase of materials; uniforms or allowances therefor, as authorized by law (5 U.S.C. 5901-5902); aid to State homes as authorized by law (38 U.S.C. 641); and not to exceed $2,000,000 to fund cost comparison studies as referred to in 38 U.S.C. 5010(a)(5); $9,488,612,000, plus reimbursements.

MEDICAL AND PROSTHETIC RESEARCH

For necessary expenses in carrying out programs of medical and prosthetic research and development, as authorized by law, to remain available until September 30, 1988, $193,915,000, plus reimbursements.

MEDICAL ADMINISTRATION AND MISCELLANEOUS OPERATING EXPENSES

For necessary expenses in the administration of the medical, hospital, nursing home, domiciliary, construction, supply, and research activities, as authorized by law, $41,694,000, plus reimbursements.

GENERAL OPERATING EXPENSES

For necessary operating expenses of the Veterans Administration, not otherwise provided for, including uniforms or allowances therefor, as authorized by law; not to exceed $3,000 for official reception and representation expenses; cemeterial expenses as authorized by law; purchase of eleven passenger motor vehicles, for use in cemeterial operations, and hire of passenger motor vehicles; and reimbursement of the General Services Administration for security guard services, and the Department of Defense for the cost of overseas employee mail; $763,531,000: Provided, That none of the funds appropriated by this or any other Act shall be obligated to effect the closing of the St. Paul Insurance Center during the period beginning on the date of the enactment into law of this Act and ending on September 30, 1987.

CONSTRUCTION, MAJOR PROJECTS

For constructing, altering, extending and improving any of the facilities under the jurisdiction or for the use of the Veterans Administration, or for any of the purposes set forth in sections 1004, 1006, 5002, 5003, 5006, 5008, 5009, and 5010 of title 38, United States Code, including planning, architectural and engineering services, and site acquisition, where the estimated cost of a project is $2,000,000 or more or where funds for a project were made available in a previous major project appropriation, $382,708,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That, except for advance planning of projects funded through the advance planning fund and the design of projects funded through the Design Fund, none of these funds shall be used for any project which has not been considered and approved by the Congress in the budgetary process: Provided further, That funds provided in the appropriation "Construction, major projects" for fiscal year 1987, for each approved project shall be obligated (1) by the awarding of a working drawings contract by September 30, 1987 and (2) by the awarding of a construction contract by September 30, 1988: Provided further, That the Administrator shall promptly report in writing to the Comptroller General and to the Committees on Appropriations any approved major construction project in which obligations are not incurred within the time limitations established above; and the Comptroller General shall review the report in accordance with the procedures established by section 1015 of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (title X of Public Law 93-344): Provided further, That no funds from any other account, except the "Parking garage revolving fund", may be obligated for constructing, altering, extending, or improving a project which was approved in the budget process and funded in this account until one year after substantial completion and beneficial occupancy by the Veterans Administration of the project or any part thereof with respect to that part only: Provided further, That prior to the issuance of a bidding document for any construction contract for a project approved under this heading (excluding completion items), the director of the affected Veterans Administration medical facility must certify that the design of such project is acceptable from a patient care standpoint.

CONSTRUCTION, MINOR PROJECTS

For constructing, altering, extending, and improving any of the facilities under the jurisdiction or for the use of the Veterans Administration, including planning, architectural and engineering services, and site acquisition, or for any of the purposes set forth in sections 1004, 1006, 5002, 5003, 5006, 5008, 5009, and 5010 of title 38, United States Code, where the estimated cost of a project is less than $2,000,000, $65,562,000, to remain available until expended, along with unobligated balances of previous "Construction, minor projects" appropriations which are hereby made available for any project where the estimated cost is less than $2,000,000: Provided, That not more than $37,885,000 shall be available for expenses of the Office of Facilities, including research and development in building construction technology: Provided further, That funds in this account shall be available for (1) repairs to any of the nonmedical facilities under the jurisdiction or for the use of the Veterans Administration which are necessary because of loss or damage caused by any natural disaster or catastrophe and (2) temporary measures necessary to prevent or to minimize further loss by such causes.

PARKING GARAGE REVOLVING FUND

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

For the parking garage revolving fund as authorized by law (38 U.S.C. 5009), $30,000,000, together with income from fees collected, to remain available until expended, of which $4,000,000 shall be derived by transfer from "Construction, major projects". Resources of this fund shall be available for all expenses authorized by 38 U.S.C. 5009.

During 1987, within the resources available, gross obligations of the "Parking garage revolving fund" shall not exceed $31,000,000.

GRANTS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF STATE EXTENDED CARE FACILITIES

For grants to assist the several States to acquire or construct State nursing home and domiciliary facilities and to remodel, modify or alter existing hospital, nursing home and domiciliary facilities in State homes, for furnishing care to veterans, as authorized by law (38 U.S.C. 5031-5037), $42,400,000, to remain available until September 30, 1989.

GRANTS TO THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

For payment to the Republic of the Philippines of grants, as authorized by law (38 U.S.C. 632), for assisting in the replacement and upgrading of equipment and in rehabilitating the physical plant and facilities of the Veterans Memorial Medical Center, $500,000, to remain available until September 30, 1988.

DIRECT LOAN REVOLVING FUND

During 1987, within the resources available, not to exceed $1,000,000 in gross obligations for direct loans is authorized for specially adapted housing loans (38 U.S.C. chapter 37).

LOAN GUARANTY REVOLVING FUND

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

During 1987, the resources of the loan guaranty revolving fund shall be available for expenses for property acquisitions, payment of participation sales insufficiencies, and other loan guaranty and insurance operations, as authorized by law (38 U.S.C. chapter 37, except administrative expenses, as authorized by section 1824 of such title): Provided, That the unobligated balances, including retained earnings of the direct loan revolving fund, shall be available, during 1987, for transfer to the loan guaranty revolving fund in such amounts as may be necessary to provide for the timely payment of obligations of such fund, and the Administrator of Veterans Affairs shall not be required to pay interest on amounts so transferred after the time of such transfer.

During 1987, with the resources available, gross obligations for direct loans and total commitments to guarantee loans are authorized in such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the "Loan guaranty revolving fund".

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

Not to exceed 5 per centum of any appropriation for 1987 for "Compensation and pensions", "Readjustment benefits", and "Veterans insurance and indemnities" may be transferred to any other of the mentioned appropriations, but not to exceed 10 per centum of the appropriations so augmented.

Appropriations available to the Veterans Administration for 1987 for salaries and expenses shall be available for services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109.

No part of the appropriations in this Act for the Veterans Administration (except the appropriations for "Construction, major projects" and "Construction, minor projects") shall be available for the purchase of any site for or toward the construction of any new hospital or home.

No part of the foregoing appropriations shall be available for hospitalization or examination of any persons except beneficiaries entitled under the laws bestowing such benefits to veterans, unless reimbursement of cost is made to the appropriation at such rates as may be fixed by the Administrator of Veterans Affairs.

One or more pilot programs shall be conducted to determine the effectiveness of utilizing private contractual services to assist in the administrative collection of various types of delinquent debts or other funds due the Government.

TITLE III

CORPORATIONS

Corporations and agencies of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board which are subject to the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, are hereby authorized to make such expenditures, within the limits of funds and borrowing authority available to each such corporation or agency and in accord with law, and to make such contracts and commitments without regard to fiscal year limitations as provided by section 104 of the Act as may be necessary in carrying out the programs set forth in the budget for 1987 for such corporation or agency except as hereinafter provided: Provided, That collections of these corporations and agencies may be used for new loan or mortgage purchase commitments only to the extent expressly provided for in this Act (unless such loans are in support of other forms of assistance provided for in this or prior appropriations Acts), except that this proviso shall not apply to the mortgage insurance or guaranty operations of these corporations, or where loans or mortgage purchases are necessary to protect the financial interest of the United States Government.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

LIMITATION ON ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES, FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

Not to exceed a total of $27,693,000 shall be available for administrative expenses of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board for procurement of services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109, and contracts for such services with one organization may be renewed annually, and uniforms or allowances therefor in accordance with law (5 U.S.C. 5901-5902), and said amount shall be derived from funds available to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, including those in the Federal Home Loan Bank Board revolving fund and receipts of the Board for the current fiscal year, of which not to exceed $800,000 shall be available for purposes of training State examiners and not to exceed $1,500 shall be available for official reception and representation expenses: Provided, That members and alternates of the Federal Savings and Loan Advisory Council may be compensated subject to the provisions of section 7 of the Federal Advisory Committee Act, and shall be entitled to reimbursement from the Board for transportation expenses incurred in attendance at meetings of or concerned with the work of such Council and may be paid in lieu of subsistence per diem not to exceed the dollar amount set forth in 5 U.S.C. 5703: Provided further, That, notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act, except for the limitation in amount hereinbefore specified, the expenses and other obligations of the Board shall be incurred, allowed, and paid in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act of 1932, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1421-1449).

LIMITATION ON ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES, FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN INSURANCE CORPORATION

Not to exceed $1,466,000 shall be available for administrative expenses, which shall be on an accrual basis and shall be exclusive of interest paid, depreciation, properly capitalized expenditures, expenses in connection with liquidation of insured institutions or activities relating to section 406(c), 407, or 408 of the National Housing Act, liquidation or handling of assets of or derived from insured institutions, payment of insurance, and action for or toward the avoidance, termination, or minimizing of losses in the case of insured institutions, legal fees and expenses and payments for expenses of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board determined by said Board to be properly allocable to said Corporation, and said Corporation may utilize and may make payments for services and facilities of the Federal home loan banks, the Federal Reserve banks, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, and other agencies of the Government: Provided, That, notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act, except for the limitation in amount hereinbefore specified, the administrative expenses and other obligations of said Corporation shall be incurred, allowed, and paid in accordance with title IV of the Act of June 27, 1934, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1724-1730f).

TITLE IV

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SECTION 401. Where appropriations in titles I and II of this Act are expendable for travel expenses and no specific limitation has been placed thereon, the expenditures for such travel expenses may not exceed the amounts set forth therefor in the budget estimates submitted for the appropriations: Provided, That this section shall not apply to travel performed by uncompensated officials of local boards and appeal boards of the Selective Service System; to travel performed directly in connection with care and treatment of medical beneficiaries of the Veterans Administration; to travel performed in connection with major disasters or emergencies declared or determined by the President under the provisions of the Disaster Relief Act of 1974; to site-related travel performed in connection with the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980; to site-related travel under the Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended; or to payments to interagency motor pools where separately set forth in the budget schedules: Provided further, That if appropriations in titles I and II exceed the amounts set forth in budget estimates initially submitted for such appropriations, the expenditures for travel may correspondingly exceed the amounts therefor set forth in the estimates in the same proportion.

SEC. 402. Appropriations and funds available for the administrative expenses of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Selective Service System shall be available in the current fiscal year for purchase of uniforms, or allowances therefor, as authorized by law (5 U.S.C. 5901-5902); hire of passenger motor vehicles; and services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109.

SEC. 403. Funds of the Department of Housing and Urban Development subject to the Government Corporation Control Act or section 402 of the Housing Act of 1950 shall be available, without regard to the limitations on administrative expenses, for legal services on a contract or fee basis, and for utilizing and making payment for services and facilities of Federal National Mortgage Association, Government National Mortgage Association, Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, Federal Financing Bank, Federal Reserve banks or any member thereof, Federal home loan banks, and any insured bank within the meaning of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1811-1831).

SEC. 404. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall remain available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year unless expressly so provided herein.

SEC. 405. No funds appropriated by this Act may be expended—

(1) pursuant to a certification of an officer or employee of the United States unless—

(A) such certification is accompanied by, or is part of, a voucher or abstract which describes the payee or payees and the items or services for which such expenditure is being made, or

(B) the expenditure of funds pursuant to such certification, and without such a voucher or abstract, is specifically authorized by law; and

(2) unless such expenditure is subject to audit by the General Accounting Office or is specifically exempt by law from such audit.

SEC. 406. None of the funds provided in this Act to any department or agency may be expended for the transportation of any officer or employee of such department or agency between his domicile and his place of employment, with the exception of the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, who, under title 5, United States Code, section 101, is exempted from such limitation.

SEC. 407. None of the funds provided in this Act may be used for payment, through grants or contracts, to recipients that do not share in the cost of conducting research resulting from proposals not specifically solicited by the Government: Provided, That the extent of cost sharing by the recipient shall reflect the mutuality of interest of the grantee or contractor and the Government in the research.

SEC. 408. None of the funds provided in this Act may be used, directly or through grants, to pay or to provide reimbursement for payment of the salary of a consultant (whether retained by the Federal Government or a grantee) at more than the daily equivalent of the maximum rate paid for GS-18, unless specifically authorized by law.

SEC. 409. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act for personnel compensation and benefits shall be available for other object classifications set forth in the budget estimates submitted for the appropriations.

SEC. 410. None of the funds in this Act shall be used to pay the expenses of, or otherwise compensate, non-Federal parties intervening in regulatory or adjudicatory proceedings. Nothing herein affects the authority of the Consumer Product Safety Commission pursuant to section 7 of the Consumer Product Safety Act (15 U.S.C. 2056 et seq.).

SEC. 411. Except as otherwise provided under existing law or under an existing Executive order issued pursuant to an existing law, the obligation or expenditure of any appropriation under this Act for contracts for any consulting service shall be limited to contracts which are (1) a matter of public record and available for public inspection, and (2) thereafter included in a publicly available list of all contracts entered into within twenty-four months prior to the date on which the list is made available to the public and of all contracts on which performance has not been completed by such date. The list required by the preceding sentence shall be updated quarterly and shall include a narrative description of the work to be performed under each such contract.

SEC. 412. Except as otherwise provided by law, no part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall be obligated or expended by any executive agency, as referred to in the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 401 et seq.) for a contract for services unless such executive agency (1) has awarded and entered into such contract in full compliance with such Act and the regulations promulgated thereunder and (2) requires any report prepared pursuant to such contract, including plans, evaluations, studies, analyses and manuals, and any report prepared by the agency which is substantially derived from or substantially includes any report prepared pursuant to such contract, to contain information concerning (A) the contract pursuant to which the report was prepared and (B) the contractor who prepared the report pursuant to such contract.

SEC. 413. Except as otherwise provided in section 406, none of the funds provided in this Act to any department or agency shall be obligated or expended to provide a personal cook, chauffeur, or other personal servants to any officer or employee of such department or agency.

SEC. 414. None of the funds provided in this Act to any department or agency shall be obligated or expended to procure passenger automobiles as defined in 15 U.S.C. 2001 with an EPA estimated miles per gallon average of less than 22 miles per gallon.

This may be cited as the "Department of Housing and Urban Development-Independent Agencies Appropriations Act, 1987".

Mr. BOLAND (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. TRAFICANT

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRAFICANT: Page 50, after line 12, insert the following new section:

SEC. 415. None of the funds provided by this Act shall be used to close the Veterans' Administration Outpatient Clinic at Youngstown, Ohio.

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MR. BOLAND

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the preferential motion.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire, Is this a simple motion to rise or a motion to rise and report the bill?

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, the motion is as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. FOLEY] having assumed the chair, Mr. MACKAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5313) making appropriations for the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and for sundry independent agencies, boards, commissions, corporations, and offices for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 295, nays 46, answered "present" 1, not voting 89, as follows:

Mr. UDALL and Mr. WEAVER changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. LOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have requested this time for the purpose of receiving the legislative schedule for today and the balance of the week, and for next week.

Mr. Speaker, momentarily I will yield to the distinguished majority whip, who has the very dubious responsibility of explaining our schedule for the rest of this day and for next week.

I would like to say first of all that it is amazing to me that the membership of this body continues to tolerate the type of jerking around that we are getting on the way in which the schedule is handled. We are not working on Mondays, we are not having votes on Tuesdays, and the schedule which I have before me shows that we will not even be in session on Monday. Then we are in session until 10 o'clock on Wednesday night. We are first told that we will not have a session on Friday, and then on Wednesday afternoon we are told that we will have a session on Friday. Major legislation is not on the schedule next week.

It is amazing to me that our membership tolerates from the leadership this type of process, and I include the leadership of this side, too, because we should complain a lot more vigorously than we do, and we should make it known much more aggressively when we are not even consulted as to the way in which the schedule is handled.

I frankly resent it, and I would hope that our leadership would be fairer with each other and with the rank-and-file Members in the way in which the schedule is handled in the next 3 weeks, because it is going to be bad enough without the type of uncertainty and acrimony that schedule changes induce.

With that, I am glad to yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY], who is in the very difficult position of having to explain other people's decisions.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I certainly understand the depth of the gentleman's feelings on this issue. I would say, however, that the Members have generally been familiar with a schedule where we consider suspensions on Monday and roll the votes until Tuesday, and that has been the process of suspension votes on Monday for most of this year, and I am not aware of a good deal of complaint from the leadership on the other side, or from Members on either side, with that proceeding.

We can schedule votes on Monday and have Members come back and vote on Monday, but it has been our practice to attempt to accommodate the primary elections in various States where both Members are involved, and to have votes postponed on Tuesday, on a primary day, and to have those votes considered at the end of the day, and to have either a pro forma session or votes rolled from Monday until Tuesday in late afternoon.

There is nothing unusual about that. It has been done to accommodate Members from every State in the Union that has had primaries over the recent several months.

Next week in Washington State and in Massachusetts there will be primaries. I am personally going to be here, but there are Members who may want to be in their home States on those 2 days, exactly as we have done for every other State that has had a primary.

The one difference between the schedule this week compared to last week is that rather than rolling the votes on suspensions from Monday to Tuesday, we propose not to have a session at all on Monday. There is really very little difference in that, except that we are considering all of the suspensions on Tuesday, rather than half of them on Monday and half on Tuesday.

Mr. LOTT. If the gentleman will allow me to comment on that point, you now have on the schedule for Tuesday 15 suspensions, the Intelligence Authorization Act, conference report on Community Services Programs amendments, minimum altitude over park lands, and votes on suspensions. It may be Wednesday before we get through with that Tuesday session.

Mr. FOLEY. I will tell the gentleman, without denigrating the importance of any of the bills on the Suspension Calendar, if he will read over the list—and I will read it for him and for the Members—he will find that the bills can be fairly classified as noncontroversial, and they should not take all day for debate and consideration.

Mr. LOTT. On one of these bills I have already had somebody gnawing on my leg that it is not noncontroversial.

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman finds one that is controversial that he feels that he would like to have moved to a certain time on the schedule, I would be glad to consider doing that.

As far as the Intelligence Authorization Act is concerned, the rule and the general debate only are being considered on Tuesday, and conference reports, of course, can be brought up at any time under normal considerations.

I should not think that the schedule on Tuesday will keep us overly late, but again, I do not think that most of the Members would appreciate it if we were to back up and schedule half of the suspensions on Monday and have votes on Monday, and bring Members back here who would then have to go back to their home States and come back here again if they are in primary States for more votes on Tuesday.

I think that if we had done that in the past, we would have had the most vigorous representation of objection from the leadership on the other side and from Members on both sides on the aisle.

□ 1525

We are just treating next week virtually as we have treated every week in which there has been a primary election.

As to the schedule at the end of the year, the gentleman knows that it is not easy to predict with absolute certainty in the final weeks of a session whether we will have a Friday session or not. For the benefit of Members, I would say it is extremely unwise at this juncture, and until the sine die adjournment of the House, for any Member to plan in advance to be free on Friday.

I think the Members should be on notice that Friday sessions may well be scheduled or may have to be used to finish important business not completed during the earlier part of the week.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, if I could reclaim my time just to make two basic points; No. 1, at the very minimum, if the Members could have some certainty as to what they could count on, I think they could live with just about anything.

If we could try, by talking to each other, to keep our Members informed as early as possible what they can count on, that would solve a lot of the grumbling.

If the gentleman is not hearing it on his side, I am sorry, because I am hearing it from your side over here.

Second, we are in the final days of a session that I keep hearing is going to adjourn October 3, although there are others who talk about the 10th and there are others who are talking about a lame duck session. We understand you have to listen to Members and accommodate elections and all that, but if we are going to get out of here by October 3, at some point we are going to have to start working more than 3 days a week.

Mr. FOLEY. I am just telling the gentleman that Friday sessions are to be expected from now until the end of the session.

As the gentleman knows, the course of legislation is not easy to predict. We might have a serious bill up on Thursday that takes a very long time to conclude because of amendments and debate and might have to go over until Friday.

It would be nice if we could adjust the schedule to perfect certainty, but no one knows how long a bill will sometimes require because of the extent of debate and the offering of amendments, particularly on bills with open rules.

We have all had the experience of having people come up to us and say, "What time will this debate be over?" It will be over when the House decides it is over, unless there is a limitation on time.

So we are going to do our best, I will assure the gentleman, to advise Members, but I cannot see that any Member has been inconvenienced by the fact that I am going to propose that we adjourn until Tuesday, and if that is objected to, we will have a pro forma session on Monday.

Mr. LOTT. I know there is a very, very bipartisan event scheduled, I think, for next Tuesday night, September 16. I presume it is Tuesday or Wednesday. I presume that the House would not go early while our bipartisan effort is engaged in combat on the baseball diamond.

Mr. FOLEY. I think the gentleman is referring to something on Wednesday.

Mr. LOTT. So we do not anticipate a late session on Wednesday, then?

Mr. FOLEY. I am not going to speak as the most expert or active baseball fan in the House, but I think we will try to put the schedule first and we hope that that will also make it possible to do whatever the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. LOTT. We would like to cooperate with you in that effort.

Maybe we could hear the schedule and we can discuss this more after that.

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman will yield further, if unanimous consent is given, the House will meet on Tuesday to consider the Private Calendar and suspension of the rules on the following bills:

H.R. 4754, FDA Commissioner confirmation;

H.R. 5230, authorizations for childhood immunization;

H.R. 5259, alcohol and drug abuse amendments;

H.R. 1156, Indian Youth Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention Act;

H.R. 5167, hold in trust Pueblo (Zia) lands;

H.R. 4873, authorize transfer of lands to Santa Anna pueblos;

H.R. 4089, prohibit construction of dams in national parks;

H.R. 4794, amend National Trails System Act to designate Santa Fe Trail as a national history trail;

H.R. 4316, patents in space;

H.R. 4899, Patent Equity Act;

H.R. 4545, American Folklife Center;

H.R. 3358, striped bass;

H.R. 4838, fair treatment of airline mergers;

H. Con. Res. 339, sense of Congress that essential air service program be continued; and

H.R. 4492, transfer of airport property in Algona, IA.

In addition, the consideration of H.R. 4759, Intelligence Authorization Act, fiscal year 1987, modified rule, the rule and general debate only, and the conference report on H.R. 4421, the Community Services Programs amendments.

Recorded votes on suspensions debated on Tuesday will be voted on Tuesday at the conclusion of all suspensions.

Also on Tuesday, H.R. 4430, the minimum altitude over park lands, open rule, 1 hour of debate.

On Wednesday, September 17, 1986, the House meets at noon and considers H.R. 4759, the Intelligence Authorization Act of fiscal year 1987 and H.R. 2482, the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act, modified rule, 1 hour of debate.

Thursday and Friday, the House will meet at 9:30 on Thursday and 10 a.m. on Friday.

On Thursday, the House will meet at 9:30 and immediately recess until shortly before 10 a.m. when there will be a joint session to receive Her Excellency, President Aquino, the President of the Republic of the Philippines, and then consider, following her address in the joint session, House concurrent resolution, unnumbered, to continue appropriations for fiscal year 1987, and H.R. 1426, the Indian Health Care Improvement Act.

Mr. LOTT. Will there be any further business today?

Mr. FOLEY. No further business today.

Mr. LOTT. You do not intend to take up the rule on the intelligence bill?

Mr. FOLEY. No; we do not intend to take up the rule on intelligence today. We have assured Members that the House would conclude its legislative business at 3 p.m.

Mr. LOTT. I noticed that on Wednesday, you had us coming in at noon instead of 10 a.m. Do we not usually come in at 10 a.m. on Wednesday? If we are going to be squeezed a little bit at the end of the day, I would have thought we would have come in earlier.

The reason I ask that is that some Members gave me a hard time because we came in at 9 a.m. today. They thought it was 10 a.m. We put out the notice; they did not get the notice.

Is there a reason why we come in at 12 on Wednesday?

Mr. FOLEY. I am not particularly aware of any reason why we are coming in at 12 on Wednesday. I am informed that there is a Democratic caucus scheduled for that morning.

Mr. LOTT. That would be fine with us.

Mr. FOLEY. We try to accommodate the Republican conference; we try to accommodate our own caucuses.

Mr. LOTT. So we will not go in at 10 a.m., we go in at 12 on Wednesday.

Mr. FOLEY. That is right.

Mr. LOTT. Let me ask you a couple of questions about some things that are not listed here.

Of course, you note that conference reports can come up at any point and, therefore, would not necessarily be specifically listed here, but the gentleman, I take it, does not anticipate the tax reform conference report would very likely come up next week?

Is that correct?

Mr. FOLEY. It is possible. I am not suggesting this; it is possible that it could be brought up on Friday of next week.

Mr. LOTT. That is very important because on Friday, you have got a couple of bills that maybe would not be considered of major consequence if Members might not be able to stay, but if a tax reform package is going to come up——

Mr. FOLEY. We would certainly advise the Members on both sides of the aisle at the beginning of next week. The conference report has not been filed on the tax bill, and at the time that it is filed, we would advise the Members if it is to be considered next week.

□ 1535

Mr. LOTT. I note that once again there is nothing on here about reconciliation.

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman will yield, we intend to take up a reconciliation bill at an early time. As the gentleman knows, there has been an action of the joint Budget Committee, referring the report of the OMB and the CBO, to the two bodies of the Congress, the House and the Senate; it may be that the Senate will be voting late next week and we would hope to be voting on a reconciliation bill prior to the consideration of a sequestration act or simultaneously with it.

So, although it is not listed on the schedule, the gentleman will be assured that a reconciliation bill is very much in the immediate schedule.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, some of the things the gentleman is saying, I think it may be applicable to what you are doing on sequestration, not necessarily on reconciliation—are they both being moved and are you going to put them together and are you going to act on them after you take up the continuing resolution? It looks to me as if we ought to look at reconciliation.

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman will yield, a decision has not been made on that to the degree that I could make any announcement on it, except to assure the gentleman that, as he knows, under the Gramm-Rudman statute, 5 legislative days following the adoption of the joint resolution, it is a privileged matter to be brought on the floor by any Member.

As I understand the intention of our leadership, and I assume your leadership as well, there is a desire to deal with the Reconciliation Act prior to that time.

Mr. LOTT. Absolutely. Mr. Speaker, we wanted to deal with it before we went out in August, so we are very much interested in reconciliation.

I wonder, though, you know we are not going to be in session on Monday, which is kind of an unusual event; and so then the 5 legislative days would not start counting until Tuesday instead of Monday, so the odds are sequestration could not be, or is not likely to be brought up next week. Is that part of your thinking? Is that why we are not going to be in session on Monday?

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman will yield, there was some original thought on that, but it is not part of the final decision to not have a session Monday; and the Budget Committee has not indicated any desire to avoid a Monday session for that reason.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, let me ask the gentleman, does he expect reconciliation or sequestration, either, one to come up any day next week?

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman will yield further, I personally do not believe that we will have either one next week, but the week following.

Mr. LOTT. And so we will have already voted in the House on the continuing resolution?

Mr. FOLEY. I do not want to make a commitment to the gentleman. The situation could change, but that is my expectation.

Mr. LOTT. In that case, we will have already voted on the continuing resolution, before we take up reconciliation or even sequestration; is that correct?

Mr. FOLEY. Yes; I believe we will be voting on the continuing resolution previous to voting on reconciliation.

Mr. LOTT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am extremely frustrated and concerned about what I see on the schedule; but I understand the gentleman's role and I appreciate his advising us of what we can expect at this point.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from California if he has an inquiry he would like to make.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I note the absence of the immigration bill on the calendar; and some of us, at the time we left for our break in August, were under the understanding that it was going to come up next week.

Is it now the thinking of the leadership that the immigration bill is to be scheduled the week after? Or has there been any date set for that.

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] will yield, again I can only give the gentleman an impression that we have a schedule for it to be considered by Rules next week, and I assumed it would be scheduled for floor action the following week.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] will yield for a further inquiry. That is consistent with the intention at this point to have October 3 as our getaway date?

Mr. FOLEY. The gentleman will have to make his own judgment as to the likelihood of meeting the target, the official target, of the 3d of November.

It remains the joint intention of the leadership on both sides of the aisle and of the leadership in the other body to adjourn the House sine die by the 3d of October. There is no other intention.

I would suggest to the gentleman that in the 22 years that I have served in this body, I cannot yet remember an occasion on which the precise announced adjournment date was actually adhered to due to the pressure of business.

Mr. LUNGREN. I appreciate the comments of the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] will continue to yield, I would just say that for those of us who have been working for immigration reform, the assurances that we had received earlier in the year that the House was in fact going to work on it, and it was the intention to deal with that issue before we went home in a finished fashion, ring rather hollow now.

If the gentleman believes an issue of that magnitude can be dealt with in 1 week and then go to conference, with all the problems that ensue, and have it on the President's desk, I think the gentleman is asking too much; and I understand the House may therefore look like it is doing something but unfortunately it sounds like the will of the people is to be frustrated again.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] will yield, I do not agree with the gentleman from California's [Mr. LUNGREN] conclusions. That is the only comment I would make on his statement.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1986

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at noon on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Tuesday next, it adjourn to meet at noon on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1986

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING A SPECIAL CONSENT CALENDAR ON TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1986

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be a special Consent Calendar on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION TO FILE REPORTS ON HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 339, H.R. 4492, AND H.R. 4838

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation may have until midnight tonight to file three reports on bills passed unanimously from the committee. They have been cleared by the minority.

They are: House Concurrent Resolution 339, H.R. 4492, and H.R. 4838.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now entertain requests by Members for 1-minute speeches?

THE NEW CITY OF ENCINITAS, CALIFORNIA

(Mr. PACKARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, on October 1, 1986, a new city will be born in my district—the city of Encinitas. Encinitas incorporates 26 square miles of some of the most beautiful coastline in San Diego County. 44,000 Californians make their homes there.

The decision to incorporate was made by 70 percent of the voters in order to gain local control of land use issues and to develop a community identity. A great deal of pride went into this important decision resulting in the incorporation of the largest area in recent California history. This proud community has elected its first city council, comprised of Marjorie Gaines, Greg Luke, Ann Omsted, Rick Shea, and Gerald Steel.

Congratulations to Encinitas on its October 1, 1986, birthday!

DESIGNATION OF THE HONORABLE THOMAS S. FOLEY TO ACT AS SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS UNTIL SEPTEMBER 17, 1986

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
September 12, 1986.

I hereby designate the Honorable Thomas S. Foley to act as Speaker pro tempore to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions until Wednesday, September 17, 1986.

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the designation is agreed to.

There was no objection.

SECURITY ASSISTANCE FOR GREECE AND TURKEY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call the House's attention to a legislative development which could have negative implications for the U.S. Security Assistance Programs for Greece and Turkey.

The legislation in question is section 1205 of the Senate Defense authorization bill. This section authorizes the Pentagon to transfer defense equipment to countries in NATO's southern flank, including Greece and Turkey, to assist them in modernizing their defense capabilities.

On the surface this legislation would seem to be a necessary tool in bolstering the NATO alliance. However, this legislation in its present form is flawed in several respects. Further it reflects the administration's desire to circumvent present law regarding United States policy toward Greece and Turkey.

This section, if enacted into law, would blatantly disregard the congressionally-mandated earmarks of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985 for Greece and Turkey. As my colleagues know, the Congress has for successive years appropriated security assistance for Turkey and Greece based on the concept of the 10 to 7 ratio. Our foreign aid program for these two nations reflects the strong interest of Congress to ease tensions between these two NATO allies and to bring about a peaceful settlement on Cyprus. It seems clear to me that the Pentagon, in promoting this section, was motivated by a desire to undercut legitimate congressional involvement in U.S. policy toward the eastern Mediterranean.

Mr. Speaker, it is unclear as to whether this legislation is germane to the defense authorization bill. Providing security assistance to foreign nations, whether as grant aid or in the form of FMS credits, is the responsibility of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

I recognize the importance of providing a sufficient amount of military assistance to our allies. But there are serious political and security problems between Greece and Turkey which must be resolved if NATO's southern flank is to be an effective deterrent against Soviet expansionism.

Mr. Speaker, the House has not considered this legislation, and I strongly urge our colleagues to oppose this section in conference committee.

S. 2638

SEC. 1205. MODERNIZATION OF DEFENSE CAPABILITIES OF COUNTRIES OF NATO'S SOUTHERN FLANK

(a) AUTHORITY TO TRANSFER EQUIPMENT.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law and subject to subsection (b), the President may transfer to those member nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) on the southern flank of NATO which are eligible for United States security assistance and which are integrated into NATO's military structure such defense equipment as the President determines necessary to help modernize the defense capabilities of such nations. Such equipment may be transferred without cost to the recipient nations.

(b) LIMITATIONS ON TRANSFERS.—The President may transfer defense equipment under this section only if—

(1) the equipment is drawn from existing stocks of the Department of Defense.

(2) no funds available to the Department of Defense for the procurement of defense equipment are expended in connection with the transfer; and

(3) the President determines that the transfer of the equipment will not have an adverse impact on the Armed Forces of the United States.

(c) NOTIFICATION TO COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS.—The President may not transfer defense equipment under this section until—

(1) he has notified the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives, the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives of the proposed transfer and included in such notification a certification of the need for the transfer and an assessment of the impact of the transfer on the Armed Forces of the United States; and

(d) DEFINITION.—In subsection (a), the term "member nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) on the southern flank of NATO" means Greece, Italy, Portugal, Spain, and Turkey.

UPCOMING VOTE ON SEQUESTRATION JOINT RESOLUTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, it is likely that late next week the House will vote on a joint resolution encompassing the across-the-board spending cuts outlined in the OMB/CBO August 20 Gramm-Rudman report. Yesterday, the Temporary Joint Committee on Deficit Reduction—made up of the House and Senate Budget Committees—approved a joint resolution providing for these cuts and once the committee's report is filed the clock will start running on the 5 calendar days of session time limit for a vote in both the House and Senate.

Since the OMB/CBO report did not receive wide distribution I think it would be useful to list the highlights of the reductions necessary to reach the $144 billion target. Also, some of the key tables in the OMB/CBO report are included below.

OMB/CBO fiscal year 1987 deficit snapshot: $163.4 billion.

Total deficit reduction needed to reach $144 billion: $19.4 billion.

Across-the-board percentage cuts in defense: 5.6 percent.

Across-the-board percentage cuts in nondefense: 7.6 percent.

Total defense cuts: Budget authority, $19.1 billion; outlays, $9.7 billion.

Total nondefense cuts: Budget authority, $16.4 billion; outlays, $9.7 billion.

COLA's for 16 programs, including Civil Service retirement and military retirement, are eliminated.

Cut of 2 percent in Medicare totaling $1.2 billion.

Cut of 2 percent in veterans medical care, Community and Migrant Health Centers, Indian Health Services, for savings of $192 million.

Cut in CCC payments of $1.3 billion.

Budget authority cut in Department of Education, $1.1 billion.

Budget authority cut for Department of Transporation, $2.3 billion.

Budget authority cut for NASA, $600 million.

Budget authority cut in Veterans Administration, $400 million.

Budget authority cut in HHS, $2.7 billion.

Budget authority cut in military personnel, $3.8 billion.

Budget authority cut in Defense procurement, $7.7 billion.

Budget authority cut in Defense Operations and Maintenance, $4.2 billion.

The following are some of the key tables from the OMB/CBO report:

SEQUSTRATION CALCULATIONS FOR 1987

[Outlays in millions of dollars]

THE STOCK MARKET COLLAPSE OF 1986

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WEAVER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, the stock market fall of 86 points in the Dow Jones industrial average yesterday was indeed a reminder of the 1929 stock market crash, and it is in my estimation the beginning of our own demise of our own stock market. I wrote an article which was published by the New Republic a year and a half ago in which I said that, first, the stock market would go way up, would hit 2,000 points. It came to about 1920. And then would crash. And I said that that would be the beginning of an economic depression in the United States.

These predictions of gloom and doom do no one any good unless there is a reason that we should explore why they are going to occur because, Mr. Speaker, it will not be the stock market crash that will be the big event in this cycle, this 55-year cycle that we are going to enter into now. The real estate crash will be by far worse, for the simple reason that in 1929 it was the stock market that had gone into the sky in a binge of buying, and its crash was the greatest.

In this cycle our cycle that is ending now, it has been real estate that has been most inflated. the prices most absurd. So we can anticipate a horrendous real estate crash in the years immediately to follow. The tax bill that is under way and out of conference now is of course not going to cause the real estate crash but it will certainly knock the props out from the already wobbly real estate market in this Nation. The basic reasons as to why this happens? Why are we now going to enter into a period of economic depression? Why is the stock market going to fall? Why is the real estate market going to crash? The answers are very simple. For the last 20 or 30 years we have been gradually building up in our entire economy, our entire society a more lax, loose, sloppy, greedy way of life. We have gone out and where, in the 1930's, we built efficient dams and produced electricity cheaply, we built small cars that operated cheaply on cheap oil, later on we got nuclear plants costing billions of dollars, oil that cost $35 a barrel.

I predicted in my New Republic article a year and a half ago that while the stock market would make one last trip up and then crash, that OPEC would collapse sooner than that and oil would fall to $12 a barrel. It indeed has and I assume it will go even lower.

The fundamental reason the world is now in trouble after that binge of the last 20 or 30 years of the "m" generation, greed, laxity, sloppiness, permissive life styles, permissive economics, permissive morals, the reason that that is going to collapse now is that all productive facets in the world are overproducing.

Our farmers are overproducing but also the computers and car manfacturers, et cetera, throughout the world are overproducing.

The world is awash in goods. That is an irony. People are starving, people are poor in the world, yet for those who can buy, the world is awash in goods and the price will be driven down for all goods. International trade wars are going to come simply because everybody is going to dump their goods on the market. It was very simple to real estate when the dollar fell a year ago it was not going to help restore our international trade because the companies in Taiwan, Korea, Japan, and Germany were going to continue manufacturing as much as they possible could because they had cash flow problems, bank loans, and that is going to continue, that is going to increase and accelerate, with the dumping of goods all over the world, on our markets where they can. Our farmers want to sell cheaper the grain that they grow that they are already taking a loss on. So this is all going to be deflationary. Now if we do however try to bail out the big New York banks when those banks collapse as they soon will, if we try to bail them out when they collapse from the loss of Third World loans, agriculture, real estate, energy loans, and put hundreds of billions of dollars into them and then try to bail out other people throughout the Nation when their houses fall below the value of their mortgages, if we try to do that, we will get a spike-up in inflation. But the most likely thing to occur is deflation because the money supply will, while accelerating today from the permissive rules of the Federal Reserve Board, presently the deflation will come primarily from the liquidation, bankruptcy, and foreclosure of all the other values that we have.

MY ADVICE TO THE PRIVILEGED ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the distinguished Speaker pro tempore and my colleagues that it certainly is not my intention to utilize the privileged 60 minutes I have been authorized on this occasion. However, as I have on prior occasions, I am impelled to rise and speak at this precise moment because of the urgency of some of the issues that are not being addressed either by the Congress or by the administration and which I believe the American people should expect us to address. For one, I have spoken before on many occasions, now, since December 1981, but particularly within the last 9 months about continuing precarious situation of our armed services personnel, mostly airborne, that are part of the so-called peace-keeping contingent in the Sinai. This was born of a resolution that was entertained in the House of Representatives on December 12, 1981, with very few Members being present, and which I questioned at the time. All of this, of course, is in the RECORD of that day so that I shall not go into that.

I questioned it because the fact that this is the first time that the Congress has on its own since the first Congress in 1789 mandated and deployed the organization of an armed services component of our country and then deployed it, on congressional mandate, to form a part of what was going to be projected as an international consortium or as a peace-keeping group.

There were two things unique, besides the fact that this was the first time that the Congress had legislated in this matter. As you know, constitutionally speaking it is a question that the Constitution really leaves for the Commander in Chief of the executive branch or the Chief Magistrate, as they used to say, in the Constitutional Convention, and the actual raising of armies has been the constitutional prerogatives of the Congress. But once it has, then it is the Commander in Chief, the President, who is to order and mandate and carry on the operations of the defense of our country. The other uniqueness of it is that there is no clear mission, peace keeping or otherwise, as to what the purpose of the military, equipped as they are, is on this particular occasion on this mission.

There might be also a corollary strange thing about it, and that is the component nations that share this peace-keeping duty. I have mentioned before for the record that our contingency consists of some close to 2,000, not quite 2,000 troops. That is the statutory limitation that we placed in that resolution at the time of the formulation of the group under congressional mandate. The next highest contingent is 500 Fiji Islanders. Then there are about 500 Colombians, soldiers. Originally there were 1,000 but they had trouble in Colombia, and they took about half of their contingent back. The Colombian contingency was actually forced by then Secretary Alexander Haig, by actually inviting and then threatening the President of Colombia that if they did not comply, perhaps American aid would not be forthcoming. Our American citizens simply do not realize how in the name of all of us our Government and some of its temporary office holders have acted in such ways that we do not consider to be in keeping with the American tradition and that we associate with totalitarian-structured governments. Yet we are and continue to be, I have on repeated occasions pointed out how we have so immorally behaved in the case of Central America, and continue to do so, in which we are the direct cause of much blood shedding of indigenous fratricidal civil wars that to our great, I believe, detriment, as the future will inexorably show us, will prove.

In any event, I have pointed out that ever since the relationship between our country and some of the countries in the Arabic world have deteriorated, that the threat to the well-being of these contingents in the Sinai increases daily.

My immediate discussion has to do with a news item the day before yesterday in which negotiators representing the State of Israel and that of Egypt had, on a lower diplomatic level, failed to reach agreement on a border dispute and therefore were looking toward a hoped-for summit meeting between the actual executive leaders of both states.

I had pointed out that ever since the advent of these acts of terrorism those committed by the individuals and heads of state that we so roundly condemn, and I might also say with a great deal of sadness those that we have committed because we have committed acts that would fully be defined and are in world opinion, maybe not here in America because I think our constituents simply are not really informed, but I might add also sadly that outside in the external world public opinion is condemnatory of America's behavior, and we have authorized the attempt to assassinate leaders of some of the Central American nations.

It has been our so-called, supposedly under the 1947 act, exclusively operative in foreign shores, our intelligence community but which actually has violated that charter time and time again by conducting espionage and unauthorized surveillance of American citizens domestically in the boundaries of the continental United States.

□ 1600

But it has been cheeks by jowl with the assassins of the Arch Bishop of El Salvador, our own five American nuns, tragically all with what I consider to be a mistaken notion and a sadly aired misperception of what it is all about in this part of the world.

I feel that these men in the Sinai are highly vulnerable to those with whom we have engaged in actual acts of war, particularly some of the Arab nations that we are, in effect, conducting acts of war, and that finds us very vulnerable. The men in the Sinai, though, they are soldiers, are not equipped. They have no armor. They have no air power. I believe they are very susceptible to a well coordinated and supplied attack or force that would have minimal capability with the required armament, such as recoilless rifles and the like.

The question remains: What is the mission? Among whom are they keeping the peace?

As I said in December of 1981, it is an attempt to keep the peace between two friendly nations up to now, Israel and Egypt. So my question remains the same as I asked in 1981: Should Israel accuse Egypt of violating the understanding which was based on the Camp David agreements to which the United States was not a party signatory? What do we do? Do the peacekeeping forces march in case of an alleged violation on the complaint of one state marching to the other and vice versa? Or if attacked, as I fear—the danger is so great, and especially now when ways and means are being sought to embarrass this country and embarrass our leaders at this time.

Remember that in April with the bombing of Tripoli with the unquestionable intention of killing the leader in Libya, Qadhafi, that we also killed and maimed many innocent children and women. The fact is that weeks later, we were all boasting, and the leadership in the Congress approved that act. Some of us did not. Some of us were and continue to be highly critical of the President's decision along those lines. But we were not heard from. Everybody was drowned out in the chorus of endorsement by the leaders of the Congress on both sides of the aisle.

It was announced that this would put a stop to terrorism, that this would teach a lesson to those that were going to be hunting down Americans. But what has happened here is the reverse, just in a matter of less than 2 weeks. We had two Americans abducted in Beirut. We had the terrible, terrible tragedy in Pakistan. There is no question that Americans were the object.

So that the increment for this violence has been intensed. The chances and the potential have not been reduced.

Therefore, in my humble opinion, one of the most forceful ways of demonstrating our vulnerability would be to foist an attack by whoever would consider that to be advantageous on these troops that we have in the Sinai.

I have requested the committees that have jurisdiction to continue to have some oversight on this, and ask these questions: What do we do, Mr. President? Suppose some, even if it is just one, of the soldiers, whether he is American or not, is attacked and is killed, what are we going to do? Are we going to back them up or are we going to send additional troops? What are we going to do? What is the mission?

This was the question I asked for 14 months of President Reagan in the case of his deployment of the marines in Beirut with the tragic consequences of 241 having been killed.

These things are disheartening because they are avoidable with wise, prudent, and dispassionate leadership, which I have said unfortunately is not the case of what we have in America today.

So I am again warning my colleagues as they go back over this weekend period to their districts that this is a constantly hovering ghost over us and should be. We cannot be comfortable and know that we have not defined the mission of these men. Remember we are talking about a little under 2,000 Americans, if nothing else, though we ought to be equally concerned about those who we have elicited to join us.

Second, I wish to discuss a subject matter that is agitating, and again which neither the Congress nor the administration seems to be cognizant of. It affects such States as my own, the State of Texas, and all of the petroleum product producing States, about 5 out of the 50.

We are in great distress. The fact is that here again our erstwhile competitors—some consider them enemies. I do not. I believe in Lyndon Johnson's old dictum. He said, "If you want to have a friend, you got to be a friend." I think that is true in relations collectively. So what to some of my colleagues is a confirmed enemy, I would not describe it as such because history does not show it to be as such.

Therefore, I feel that we have reached a point where we must realize that these countries, whether they are enemies or just plain economic competitors, are more skillful and have developed an ability to use such resources as energy, petroleum products, as a policy weapon. As of last week, for instance, Russia announced, even though there has been hostility between the two nations—I will recall for the record that Russia invaded Iran soon after the shooting phase of World War II was over with in 1946. At that time, we had a lot of muscle. We had a lot of moral suasive power plus muscle. And we really were the ones who compelled a rollback, together with the help of the British at that time, whose colonial inheritance we have accepted, both French as well as British. This is not the way we look upon ourselves, I know; but this is the way the external world looks upon us, and that is the way we are looked upon in the Middle East.

What I am saying is that despite the hostility, ideological, political, and international, between these border states of Russia and Iran, Russia announced a compact or an agreement with Iran to supply it with gas in its conduct of war against Iraq. Our State Department is praying every day that Iran will not win for a variety of reasons.

In the meanwhile, the President's bombing of Tripoli has unified in a way the Arab world, because Libya and its leader are Arabic. Iran is not. It is not Arabic. Iraq is Arabic. However, the question is: Why would Russia enter into a deal. It really actually produces more petroleum than we do, and this has been true now for several years.

□ 1610

But it uses it as a weapon because it knows that it is a diplomatic weapon that can be used in this unseasoned struggle for hegemony or power in the Middle East, and that either one, they feel that Iran can win or is going to or they are hedging their bets. Either way, they cannot lose.

We cannot do that. The Russians know also that if they help Iran and Iran does win that we will see our domestic oil production capability erode completely. This is the issue. The price of oil that has so descended, disastrously for the producing countries such as ours, Mexico, Great Britain, and its high cost energy source on the North Sea.

I have been reminding my colleagues, and this seems like a lonely voice in the wilderness, I have also been saying this back home. Everything I have been saying here, I say the same thing back home first. I have suggested to the Vice President of the United States, who is the only highly placed Texan in this administration, certain recommendations. One is that our strategic petroleum reserve utilized domestic production. You know that less than 1 percent of the oil we have placed in the strategic petroleum reserve is American, domestically produced oil. Right now 100 percent, 95 percent is Mexican production because in 1982 we entered into a deal in an attempt to save Mexico from financial disaster, and we have been adding these bandaids all along. Up to this year we were paying an undetermined cost which actually I have found out amounted to the then prevailing price of $27. Today, the price has gone below $10, below $8.

So I am saying that charity begins at home. We ought to reverse that. We ought to keep our strategic petroleum reserve. After all, we had a good reason for it, and we are going to find out we had better. The Arab Finance Minister, Yamani has never made any bones about what their strategem is, since 1973 and the boycott then. That is to make OPEC absolutely dominant and the American domestic capability absolutely subservient to their production. That is what it was then; that is what it is now. There is no such thing as a free market in the oil world. That is a lot of hogwash. Never has, never will.

The Saudis particularly, and its finance minister feels that they are ruling the roost, and in fact they are because they have been able to use their energy as a source of diplomatic leverage which we have not learned. We do not even take cognizance and certainly this administration does not, of this great stress now wracking our states that produce this vital source of energy.

I have suggested that. I have also suggested that we really put some meaning into that agency that we ourselves led to the creation of, in 1974 in the throes of the boycott, and that was the International Energy Agency; IEA. In concert with them, impose, in concert, a fee on this oil that one has to be dependent upon, but only in concert. We no longer can do this unilaterally, I want to announce to all and sundry.

I have suggested to the Vice President in a letter over 2 weeks ago, I have not had a reply, that he take the lead inasmuch as he would be very knowledgeable about the situation in this particular industry because he comes from it.

Third, I want to comment on also all of this that interconnects with these events, believe it or not. Central America, Libya, the Middle East, the economic situation of our country now, they are all interconnected. It is no longer isolated. No matter what we do domestically. You can try to make a worthwhile something out of a worthless piece of legislation like Gramm-Rudman which will never work; never could or never will. But let us say that we could. We still are at the mercy of forces over which we have no control. Yet we have not had any leadership, particularly in that branch of the Government that, through the Constitution and through history and precedent, is deposited in our President.

71-059 O-87-31 (Pt. 16)

There is no leadership forthcoming there in order to bring about the collective action under American leadership because this is what the world wants. It does not want, contrary to what the President thinks, star wars. It does not want elaborate weapons. It wants moral leadership from the American country that has loudly proclaimed the basic principles the world anxiously wants and is in a great, great disturbed state of mind collectively because they see us behaving in a contradictory way to our heritage of democracy and self-determination.

We were the revolutionary force in the world. We are now and have been for some years the status quo force. The old, colonial status quo. In the meanwhile I think we have the catastrophic, bankrupt definition of these policies is clearly exemplified by pointing out to you that just in the last 3 years our country for the first time in 1914 is a debtor nation. The biggest debtor in the world.

As of the last 4½ years it is no longer a producing country. We no longer produce. We are a consumption, importing nation. We are now, as of last year, importing more food into the United States than what we are exporting.

This would have been unbelievable just 8, 9, or 10 years ago. This is where we are today. Surely something is not working. Surely there is something wrong. Oh, there is great commotion right now because the news today was that the stock market level had plunged 86 points or something like that. Well, that should not be news. The same thing happened before. I have been taking this floor since 1979 and pointing out that this would happen. That you will have these big shifts that one week it announced with great alarm that it had plunged; next week that it had risen. In the next 2 weeks the Dow was going to go to 2,000. Then, all of a sudden, a headline like today's: Wow, it dropped 86 points overnight.

What does this mean? I have pointed out that the only reason that will happen and should and can be avoided is that you have had absolute instability in all of the financial markets since 1970 and 1971 when President Nixon took us off of the gold exchange system and we sent into the so-called floating exchange system, and also deflated or debased our currency three times. Once in 1971 and in 1972 and 1973.

Why do I say this? Because I happen to be on the committee, and have been on that committee since I came here 25 years ago, and happened to have been the chairman of the subcommittee and had warned and found myself completely steam-rollered by the so-called goldbugs in 1975 and 1976 with the consequences that sadly, tragically we had foreseen and only wish we had been dead wrong.

□ 1620

But you cannot be wrong when you know that what you are doing is simply adding in the old way, 2 plus 2 equals 4, that when you start getting in and out of the Congress, in and out of the economists' world, the doctrine that 4 minus 2 might equal 6, then you know you are in trouble.

All history shows that all bubbles burst, the tulip mania of the 18th century and other manias, manias of the last century here in our country. We called them depressions. We have had five money manias in less than one decade. We had the rates, the real estate investment trusts. We have had the money markets. Every one of them was based on a gridlock of high usurious, extortionate rates of interest.

I have gone into that in detail. I just want to point out that these are the interconnecting factors and to each one of these I have offered suggestions.

In the case of our oil dilemma, it would help very much, in fact I think it would extricate from the serious depressed state these five States are confronted with if we would utilize domestic production at the cost plus production factor for the strategic petroleum reserve, plus exerting leadership and getting into a consortium on the International Energy Agency, which is not only the answer to but the antidote to OPEC.

I sum up by saying that overall, philosophically, we will continue to err. Our councils will be clouded almost as if in a Greek tragedy, or if mandated through some divine intercession, punishing a people for their misdeeds, but which I do not think so. I believe that all of these things are divine actions. They are all not acts of God. High interest rates are not acts of God, even though everybody acts as if they are. They are manmade problems, and they are susceptible to manmade solutions. All we have to do is restrain, rein in this egregious, unheard of greed that has brought us to the brink of financial, fiscal, monetary and economic destruction and depression.

Russia. I have never shared those great fears. History shows that there are only two major nations in the last 300 years that have never gone to war against each other. Those two are the United States and the United Soviet Socialist Republic.

Second, the history of Russia's attitude to the United States since the last century and before has always been supportive. It was supportive during our revolutionary struggle. It was supportive 120 years ago when Czar Alexander III expressed great friendship, comradeship toward the American ideal. It was reinforced when we purchased Alaska, Seward's Folly, a dollar an acre. If the Russians had been these traditional enemies, they would have never given us Alaska, that close to home, that valuable land, as it has turned out to be.

On top of that, we have failed all along to want to study the Russian people's history. It is a very, very multiple body of people.

Interestingly enough, you have provinces such as Armenia, the Province of Armenia. There the official language is that tongue of that state, the Armenian language. Children going to school can go and have an option of studying in three schools: English, French or the Armenian language. Yet they are a part and parcel of the Union known as the Soviet State, and you have similar things with other states. Russia has had war between its eastern nation, China, and itself for more than 200 years. Our leaders have never perceived that world in the sight of reality. If they had, and I said this during the struggle, we would never once have had to lose 58,000 of ours, and untold treasury in what we call Vietnam, had we known and perceived the world.

We are on the verge now, presidential, inexorable, irreversible order of engaging in serious war in, involving casualties of our men in Central America, but most seriously, as I have said repeatedly, ensuring that we will have foisted and sown the seeds of this old European strife that led to war after war between kings and now peoples in these European countries, and developing into these horrible suicidal world wars. We are sowing those seeds among people that now exceed us in number by 80 million, who really have traditionally felt a great inspiration and admiration of the American people, maybe not at their government. Nobody likes to be invaded, and we have, in fact. We have invaded Nicaragua more than seven times just in this century, not counting the number that we invaded the last century. So these are histories and perceptions that I feel my colleagues ought to consider.

In the case of Russia, for instance, how many of you among my colleagues would ever pass a resolution naming a Russian as a semigod? Yet, I offer for the RECORD at this point from Parade magazine from September 17, 1986, this last Sunday, page 17, a story entitled "Life Above All," the story of Dr. Robert Gale, an American doctor who has become a Soviet hero. He went over. He is a bone marrow specialist. He went over not expecting, given the hatred that has been fostered, the way psychosis that President Reagan has fostered among us toward Russia that he would be received, and yet they wrote a poem, and it is this way:

God is in a man who walked into a radiated complex,
Put out the fire, burned his skin and clothes,
Who didn't save himself,
But saved Odessa and Kiev,
A man who simply acted like a human being.

"God is in Dr. Gale who came to Russia." I offer this article in its entirety for the RECORD. Dr. Gale says simply; "This is too small a planet, with too big problems, to let politics interfere."

The article referred to follows:

LIFE ABOVE ALL

(By Michael Ryan)

Robert Peter Gale, M.D., Ph.D., is a high-tech physician, an expert on bone-marrow transplantation who probably doesn't even own a little black bag. But last spring, he became a sort of family doctor to an entire nation—an American physician who grew into an overnight hero in the Soviet Union.

As soon as he heard about the disastrous explosion and fire at the Chernobyl nuclear plant, Dr. Gale, who is chairman of the International Bone Marrow Transplant Registry, knew he wanted to help. The registry represents specialists in more than 30 countries, but the Soviet Union is conspicuously absent.

"They had the same day declined a generous offer of humanitarian aid from President Reagan and an offer of aid from several European countries, so my expectation of them accepting our offer was not very high," Gale, 40, recalled on a brief return to his UCLA office between visits to Moscow. But, to illustrate why he was welcomed to the USSR, Gale slid a piece of paper across his desk. "This is a poem that appeared in Pravda," he explained.

God is in a man who walked into a radiated complex.
Put out the fire, burned his skin and clothes,
Who didn't save himself,
But saved Odessa and Kiev,
A man who simply acted like a human being.

"They regard the firemen and the others who tried to put out the fire as great heroes," Gale said. "They weren't going to let political factors interfere with them getting the best medical treatment."

In Moscow, Gale performed transplants on 19 people who had tried to put out the fire at Chernobyl. Despite his efforts, six soon dies. (By last month, the fatality count had reached 30.)

"Human beings can show remarkable qualities in this kind of situation," Gale said with a warmth unusual in a man of science. "Many of these people performed heroic feats, way beyond what we would expect of someone just doing his job. One physician whom I had the privilege to take care of went repeatedly back into the reactor to help pull out firefighters who were injured, overcome by smoke. He probably knew better than any of them the potential risks. He ultimately died.

"They had a memorial on Soviet television for each of the victims. I knew many of them personally, and, on television, I could see them not as patients but as individuals, with their wives and children, in their firefighters' or military uniforms. I felt it very personally."

The experience of flying over the power station and the city of Pripyat in a military helicopter remains seared in his memory: "It was virtually impossible to speak because of the high level of noise," Gale recalled, "It was a time when you could just absorb and reflect on what was going on. What made it most dramatic was that there was relatively little physical destruction. The power plant looked like a burnt-out small apartment building, but there was a huge, deserted city of Pripyat a short distance away. [The entire population of Pripyat has been evacuated in an attempt to save the people from Chernobyl's radiation.] What was impressive was the absence of human life—of any life for that matter. That was when I first started to think about the full consequences of this."

"We have nuclear energy," he continued. "That is a fact. It's here, and it's not going to go away. There's no precedent for society going back on a technology that already exists. The obligation is on us to show that we've learned everything we can from Chernobyl."

Gale believes that the human price of Chernobyl will be exacted over the next 30 years. The number of people who will die as a result of their exposure will be somewhat under 1,000—a horrendous number, although much smaller than some early reports suggested. For those three decades, Gale and his colleagues from around the world plan to cooperate with Soviet scientists, following victims, treating them and learning all they can about the effects of radiation.

"The Soviets are enthusiastic about this," he said. "It's a long, expensive commitment that will tap the resources of scientists all over the world. But I think it's our obligation to do these studies. The Soviets want to give their citizens the best possible health care. That's just a basic human right—health care after an accident—and if there's anything known by Japanese or American or European scientists that would bear on their follow-up of these patients, they want to know it.

"Perhaps we can use this openness not just on a short term, but on a long term. Perhaps Chernobyl can bring our two leaders together. If we had so large an accident that we needed to get scientists from 20 countries involved, that we'll be sorting through the data for the next 20 years—can you imagine what would happen if there were intentional use of nuclear weapons? This is too small a planet, with too big problems, to let politics interfere."

As Gale spoke, my eyes wandered down to the second page of that poem from Pravda, which the doctor had not pointed out. It read:

God is . . . in Dr. Gale . . . who came to Russia . . .

Gale seemed slightly flustered as I read it aloud. As the conversation ended, he rose quickly and plucked a white lab coat from the back of his office door. He bade goodbye and hurried off to the hospital wing of the building.

Mr. Speaker, I say by way of conclusion what I have said now since long before I ever thought I would be in politics or in the Congress, much less, and that is that either we learn, my colleagues, that we were all born equal, or we will find curselves all being cremated equal.

I yield back the balance of my time.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3622

Mr. NICHOLS submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 3622) to amend title 10, United States Code, to strengthen the position of Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to provide for more efficient and effective operation of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 99-824)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3622) to amend title 10, United States Code, to strengthen the position of Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to provide for more efficient and effective operation of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

SEC. 3. POLICY

In enacting this Act, it is the intent of Congress, consistent with the congressional declaration of policy in section 2 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401)—

(1) to reorganize the Department of Defense and strengthen civilian authority in the Department;

(2) to improve the military advice provided to the President, the National Security Council, and the Secretary of Defense;

(3) to place clear responsibility on the commanders of the unified and specified combatant commands for the accomplishment of missions assigned to those commands;

(4) to ensure that the authority of the commanders of the unified and specified combatant commands is fully commensurate with the responsibility of those commanders for the accomplishment of missions assigned to their commands;

(5) to increase attention to the formulation of strategy and to contingency planning;

(6) to provide for more efficient use of defense resources;

(7) to improve joint officer management policies; and

(8) otherwise to enhance the effectiveness of military operations and improve the management and administration of the Department of Defense.

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE GENERALLY

SEC. 101. ORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

(a) REORGANIZATION OF CODE.—(1) Part I of subtitle A is amended by inserting after chapter 1 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 2—DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

(b) ELEMENTS OF THE DEPARTMENT.—Section 111 (as transferred and redesignated by subsection (a)(2)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "The Department of Defense"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(b) The Department is composed of the following:

"(1) The Office of the Secretary of Defense.

"(2) The Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"(3) The Joint Staff.

"(4) The Defense Agencies.

"(5) Department of Defense Field Activities.

"(6) The Department of the Army.

"(7) The Department of the Navy.

"(8) The Department of the Air Force.

"(9) The unified and specified combatant commands.

"(10) Such other offices, agencies, activities, and commands as may be established or designated by law or by the President.

"(11) All offices, agencies, activities, and commands under the control or supervision of any element named in paragraphs (1) through (10).

"(c) If the President establishes or designates an office, agency, activity, or command in the Department of Defense of a kind other than those described in paragraphs (1) through (9) of subsection (b), the President shall notify Congress not later than 60 days thereafter.".

SEC. 102. POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Section 113 (as transferred and redesignated by section 101(a)(2)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(f) When a vacancy occurs in an office within the Department of Defense and the office is to be filled by a person appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the Secretary of Defense shall inform the President of the qualifications needed by a person serving in that office to carry out effectively the duties and responsibilities of that office.

"(g)(1) The Secretary of Defense, with the advice and assistance of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, shall provide annually to the heads of Department of Defense components written policy guidance for the preparation and review of the program recommendations and budget proposals of their respective components. Such guidance shall include guidance on—

"(A) national security objectives and policies;

"(B) the priorities of military missions; and

"(C) the resource levels projected to be available for the period of time for which such recommendations and proposals are to be effective.

"(2) The Secretary of Defense, with the approval of the President and after consultation with the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, shall provide annually to the Chairman written policy guidance for the preparation and review of contingency plans. Such guidance shall include guidance on the specific force levels and specific supporting resource levels projected to be available for the period of time for which such plans are to be effective.

"(h) The Secretary of Defense shall keep the Secretaries of the military departments informed with respect to military operations and activities of the Department of Defense that directly affect their respective responsibilities.".

SEC. 103. MODIFICATION OF AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF DEFENSE TO REORGANIZE THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Section 125 is amended—

(1) by striking out "unless the Secretary" in the second sentence of subsection (a) and all that follows in that subsection and inserting in lieu thereof a period; and

(2) by inserting "vested by law in the Department of Defense, or an officer, official, or agency thereof" in subsection (b) after "function, power, or duty".

SEC. 104. OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Chapter 4 (as amended by section 101(a)) is further amended by inserting after the table of sections the following new section:

"§131. Office of the Secretary of Defense

"(a) There is in the Department of Defense an Office of the Secretary of Defense. The function of the Office is to assist the Secretary of Defense in carrying out his duties and responsibilities and to carry out such other duties as may be prescribed by law.

"(b) The Office of the Secretary of Defense is composed of the following:

"(1) The Deputy Secretary of Defense.

"(2) The Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition.

"(3) The Under Secretary of Defense for Policy.

"(4) The Director of Defense Research and Engineering.

SEC. 107. COMPTROLLER OF THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Chapter 4 is further amended by inserting after section 136 the following new section:

"§ 137. Comptroller

"(a) There is a Comptroller of the Department of Defense, appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(b) The Comptroller shall perform such duties and exercise such powers as the Secretary of Defense may prescribe.

"(c) The Comptroller shall advise and assist the Secretary of Defense—

"(1) in performing such budgetary and fiscal functions and duties, and in exercising such budgetary and fiscal powers, as are needed to carry out the powers of the Secretary;

"(2) in supervising and directing the preparation of budget estimates of the Department of Defense;

"(3) in establishing and supervising the execution of principles, policies, and procedures to be followed in connection with organizational and administrative matters relating to—

"(A) the preparation and execution of budgets;

"(B) fiscal, cost, operating, and capital property accounting; and

"(C) progress and statistical reporting;

"(4) in establishing and supervising the execution of policies and procedures relating to the expenditure and collection of funds administered by the Department of Defense; and

"(5) in establishing uniform terminologies, classifications, and procedures concerning matters covered by clauses (1) through (4).".

SEC. 108. INSPECTOR GENERAL OF THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Chapter 4 is further amended by inserting after section 139 (as redesignated by section 101(a)) the following new section:

"§ 140. Inspector General

"(a) There is an Inspector General of the Department of Defense, who is appointed as provided in section 3 of the Inspector General Act of 1978 (Public Law 95-452; 5 U.S.C. App. 3).

"(b) The Inspector General performs the duties, has the responsibilities, and exercises the powers specified in the Inspector General Act of 1978.".

SEC. 109. MANAGEMENT STUDIES OF OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

(a) SECRETARY OF DEFENSE STUDY.—The Secretary of Defense shall conduct a study of the functions and organization of the Office of the Secretary of Defense. The study shall consider whether the present allocation of functions to, and the organizational structure of, the Office constitute the most effective, efficient, and economical allocation and structure of the Office to assist the Secretary in carrying out his duties and responsibilities. The study shall include consideration of each of the matters specified in subsection (d).

(b) SERVICE SECRETARIES JOINT STUDY.—(1) The Secretaries of the military departments shall conduct a joint study of the functions and organization of the Office of the Secretary of Defense. The study shall be conducted independently of the study conducted by the Secretary of Defense under subsection (a). The Secretaries shall submit a joint report to the Secretary of Defense on such study at a time specified by the Secretary. Except as provided in paragraph (2), the report shall include a discussion of and recommendations concerning each of the matters specified in subsection (d).

(2) The Secretary of Defense shall determine the extent to which, and prescribe the procedures under which, the Secretaries of the military departments shall study the matters specified in subsection (d)(1)(A) relating to contingency planning and military operations.

(c) CHAIRMAN OF JCS STUDY.—The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall conduct a study of the functions and organization of the Office of the Secretary of Defense. The study shall be conducted independently of the study conducted by the Secretary of Defense under subsection (a). The Chairman shall submit a report to the Secretary of Defense on such study at a time specified by the Secretary. The report shall include a discussion of and recommendations concerning the matters specified in paragraphs (1)(C), (1)(D), (2), (3), (5), and (6) of subsection (d).

(d) MATTERS TO BE INCLUDED.—The study required by subsection (a) shall include consideration of the following:

(1) Whether the present organization of the Office—

(A) is optimally structured to assist the Secretary of Defense in the effective exercise of civilian control of the Department of Defense, including civilian control of—

(i) defense policy development and strategic planning;

(ii) program and budget development;

(iii) policy, program, and budget execution;

(iv) contingency planning; and

(v) military operations;

(B) is the most effective and efficient organization for the initiation, development, and articulation of defense policy;

(C) ensures that strategic planning and contingency planning are linked to, and derived from, national security strategy, policies, and objectives; and

(D) inhibits integration of the capabilities of the Armed Forces along mission lines.

(2) Whether the planning, programming, and budgeting system of the Department of Defense (including the role of the Office in such system) needs to be revised—

(A) to strengthen strategic planning and policy direction;

(B) to ensure that strategic planning is consistent with national security strategy, policies, and objectives;

(C) to ensure that there is a sufficient relationship between strategic planning and the resource levels projected to be available for the period for which the planning is to be effective;

(D) to ensure that strategic planning and program development give sufficient attention to alliances with other nations;

(E) to provide for more effective oversight, control, and evaluation of policy, program, and budget execution; and

(F) to ensure that past program and budget decisions are effectively evaluated, that such evaluations are supported by consistent, complete, and timely financial and performance data, and that such evaluations are fully considered in the next planning, programming, and budgeting cycle.

(3) Whether the major force program categories of the Five-Year Defense Plan could be restructured to better assist decisionmaking and management control.

(4) Means to improve and strengthen the oversight function within each element of the Office in policy areas not addressed by the planning, programming, and budgeting system.

(5) Factors inhibiting efficient and effective execution of the functions of the Office, including factors relating to—

(A) duplication of functions (both within the Office and between the Office and other elements of the Department);

(B) insufficient information; and

(C) insufficient resources (including personnel).

(6) Alternative allocations of authorities and functions of the Office and other reorganization proposals for the Office, including the desirability of—

(A) establishing Under Secretaries of Defense for mission-oriented areas of responsibility;

(B) decentralizing functions of the Office;

(C) reducing the number of officials reporting directly to the Secretary of Defense; and

(D) changing the ratio of members of the Armed Forces to civilian employees in the Office.

(7) Whether political appointees in the Office of the Secretary of Defense have sufficient experience and expertise, upon appointment, to be capable of contributing immediately to effective policy formulation and management.

(e) ANALYSIS OF CIVILIAN CONTROL.—(1) The Secretary of Defense, in considering under subsection (d)(1)(A) whether effective civilian control of the Department of Defense is best assisted by the current structure of the Office, shall examine the functions performed in the Office by—

(A) members of the Armed Forces on the active-duty list; and

(B) members of the Armed Forces in a retired status and members of the reserve components who are employed in a civilian capacity.

(2) Such examination shall include a determination of the total number of positions in the Office of the Secretary of Defense above grade GS-8 and the military equivalent (as determined by the Secretary of Defense), and of such number—

(A) the number of positions held by members of the Armed Forces on the active-duty list, shown for the military equivalent of each civilian pay grade by number and as a percentage of the total number of positions in the Office in the civilian pay grade concerned and in the military equivalent of such civilian pay grade;

(B) the number of such positions held by members of the Armed Forces in a retired status who are serving in a civilian capacity, shown for each civilian pay grade in the same manner as provided under clause (A); and

(C) the number of such positions held by members of the reserve components who are serving in a civilian capacity, shown for each civilian pay grade in the same manner as provided under clause (A).

(3) In determining the total number of positions in the Office of the Secretary of Defense in grades above GS-8, the Secretary shall exclude positions which are primarily clerical or secretarial.

(f) INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR STUDY.—The Secretary shall provide for an independent study to be carried out by a contractor to consider the same matters required to be considered by the Secretary under subsection (d). The Secretary shall ensure that the contractor has full access to such information as the contractor requires and that the contractor otherwise receives full cooperation from all officials and entities of the Department of Defense.

(g) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report on the Secretary's study under subsection (a). The report shall include—

(A) the findings and conclusions of the Secretary with respect to each of the matters set forth in subsection (d);

(B) the findings and statistical determinations required under subsection (e); and

(C) any recommendations of the Secretary for organizational changes in the Office of the Secretary of Defense and a description of the means for implementing each recommendation.

(2) The Secretary shall include with the report a copy of the reports to the Secretary under subsections (b) and (c) and a copy of the report of the independent contractor under subsection (f), together with such comments on each such report as the Secretary considers appropriate.

(3) The report under this subsection shall be submitted not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 110. TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

(a) CONFORMING AMENDMENT FOR OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF DEFENSE.—Chapter 41 is amended—

(1) by striking out section 718; and

TITLE II—MILITARY ADVICE AND COMMAND FUNCTIONS

PART A—JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF

SEC. 201. REVISED FUNCTIONS OF CHAIRMAN; ESTABLISHMENT OF VICE CHAIRMAN

Chapter 5 is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 5—JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF

"Sec.
"151. Joint Chiefs of Staff: composition; functions.
"152. Chairman: appointment; rank.
"153. Chairman: functions.
"154. Vice Chairman.
"155. Joint Staff.

"§151. Joint Chiefs of Staff: composition; functions

"(a) COMPOSITION.—There are in the Department of Defense the Joint Chiefs of Staff, headed by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The Joint Chiefs of Staff consist of the following:

"(1) The Chairman.
"(2) The Chief of Staff of the Army.
"(3) The Chief of Naval Operations.
"(4) The Chief of Staff of the Air Force.
"(5) The Commandant of the Marine Corps.

"(b) FUNCTION AS MILITARY ADVISERS.—(1) The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff is the principal military adviser to the President, the National Security Council, and the Secretary of Defense.

"(2) The other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff are military advisers to the President, the National Security Council, and the Secretary of Defense as specified in subsections (d) and (e).

"(c) CONSULTATION BY CHAIRMAN.—(1) In carrying out his functions, duties, and responsibilities, the Chairman shall, as he considers appropriate, consult with and seek the advice of—

"(A) the other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; and

"(B) the commanders of the unified and specified combatant commands.

"(2) Subject to subsection (d), in presenting advice with respect to any matter to the President, the National Security Council, or the Secretary of Defense, the Chairman shall, as he considers appropriate, inform the President, the National Security Council, or the Secretary of Defense, as the case may be, of the range of military advice and opinion with respect to that matter.

"(d) ADVICE AND OPINIONS OF MEMBERS OTHER THAN CHAIRMAN.—(1) A member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff (other than the Chairman) may submit to the Chairman advice or an opinion in disagreement with, or advice or an opinion in addition to, the advice presented by the Chairman to the President, the National Security Council, or the Secretary of Defense. If a member submits such advice or opinion, the Chairman shall present the advice or opinion of such member at the same time he presents his own advice to the President, the National Security Council, or the Secretary of Defense, as the case may be.

"(2) The Chairman shall establish procedures to ensure that the presentation of his own advice to the President, the National Security Council, or the Secretary of Defense is not unduly delayed by reason of the submission of the individual advice or opinion of another member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"(e) ADVICE ON REQUEST.—The members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, individually or collectively, in their capacity as military advisers, shall provide advice to the President, the National Security Council, or the Secretary of Defense on a particular matter when the President, the National Security Council, or the Secretary requests such advice.

"(f) RECOMMENDATIONS TO CONGRESS.—After first informing the Secretary of Defense, a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff may make such recommendations to Congress relating to the Department of Defense as he considers appropriate.

"(g) MEETINGS OF JCS.—(1) The Chairman shall convene regular meetings of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"(2) Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the President and the Secretary of Defense, the Chairman shall—

"(A) preside over the Joint Chiefs of Staff;

"(B) provide agenda for the meetings of the Joint Chiefs of Staff (including, as the Chairman considers appropriate, any subject for the agenda recommended by any other member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff);

"(C) assist the Joint Chiefs of Staff in carrying on their business as promptly as practicable; and

"(D) determine when issues under consideration by the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall be decided.

"§ 152. Chairman: appointment; rank

"(a) APPOINTMENT; TERM OF OFFICE.—(1) There is a Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the officers of the regular components of the armed forces. The Chairman serves at the pleasure of the President for a term of two years, beginning on October 1 of odd-numbered years. Subject to paragraph (3), an officer serving as Chairman may be reappointed in the same manner for two additional terms. However, in time of war there is no limit on the number of reappointments.

"(2) In the event of the death, retirement, resignation, or reassignment of the officer serving as Chairman before the end of the term for which the officer was appointed, an officer appointed to fill the vacancy shall serve as Chairman only for the remainder of the original term, but may be reappointed as provided in paragraph (1).

"(3) An officer may not serve as Chairman or Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff if the combined period of service of such officer in such positions exceeds six years. However, the President may extend to eight years the combined period of service an officer may serve in such positions if he determines such action is in the national interest. The limitations of this paragraph do not apply in time of war.

"(b) REQUIREMENT FOR APPOINTMENT.—(1) The President may appoint an officer as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff only if the officer has served as—

"(A) the Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff;

"(B) the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations, the Chief of Staff of the Air Force, or the Commandant of the Marine Corps; or

"(C) the commander of a unified or specified combatant command.

"(2) The President may waive paragraph (1) in the case of an officer if the President determines such action is necessary in the national interest.

"(c) GRADE AND RANK.—The Chairman, while so serving, holds the grade of general or, in the case of an officer of the Navy, admiral and outranks all other officers of the armed forces. However, he may not exercise military command over the Joint Chiefs of Staff or any of the armed forces.

"§ 153. Chairman: functions

"(a) PLANNING; ADVICE; POLICY FORMULATION.—Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the President and the Secretary of Defense, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall be responsible for the following:

"(1) STRATEGIC DIRECTION.—Assisting the President and the Secretary of Defense in providing for the strategic direction of the armed forces.

"(2) STRATEGIC PLANNING.—(A) Preparing strategic plans, including plans which conform with resource levels projected by the Secretary of Defense to be available for the period of time for which the plans are to be effective.

"(B) Preparing joint logistic and mobility plans to support those strategic plans and recommending the assignment of logistic and mobility responsibilities to the armed forces in accordance with those logistic and mobility plans.

"(C) Performing net assessments to determine the capabilities of the armed forces of the United States and its allies as compared with those of their potential adversaries.

"(3) CONTINGENCY PLANNING; PREPAREDNESS.—(A) Providing for the preparation and review of contingency plans which conform to policy guidance from the President and the Secretary of Defense.

"(B) Preparing joint logistic and mobility plans to support those contingency plans and recommending the assignment of logistic and mobility responsibilities to the armed forces in accordance with those logistic and mobility plans.

"(C) Advising the Secretary on critical deficiencies and strengths in force capabilities (including manpower, logistic, and mobility support) identified during the preparation and review of contingency plans and assessing the effect of such deficiencies and strengths on meeting national security objectives and policy and on strategic plans.

"(D) Establishing and maintaining, after consultation with the commanders of the unified and specified combatant commands, a uniform system of evaluating the preparedness of each such command to carry out missions assigned to the command.

"(4) ADVICE ON REQUIREMENTS, PROGRAMS, AND BUDGET.—(A) Advising the Secretary, under section 163(b)(2) of this title, on the priorities of the requirements identified by the commanders of the unified and specified combatant commands.

"(B) Advising the Secretary on the extent to which the program recommendations and budget proposals of the military departments and other components of the Department of Defense for a fiscal year conform with the priorities established in strategic plans and with the priorities established for the requirements of the unified and specified combatant commands.

"(C) Submitting to the Secretary alternative program recommendations and budget proposals, within projected resource levels and guidance provided by the Secretary, in order to achieve greater conformance with the priorities referred to in clause (B).

"(D) Recommending to the Secretary, in accordance with section 166 of this title, a budget proposal for activities of each unified and specified combatant command.

"(E) Advising the Secretary on the extent to which the major programs and policies of the armed forces in the area of manpower conform with strategic plans.

"(F) Assessing military requirements for defense acquisition programs.

"(5) DOCTRINE, TRAINING, AND EDUCATION.—(A) Developing doctrine for the joint employment of the armed forces.

"(B) Formulating policies for the joint training of the armed forces.

"(C) Formulating policies for coordinating the military education and training of members of the armed forces.

"(6) OTHER MATTERS.—(A) Providing for representation of the United States on the Military Staff Committee of the United Nations in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

"(B) Performing such other duties as may be prescribed by law or by the President or the Secretary of Defense.

"(b) REPORT ON ASSIGNMENT OF ROLES AND MISSIONS.—(1) Not less than once every three years, or upon the request of the President or the Secretary of Defense, the Chairman shall submit to the Secretary of Defense a report containing such recommendations for changes in the assignment of functions (or roles and missions) to the armed forces as the Chairman considers necessary to achieve maximum effectiveness of the armed forces. In preparing each such report, the Chairman shall consider (among other matters) the following:

"(A) Changes in the nature of the threats faced by the United States.

"(B) Unnecessary duplication of effort among the armed forces.

"(C) Changes in technology that can be applied effectively to warfare.

"(2) The Chairman shall include in each such report recommendations for such changes in policies, directives, regulations, and legislation as may be necessary to achieve the changes in the assignment of functions recommended by the Chairman.

"§ 154. Vice Chairman

"(a) APPOINTMENT.—(1) There is a Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the officers of the regular components of the armed forces.

"(2) The Chairman and Vice Chairman may not be members of the same armed force. However, the President may waive the restriction in the preceding sentence for a limited period of time in order to provide for the orderly transition of officers appointed to serve in the positions of Chairman and Vice Chairman.

"(3) The Vice Chairman serves at the pleasure of the President for a term of two years and may be reappointed in the same manner for two additional terms. However, in time of war there is no limit on the number of reappointments.

"(b) REQUIREMENT FOR APPOINTMENT.—(1) The President may appoint an officer as Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff only if the officer—

"(A) has the joint specialty under section 661 of this title; and

"(B) has served in at least one joint duty assignment (as defined under section 668(b) of this title) as a general or flag officer.

"(2) The President may waive paragraph (1) in the case of an officer if the President determines such action is necessary in the national interest.

"(c) DUTIES.—The Vice Chairman performs such duties as may be prescribed by the Chairman with the approval of the Secretary of Defense.

"(d) FUNCTION AS ACTING CHAIRMAN.—When there is a vacancy in the office of Chairman or in the absence or disability of the Chairman, the Vice Chairman acts as Chairman and performs the duties of the Chairman until a successor is appointed or the absence or disability ceases.

"(e) SUCCESSION AFTER CHAIRMAN AND VICE CHAIRMAN.—When there is a vacancy in the offices of both Chairman and Vice Chairman or in the absence or disability of both the Chairman and the Vice Chairman, or when there is a vacancy in one such office and in the absence or disability of the officer holding the other, the President shall designate a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to act as and perform the duties of the Chairman until a successor to the Chairman or Vice Chairman is appointed or the absence or disability of the Chairman or Vice Chairman ceases.

"(f) PARTICIPATION IN JCS MEETINGS.—The Vice Chairman may participate in all meetings of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, but may not vote on a matter before the Joint Chiefs of Staff except when acting as Chairman.

"(g) GRADE AND RANK.—The Vice Chairman, while so serving, holds the grade of general or, in the case of an officer of the Navy, admiral and outranks all other officers of the armed forces except the Chairman. The Vice Chairman may not exercise military command over the Joint Chiefs of Staff or any of the armed forces.

"§ 155. Joint Staff

"(a) APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS TO JOINT STAFF.—(1) There is a Joint Staff under the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The Joint Staff assists the Chairman and, subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Chairman, the other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Vice Chairman in carrying out their responsibilities.

"(2) Officers of the armed forces (other than the Coast Guard) assigned to serve on the Joint Staff shall be selected by the Chairman in approximately equal numbers from—

"(A) the Army;

"(B) the Navy and the Marine Corps; and

"(C) the Air Force.

"(3) Selection of officers of an armed force to serve on the Joint Staff shall be made by the Chairman from a list of officers submitted by the Secretary of the military department having jurisdiction over that armed force. Each officer whose name is submitted shall be among those officers considered to be the most outstanding officers of that armed force. The Chairman may specify the number of officers to be included on any such list.

"(b) DIRECTOR.—The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, after consultation with the other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and with the approval of the Secretary of Defense, may select an officer to serve as Director of the Joint Staff.

"(c) MANAGEMENT OF JOINT STAFF.—The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff manages the Joint Staff and the Director of the Joint Staff. The Joint Staff shall perform such duties as the Chairman prescribes and shall perform such duties under such procedures as the Chairman prescribes.

"(d) OPERATION OF JOINT STAFF.—The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that the Joint Staff is independently organized and operated so that the Joint Staff supports the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in meeting the congressional purpose set forth in the last clause of section 2 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401) to provide—

"(1) for the unified strategic direction of the combatant forces;

"(2) for their operation under unified command; and

"(3) for their integration into an efficient team of land, naval, and air forces.

"(e) PROHIBITION OF FUNCTION AS ARMED FORCES GENERAL STAFF.—The Joint Staff shall not operate or be organized as an overall Armed Forces General Staff and shall have no executive authority. The Joint Staff may be organized and may operate along conventional staff lines.

"(f) TOUR OF DUTY OF JOINT STAFF OFFICERS.—(1) An officer who is assigned or detailed to permanent duty on the Joint Staff may not serve for a tour of duty of more than four years. However, such a tour of duty may be extended with the approval of the Secretary of Defense.

"(2) In accordance with procedures established by the Secretary of Defense, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff may suspend from duty and recommend the reassignment of any officer assigned to the Joint Staff. Upon receipt of such a recommendation, the Secretary concerned shall promptly reassign the officer.

"(3) An officer completing a tour of duty with the Joint Staff may not be assigned or detailed to permanent duty on the Joint Staff within two years after relief from that duty except with the approval of the Secretary.

"(4) Paragraphs (1) and (3) do not apply—

"(A) in time of war; or

"(B) during a national emergency declared by the President.

"(g) LIMITATION ON SIZE OF JOINT STAFF.—(1) Effective on October 1, 1988, the total number of members of the armed forces and civilian personnel assigned or detailed to permanent duty on the Joint Staff may not exceed 1,627.

"(2) Paragraph (1) does not apply—

"(A) in time of war; or

"(B) during a national emergency declared by Congress.

"(h) COMPOSITION OF JOINT STAFF.—(1) The Joint Staff is composed of all members of the armed forces and civilian employees assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the executive part of the Department of Defense to perform the functions and duties prescribed under subsections (a) and (c).

"(2) The Joint Staff does not include members of the armed forces or civilian employees assigned or detailed to permanent duty in a military department.".

SEC. 202. PROVISIONS RELATING TO VICE CHAIRMAN

(a) EXEMPTION OF VICE CHAIRMAN FROM 4-STAR GRADE LIMITATION.—Section 525(b)(3) is amended by inserting "or Vice Chairman" after "Chairman".

(b) RANK OF VICE CHAIRMAN.—Section 743 is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" after "Chief of Naval Operations,";

(2) by inserting ", and the Commandant of the Marine Corps" after "Air Force"; and

(3) by inserting "and the Vice Chairman" after "Chairman".

SEC. 203. PARTICIPATION IN NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL MEETINGS

Section 101 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 402) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e) The Chairman (or in his absence the Vice Chairman) of the Joint Chiefs of Staff may, in his role as principal military adviser to the National Security Council and subject to the direction of the President, attend and participate in meetings of the National Security Council.".

SEC. 204. TRANSITION

(a) PREPAREDNESS EVALUATION SYSTEM.—The uniform system of evaluating the preparedness of each unified and specified combatant command required to be established by paragraph (3)(D) of section 153(a) of title 10, United States Code, as added by section 201 of this Act, shall be established not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) DATE FOR FIRST REPORT.—The first report under section 153(b) of title 10, United States Code, as added by section 201 of this Act, shall be submitted by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff not later than two years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) WAIVER OF QUALIFICATIONS FOR APPOINTMENT AS VICE CHAIRMAN OF JCS.—(1) The President may waive, as provided in paragraph (2), the requirements provided for in section 154(b) of title 10, United States Code (as added by section 201 of this Act), relating to requirements for appointment of an officer as Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

(2) In exercising such waiver authority, the President may—

(A) waive the requirement that the officer have the joint specialty;

(B) waive the requirement under section 664 of such title (as added by section 401 of this Act) for the length of a joint duty assignment if the officer has served in such an assignment for not less than two years; and

(C) consider as a joint duty assignment any tour of duty served by the officer as a general or flag officer before the date of the enactment of this Act (or being served on the date of the enactment of this Act) that was considered to be a joint duty assignment or a joint equivalent assignment under regulations in effect at the time the assignment began.

(3)(A) A waiver under paragraph (2)(A) may not be made more than two years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(B) A waiver under paragraph (2)(B) or (2)(C) may not be made more than four years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

PART B—COMBATANT COMMANDS

SEC. 211. ESTABLISHMENT OF COMBATANT COMMANDS AND AUTHORITY OF COMMANDERS

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part I of subtitle A is amended by inserting after chapter 5 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 6—COMBATANT COMMANDS

"Sec.
"161. Combatant commands: establishment.
"162. Combatant commands: assigned forces; chain of command.
"163. Role of Chairman of Joint Chiefs of Staff.
"164. Commanders of combatant commands: assignment; powers and duties.
"165. Combatant commands: administration and support.
"166. Combatant commands: budget proposals.

"§ 161. Combatant commands: establishment

"(a) UNIFIED AND SPECIFIED COMBATANT COMMANDS.—With the advice and assistance of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the President, through the Secretary of Defense, shall—

"(1) establish unified combatant commands and specified combatant commands to perform military missions; and

"(2) prescribe the force structure of those commands.

"(b) PERIODIC REVIEW.—(1) The Chairman periodically (and not less often than every two years) shall—

"(A) review the missions, responsibilities (including geographic boundaries), and force structure of each combatant command; and

"(B) recommend to the President, through the Secretary of Defense, any changes to such missions, responsibilities, and force structures as may be necessary.

"(2) Except during time of hostilities or imminent threat of hostilities, the President shall notify Congress not more than 60 days after—

"(A) establishing a new combatant command; or

"(B) significantly revising the missions, responsibilities, or force structure of an existing combatant command.

"(c) DEFINITIONS—In this chapter:

"(1) The term 'unified combatant command' means a military command which has broad, continuing missions and which is composed of forces from two or more military departments.

"(2) The term 'specified combatant command' means a military command which has broad, continuing missions and which is normally composed of forces from a single military department.

"(3) The term 'combatant command' means a unified combatant command or a specified combatant command.

"§ 162. Combatant commands: assigned forces; chain of command

"(a) ASSIGNMENT OF FORCES.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the Secretaries of the military departments shall assign all forces under their jurisdiction to unified and specified combatant commands to perform missions assigned to those commands. Such assignments shall be made as directed by the Secretary of Defense, including direction as to the command to which forces are to be assigned. The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that such assignments are consistent with the force structure prescribed by the President for each combatant command.

"(2) Except as otherwise directed by the Secretary of Defense, forces to be assigned by the Secretaries of the military departments to the combatant commands under paragraph (1) do not include forces assigned to carry out functions of the Secretary of a military department listed in sections 3013(b), 5013(b), and 8013(b) of this title.

"(3) A force assigned to a combatant command under this section may be transferred from the command to which it is assigned only—

"(A) by authority of the Secretary of Defense; and

"(B) under procedures prescribed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

"(4) Except as otherwise directed by the Secretary of Defense, all forces operating within the geographic area assigned to a unified combatant command shall be assigned to, and under the command of, the commander of that command. The preceding sentence applies to forces assigned to a specified combatant command only as prescribed by the Secretary of Defense.

"(b) CHAIN OF COMMAND.—Unless otherwise directed by the President, the chain of command to a unified or specified combatant command runs—

"(1) from the President to the Secretary of Defense; and

"(2) from the Secretary of Defense to the commander of the combatant command.

"§ 163. Role of Chairman of Joint Chiefs of Staff

"(a) COMMUNICATIONS THROUGH CHAIRMAN OF JCS; ASSIGNMENT OF DUTIES.—Subject to the limitations in section 152(c) of this title, the President may—

"(1) direct that communications between the President or the Secretary of Defense and the commanders of the unified and specified combatant commands be transmitted through the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; and

"(2) assign duties to the Chairman to assist the President and the Secretary of Defense in performing their command function.

"(b) OVERSIGHT BY CHAIRMAN OF JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF.—(1) The Secretary of Defense may assign to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff responsibility for overseeing the activities of the combatant commands. Such assignment by the Secretary to the Chairman does not confer any command authority on the Chairman and does not alter the responsibility of the commanders of the combatant commands prescribed in section 164(b)(2) of this title.

"(2) Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff serves as the spokesman for the commanders of the combatant commands, especially on the operational requirements of their commands. In performing such function, the Chairman shall—

"(A) confer with and obtain information from the commanders of the combatant commands with respect to the requirements of their commands;

"(B) evaluate and integrate such information;

"(C) advise and make recommendations to the Secretary of Defense with respect to the requirements of the combatant commands, individually and collectively; and

"(D) communicate, as appropriate, the requirements of the combatant commands to other elements of the Department of Defense.

"§ 164. Commanders of combatant commands: assignment; powers and duties

"(a) ASSIGNMENT AS COMBATANT COMMANDER.—(1) The President may assign an officer to serve as the commander of a unified or specified combatant command only if the officer—

"(A) has the joint specialty under section 661 of this title; and

"(B) has served in at least one joint duty assignment (as defined under section 668(b) of this title) as a general or flag officer.

"(2) The President may waive paragraph (1) in the case of an officer if the President determines that such action is necessary in the national interest.

"(b) RESPONSIBILITIES OF COMBATANT COMMANDERS.—(1) The commander of a combatant command is responsible to the President and to the Secretary of Defense for the performance of missions assigned to that command by the President or by the Secretary with the approval of the President.

"(2) Subject to the direction of the President, the commander of a combatant command—

"(A) performs his duties under the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense; and

"(B) is directly responsible to the Secretary for the preparedness of the command to carry out missions assigned to the command.

"(c) COMMAND AUTHORITY OF COMBATANT COMMANDERS.—(1) Unless otherwise directed by the President or the Secretary of Defense, the authority, direction, and control of the commander of a combatant command with respect to the commands and forces assigned to that command include the command functions of—

"(A) giving authoritative direction to subordinate commands and forces necessary to carry out missions assigned to the command, including authoritative direction over all aspects of military operations, joint training, and logistics;

"(B) prescribing the chain of command to the commands and forces within the command;

"(C) organizing commands and forces within that command as he considers necessary to carry out missions assigned to the command;

"(D) employing forces within that command as he considers necessary to carry out missions assigned to the command;

"(E) assigning command functions to subordinate commanders;

"(F) coordinating and approving those aspects of administration and support (including control of resources and equipment, internal organization, and training) and discipline necessary to carry out missions assigned to the command; and

"(G) exercising the authority with respect to selecting subordinate commanders, selecting combatant command staff, suspending subordinates, and convening courts-martial, as provided in subsections (e), (f), and (g) of this section and section 822(a) of this title, respectively.

"(2)(A) The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that a commander of a combatant command has sufficient authority, direction, and control over the commands and forces assigned to the command to exercise effective command over those commands and forces. In carrying out this subparagraph, the Secretary shall consult with the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"(B) The Secretary shall periodically review and, after consultation with the Secretaries of the military departments, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the commander of the combatant command, assign authority to the commander of the combatant command for those aspects of administration and support that the Secretary considers necessary to carry out missions assigned to the command.

"(3) If a commander of a combatant command at any time considers his authority, direction, or control with respect to any of the commands or forces assigned to the command to be insufficient to command effectively, the commander shall promptly inform the Secretary of Defense.

"(d) AUTHORITY OVER SUBORDINATE COMMANDERS.—Unless otherwise directed by the President or the Secretary of Defense—

"(1) commanders of commands and forces assigned to a combatant command are under the authority, direction, and control of, and are responsible to, the commander of the combatant command on all matters for which the commander of the combatant command has been assigned authority under subsection (c);

"(2) the commander of a command or force referred to in clause (1) shall communicate with other elements of the Department of Defense on any matter for which the commander of the combatant command has been assigned authority under subsection (c) in accordance with procedures, if any, established by the commander of the combatant command;

"(3) other elements of the Department of Defense shall communicate with the commander of a command or force referred to in clause (1) on any matter for which the commander of the combatant command has been assigned authority under subsection (c) in accordance with procedures, if any, established by the commander of the combatant command; and

"(4) if directed by the commander of the combatant command, the commander of a command or force referred to in clause (1) shall advise the commander of the combatant command of all communications to and from other elements of the Department of Defense on any matter for which the commander of the combatant command has not been assigned authority under subsection (c).

"(e) SELECTION OF SUBORDINATE COMMANDERS.—(1) An officer may be assigned to a position as the commander of a command directly subordinate to the commander of a combatant command or, in the case of such a position that is designated under section 601 of this title as a position of importance and responsibility, may be recommended to the President for assignment to that position, only—

"(A) with the concurrence of the commander of the combatant command; and

"(B) in accordance with procedures established by the Secretary of Defense.

"(2) The Secretary of Defense may waive the requirement under paragraph (1) for the concurrence of the commander of a combatant command with regard to the assignment (or recommendation for assignment) of a particular officer if the Secretary of Defense determines that such action is in the national interest.

"(3) The commander of a combatant command shall—

"(A) evaluate the duty performance of each commander of a command directly subordinate to the commander of such combatant command; and

"(B) submit the evaluation to the Secretary of the military department concerned and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"(f) COMBATANT COMMAND STAFF.—(1) Each unified and specified combatant command shall have a staff to assist the commander of the command in carrying out his responsibilities. Positions of responsibility on the combatant command staff shall be filled by officers from each of the armed forces having significant forces assigned to the command.

"(2) An officer may be assigned to a position on the staff of a combatant command or, in the case of such a position that is designated under section 601 of this title as a position of importance and responsibility, may be recommended to the President for assignment to that position, only—

"(A) with the concurrence of the commander of such command; and

"(B) in accordance with procedures established by the Secretary of Defense.

"(3) The Secretary of Defense may waive the requirement under paragraph (2) for the concurrence of the commander of a combatant command with regard to the assignment (or recommendation for assignment) of a particular officer to serve on the staff of the combatant command if the Secretary of Defense determines that such action is in the national interest.

"(g) AUTHORITY TO SUSPEND SUBORDINATES.—In accordance with procedures established by the Secretary of Defense, the commander of a combatant command may suspend from duty and recommend the reassignment of any officer assigned to such combatant command.

"§165. Combatant commands: administration and support

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Defense, with the advice and assistance of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, shall provide for the administration and support of forces assigned to each combatant command.

"(b) RESPONSIBILITY OF SECRETARIES OF MILITARY DEPARTMENTS.—Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense and subject to the authority of commanders of the combatant commands under section 164(c) of this title, the Secretary of a military department is responsible for the administration and support of forces assigned by him to a combatant command.

"(c) ASSIGNMENT OF RESPONSIBILITY TO OTHER COMPONENTS OF DOD.—After consultation with the Secretaries of the military departments, the Secretary of Defense may assign the responsibility (or any part of the responsibility) for the administration and support of forces assigned to the combatant commands to other components of the Department of Defense (including Defense Agencies and combatant commands). A component assigned such a responsibility shall discharge that responsibility subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense and subject to the authority of commanders of the combatant commands under section 164(c) of this title.

"§166. Combatant commands: budget proposals

"(a) COMBATANT COMMAND BUDGETS.—The Secretary of Defense shall include in the annual budget of the Department of Defense submitted to Congress a separate budget proposal for such activities of each of the unified and specified combatant commands as may be determined under subsection (b).

"(b) CONTENT OF PROPOSALS.—A budget proposal under subsection (a) for funding of activities of a combatant command shall include funding proposals for such activities of the combatant command as the Secretary (after consultation with the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff) determines to be appropriate for inclusion. Activities of a combatant command for which funding may be requested in such a proposal include the following:

"(1) Joint exercises.

"(2) Force training.

"(3) Contingencies.

"(4) Selected operations.".

(b) COURT-MARTIAL JURISDICTION.—Section 822(a) (article 22(a) of the Uniform Code of Military Justice) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (2) through (7) as paragraphs (4) through (9), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraphs (2) and (3):

"(2) the Secretary of Defense;

"(3) the commanding officer of a unified or specified combatant command;".

(c) REPEAL OF SECTION 124.—(1) Section 124 is repealed.

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 3 is amended by striking out the item relating to that section.

SEC. 212. INITIAL REVIEW OF COMBATANT COMMANDS

(a) MATTERS TO BE CONSIDERED.—The first review of the missions, responsibilities (including geographic boundaries), and force structure of the unified and specified combatant commands under section 161(b) of title 10, United States Code, as added by section 211 of this Act, shall include consideration of the following:

(1) Creation of a unified combatant command for strategic missions which would combine—

(A) the missions, responsibilities, and forces of the Strategic Air Command;

(B) the strategic missions, responsibilities, and forces of the Army and Navy; and

(C) other appropriate strategic missions, responsibilities, and forces of the armed forces.

(2) Creation of a unified combatant command for special operations missions which would combine the special operations missions, responsibilities, and forces of the armed forces.

(3) Creation of a unified combatant command for transportation missions which would combine the transportation missions, responsibilities, and forces of the Military Traffic Management Command, the Military Sealift Command, and the Military Airlift Command.

(4) Creation of a unified combatant command for missions relating to defense of Northeast Asia.

(5) Revision of the geographic area for which the United States Central Command has responsibility so as to include—

(A) the ocean areas adjacent to Southwest Asia; and

(B) the region of the Middle East that is assigned to the United States European Command.

(6) Revision of the geographic area for which the United States Southern Command has responsibility so as to include the ocean areas adjacent to Central America.

(7) Revision of the geographic area for which the United States Pacific Command has responsibility so as to include all of the State of Alaska.

(8) Revision of the missions and responsibilities of the United States Readiness Command so as to include—

(A) an enhanced role in securing the borders of the United States; and

(B) assignment of regions of the world not assigned as part of the geographic area of responsibility of any other unified combatant command.

(9) Revision of the division of missions and responsibilities between the United States Central Command and the United States Readiness Command.

(10) Elimination of the command designated as United States Forces, Caribbean.

(b) DEADLINE.—The first report to the President under such section shall be made not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 213. REPEAL OF CERTAIN LIMITATIONS ON COMMAND STRUCTURE

(a) PROHIBITION AGAINST CONSOLIDATING FUNCTIONS OF THE MILITARY TRANSPORTATION COMMANDS.—Section 1110 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1983 (Public Law 97-252; 96 Stat. 747), is repealed.

(b) PROHIBITION AGAINST ALTERING COMMAND STRUCTURE FOR MILITARY FORCES IN ALASKA.—Section 8106 of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986 (as contained in section 101(b) of Public Law 99-190 (99 Stat. 1221)), is repealed.

SEC. 214. TRANSITION

(a) ASSIGNMENT OF FORCES TO COMBATANT COMMANDS.—Section 162(a) of title 10, United States Code (as added by section 211 of this Act), shall be implemented not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) WAIVER OF QUALIFICATIONS FOR ASSIGNMENT AS COMBATANT COMMANDER.—(1) The President may waive, as provided in paragraph (2), the requirements provided for in section 164(a) of title 10, United States Code (as added by section 201 of this Act), relating to the assignment of commanders of the combatant commands.

(2) In exercising such waiver authority, the President may, in the case of any officer—

(A) waive the requirement that the officer has the joint specialty;

(B) waive the requirement under section 664 of such title (as added by section 401 of this Act) for the length of a joint duty assignment if the officer has served in such an assignment for not less than two years; and

(C) consider as a joint duty assignment any tour of duty served by the officer as a general or flag officer before the date of the enactment of this Act (or being served on the date of the enactment of this Act) that was considered to be a joint duty assignment or a joint equivalent assignment under regulations in effect at the time the assignment began.

(3)(A) A waiver under paragraph (2)(A) may not be made more than two years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(B) A waiver under paragraph (2)(B) or (2)(C) may not be made more than four years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(4) A waiver under this subsection may be made only on a case-by-case basis.

(c) SELECTION AND SUSPENSION FROM DUTY OF SUBORDINATE OFFICERS.—Subsections (e), (f), and (g) of section 164 of title 10, United States Code (as added by section 211 of this Act), shall take effect at the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, or on such earlier date as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Defense.

(d) BUDGET PROPOSALS.—Section 166 of title 10, United States Code (as added by section 211 of this Act), shall take effect with budget proposals for fiscal year 1989.

TITLE III—DEFENSE AGENCIES AND DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE FIELD ACTIVITIES

SEC. 301. ESTABLISHMENT AND MANAGEMENT OF DEFENSE AGENCIES AND DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE FIELD ACTIVITIES

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 8 is amended—

(1) by redesignating section 191 as section 201; and

(2) by striking out the chapter heading and the table of sections at the beginning of such chapter and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"CHAPTER 8—DEFENSE AGENCIES AND DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE FIELD ACTIVITIES

"Subchapter Sec.
"I. Common Supply and Service Activities 191
"II. Miscellaneous Defense Agency Matters 201

"SUBCHAPTER I—COMMON SUPPLY AND SERVICE ACTIVITIES

"Sec.
"191. Secretary of Defense: authority to provide for common performance of supply or service activities.
"192. Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities: oversight by the Secretary of Defense.
"193. Combat support agencies: oversight.
"194. Limitations on personnel.

"§191. Secretary of Defense: authority to provide for common performance of supply or service activities

"(a) AUTHORITY.—Whenever the Secretary of Defense determines such action would be more effective, economical, or efficient, the Secretary may provide for the performance of a supply or service activity that is common to more than one military department by a single agency of the Department of Defense.

"(b) DESIGNATION OF COMMON SUPPLY OR SERVICE AGENCY.—Any agency of the Department of Defense established under subsection (a) (or under the second sentence of section 125(d) of this title (as in effect before the date of the enactment of the Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986)) for the performance of a supply or service activity referred to in such subsection shall be designated as a Defense Agency or a Department of Defense Field Activity.

"§192. Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities: oversight by the Secretary of Defense

"(a) OVERALL SUPERVISION.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall assign responsibility for the overall supervision of each Defense Agency and Department of Defense Field Activity designated under section 191(b) of this title—

"(A) to a civilian officer within the Office of the Secretary of Defense listed in section 131(b) of this title; or

"(B) to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"(2) An official assigned such a responsibility with respect to a Defense Agency or Department of Defense Field Activity shall advise the Secretary of Defense on the extent to which the program recommendations and budget proposals of such agency or activity conform with the requirements of the military departments and of the unified and specified combatant commands.

"(3) This subsection does not apply to the Defense Intelligence Agency or the National Security Agency.

"(b) PROGRAM AND BUDGET REVIEW.—The Secretary of Defense shall establish procedures to ensure that there is full and effective review of the program recommendations and budget proposals of each Defense Agency and Department of Defense Field Activity.

"(c) PERIODIC REVIEW.—(1) Periodically (and not less often than every two years), the Secretary of Defense shall review the services and supplies provided by each Defense Agency and Department of Defense Field Activity to ensure that—

"(A) there is a continuing need for each such agency and activity; and

"(B) the provision of those services and supplies by each such agency and activity, rather than by the military departments, is a more effective, economical, or efficient manner of providing those services and supplies or of meeting the requirements for combat readiness of the armed forces.

"(2) Paragraph (1) shall apply to the National Security Agency as determined appropriate by the Secretary, in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence. The Secretary shall establish procedures under which information required for review of the National Security Agency shall be obtained.

"§193. Combat support agencies: oversight

"(a) COMBAT READINESS.—(1) Periodically (and not less often than every two years), the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall submit to the Secretary of Defense a report on the combat support agencies. Each such report shall include—

"(A) a determination with respect to the responsiveness and readiness of each such agency to support operating forces in the event of a war or threat to national security; and

"(B) any recommendations that the Chairman considers appropriate.

"(2) In preparing each such report, the Chairman shall review the plans of each such agency with respect to its support of operating forces in the event of a war or threat to national security. After consultation with the Secretaries of the military departments and the commanders of the unified and specified combatant commands, as appropriate, the Chairman may, with the approval of the Secretary of Defense, take steps to provide for any revision of those plans that the Chairman considers appropriate.

"(b) PARTICIPATION IN JOINT TRAINING EXERCISES.—The Chairman shall—

"(1) provide for the participation of the combat support agencies in joint training exercises to the extent necessary to ensure that those agencies are capable of performing their support missions with respect to a war or threat to national security; and

"(2) assess the performance in joint training exercises of each such agency and, in accordance with guidelines established by the Secretary of Defense, take steps to provide for any change that the Chairman considers appropriate to improve that performance.

"(c) READINESS REPORTING SYSTEM.—The Chairman shall develop, in consultation with the director of each combat support agency, a uniform system for reporting to the Secretary of Defense, the commanders of the unified and specified combatant commands, and the Secretaries of the military departments concerning the readiness of each such agency to perform with respect to a war or threat to national security.

"(d) REVIEW OF NATIONAL SECURITY AGENCY.—(1) Subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall apply to the National Security Agency, but only with respect to combat support functions the Agency performs for the Department of Defense.

"(2) The Secretary, after consulting with the Director of Central Intelligence, shall establish policies and procedures with respect to the application of subsections (a), (b), and (c) to the National Security Agency.

"(e) COMBAT SUPPORT CAPABILITIES OF DIA AND NSA.—The Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence, shall develop and implement, as they may determine to be necessary, policies and programs to correct such deficiencies as the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and other officials of the Department of Defense may identify in the capabilities of the Defense Intelligence Agency and the National Security Agency to accomplish assigned missions in support of military combat operations.

"(f) DEFINITION OF COMBAT SUPPORT AGENCY—In this section, the term 'combat support agency' means any of the following Defense Agencies:

"(1) The Defense Communications Agency.

"(2) The Defense Intelligence Agency.

"(3) The Defense Logistics Agency.

"(4) The Defense Mapping Agency.

"(5) Any other Defense Agency designated as a combat support agency by the Secretary of Defense.

"§194. Limitations on personnel

"(a) CAP ON HEADQUARTERS MANAGEMENT PERSONNEL.—After September 30, 1989, the total number of members of the armed forces and civilian employees assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the management headquarters activities or management headquarters support activities in the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities may not exceed the number that is the number of such members and employees assigned or detailed to such duty on September 30, 1989.

"(b) CAP ON OTHER PERSONNEL.—After September 30, 1989, the total number of members of the armed forces and civilian employees assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities, other than members and employees assigned to management headquarters activities or management headquarters support activities, may not exceed the number that is the number of such members and employees assigned or detailed to such duty on September 30, 1989.

"(c) PROHIBITION AGAINST CERTAIN ACTIONS TO EXCEED LIMITATIONS.—The limitations in subsections (a) and (b) may not be exceeded by recategorizing or redefining duties, functions, offices, or organizations.

"(d) EXCLUSION OF NSA.—The National Security Agency shall be excluded in computing and maintaining the limitations required by this section.

"(e) WAIVER.—The limitations in this section do not apply—

"(1) in time of war; or

"(2) during a national emergency declared by Congress.

"(f) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms 'management headquarters activities' and 'management headquarters support activities' have the meanings given those terms in Department of Defense Directive 5100.73, entitled 'Department of Defense Management Headquarters and Headquarters Support Activities' and dated January 7, 1985.

"SUBCHAPTER II—MISCELLANEOUS DEFENSE AGENCY MATTERS

"Sec.
"201. Unauthorized use of Defense Intelligence Agency name, initials, or seal.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 125 is amended by striking out subsection (d).

(2) Subsection (c)(2) of section 113 (as redesignated by section 101(a)) is amended by striking out "section 125" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 125 and 191".

SEC. 302. DEFINITIONS OF DEFENSE AGENCY AND DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE FIELD ACTIVITY

Section 101 is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(44) 'Defense Agency' means an organizational entity of the Department of Defense—

"(A) that is established by the Secretary of Defense under section 191 of this title (or under the second sentence of section 125(d) of this title (as in effect before the date of the enactment of the Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986)) to perform a supply or service activity common to more than one military department (other than such an entity that is designated by the Secretary as a Department of Defense Field Activity); or

"(B) that is designated by the Secretary of Defense as a Defense Agency.

"(45) 'Department of Defense Field Activity' means an organizational entity of the Department of Defense—

"(A) that is established by the Secretary of Defense under section 191 of this title (or under the second sentence of section 125(d) of this title (as in effect before the date of the enactment of the Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986)) to perform a supply or service activity common to more than one military department; and

"(B) that is designated by the Secretary of Defense as a Department of Defense Field Activity.".

SEC. 303. REASSESSMENT OF DEFENSE AGENCIES AND DOD FIELD ACTIVITIES

(a) SECRETARY OF DEFENSE.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall conduct a study of the functions and organizational structure of the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities. The study shall determine the most effective, economical, or efficient means of providing supply or service activities common to more than one military department, after considering the matters set forth in subsection (d) and the reports submitted under subsection (b).

(2) To the extent that the most effective, economical, or efficient means of providing those activities is determined under paragraph (1) to be the existing Defense Agency and Department of Defense Field Activity structure, the study shall analyze methods to improve the performance and responsiveness of Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities with respect to the entities to which they provide supplies and services, particularly with regard to the unified and specified combatant commands.

(b) SERVICE SECRETARIES AND CHAIRMAN OF THE JCS.—The Secretaries of the military departments and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall each conduct a study of the functions and organizational structure of the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities. The Secretaries and Chairman shall each submit a report to the Secretary of Defense on such study at a time specified by the Secretary. Each such report shall include a discussion of and recommendations concerning each matter set forth in subsection (d).

(c) NATIONAL SECURITY AGENCY.—This section shall apply to the National Security Agency as determined appropriate by the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence. The Secretary shall establish procedures under which information required for review of the National Security Agency shall be obtained.

(d) MATTERS CONSIDERED.—The studies required by subsections (a) and (b) shall consider the following matters:

(1) Whether the existing allocation of functions to, and organizational structure of, the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities meet the statutory requirement of providing a supply or service activity common to more than one military department in a more effective, economical, or efficient manner.

(2) Alternative allocations of authority and functions assigned to the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities, including—

(A) various possible redistributions of responsibilities among those agencies and activities;

(B) transfer of the responsibility for those functions to—

(i) the Secretaries of the military departments;

(ii) the appropriate officers in the Office of the Secretary of Defense;

(iii) the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; or

(iv) the commanders of unified or specified combatant commands;

(C) creation of new Defense Agencies or Department of Defense Field Activities;

(D) consolidation of two or more such agencies and activities;

(E) elimination of any such agency or activity; and

(F) other organizational changes in the Department of Defense designed to make the performance of those functions more effective, economical, or efficient.

(3) Whether the requirements of the amendments made by section 301 will have the effect of ensuring the readiness and responsiveness of the Defense Agencies in the event of a war or threat to national security and whether any additional legislation is necessary to ensure such readiness and responsiveness.

(4) Additional legislative or administrative actions that the Secretary considers necessary to ensure effective oversight of Defense Agency and Department of Defense Field Activity resource management, personnel policies, and budget procedures and to clarify supervisory responsibilities.

(5) Whether the findings and recommendations of the report of March 1979 entitled "Report to the Secretary of Defense of the Defense Agency Review" and directed by Major General Theodore Antonelli, United States Army (Retired), should be the basis for additional legislative or administrative actions.

(e) REPORT.—The Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report that includes the following:

(1) A report on the study required by subsection (a) that includes—

(A) a discussion of and recommendations concerning each matter set forth in subsection (d); and

(B) a discussion of the reports required by subsection (b).

(2) A copy of each report required by subsection (b).

(3) A study of the improved application of computer systems to functions of Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities, including a plan for the rapid replacement, where necessary, of existing automated data processing equipment with new equipment.

(4) Plans to achieve reductions in the total number of members of the Armed Forces and civilian employees assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities (other than the National Security Agency) by 5 percent, 10 percent, and 15 percent of the total number of such members and employees projected to be assigned or detailed to such duty on September 30, 1988, together with a discussion of the implications of each such reduction and a draft of any legislation that would be required to implement each such plan.

(f) DEADLINE FOR SUBMISSION.—The report required by subsection (e) shall be submitted not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 304. TRANSITION

(a) SECRETARY OF DEFENSE REVIEW OF DEFENSE AGENCIES.—The first review under section 192(c) of title 10, United States Code (as added by section 301(a)), shall be completed not later than two years after the date that the report under section 303(e) is required to be submitted to Congress.

(b) REPORT AND OTHER ACTIONS BY CHAIRMAN OF JCS.—The first report under subsection (a) of section 193 of such title (as added by section 301(a)) shall be submitted, and subsections (b) and (c) of such section shall be implemented, not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act. The Secretary of Defense shall provide a report on the implementation of such subsections (b) and (c) in the report of the Secretary submitted to Congress for 1988 under section 113(c) of title 10, United States Code (as redesignated by section 101(a)).

TITLE IV—JOINT OFFICER PERSONNEL POLICY

SEC. 401. JOINT OFFICER MANAGEMENT

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT OFFICER MANAGEMENT POLICIES.—Part II of subtitle A is amended by inserting after chapter 37 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 38—JOINT OFFICER MANAGEMENT

"Sec.
"661. Management policies for joint specialty officers.
"662. Promotion policy objectives for joint officers.
"663. Education.
"664. Length of joint duty assignments.
"665. Procedures for monitoring careers of joint officers.
"666. Reserve officers not on the active-duty list.
"667. Annual report to Congress.
"668. Definitions.

"§ 661. Management policies for joint specialty officers

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary of Defense shall establish policies, procedures, and practices for the effective management of officers of the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps on the active-duty list who are particularly trained in, and oriented toward, joint matters (as defined in section 668 of this title). Such officers shall be identified or designated (in addition to their principal military occupational specialty) in such manner as the Secretary of Defense directs. For purposes of this chapter, officers to be managed by such policies, procedures, and practices are referred to as having, or having been nominated for, the 'joint specialty'.

"(b) NUMBERS AND SELECTION.—(1) The number of officers with the joint specialty shall be determined by the Secretary. Such number shall be large enough to meet the requirements of subsection (d).

"(2) Officers shall be selected for the joint specialty by the Secretary of Defense with the advice of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The Secretaries of the military departments shall nominate officers for selection for the joint specialty. Nominations shall be made from among officers—

"(A) who meet qualifications prescribed by the Secretary of Defense; and

"(B) who—

"(i) are senior captains or, in the case of the Navy, senior lieutenants; or

"(ii) are serving in the grade of major or lieutenant commander or a higher grade.

"(c) EDUCATION AND EXPERIENCE REQUIREMENTS.—(1) An officer who is nominated for the joint specialty may not be selected for the joint specialty until the officer—

"(A) successfully completes an appropriate program at a joint professional military education school; and

"(B) after completing such program of education, successfully completes a full tour of duty in a joint duty assignment.

"(2) An officer who has a critical occupational specialty involving combat operations (as designated by the Secretary of Defense) and who is nominated for the joint specialty may be selected for the joint specialty after successful completion of a joint duty assignment of not less than two years and successful completion of a program under paragraph (1)(A). An officer selected for the joint specialty under this paragraph shall be required to complete the generally applicable requirements for selection under paragraph (1)(B) as soon as practicable after such officer's selection.

"(d) NUMBER OF JOINT DUTY ASSIGNMENTS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that approximately one-half of the joint duty assignment positions in grades above captain or, in the case of the Navy, lieutenant are filled at any time by officers who have (or have been nominated for) the joint specialty.

"(2) The Secretary of Defense shall designate not fewer than 1,000 joint duty assignment positions as critical joint duty assignment positions. Each such position shall be held only by an officer with the joint specialty.

"(e) CAREER GUIDELINES.—The Secretary, with the advice of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, shall establish career guidelines for officers with the joint specialty. Such guidelines shall include guidelines for—

"(1) selection;

"(2) military education;

"(3) training;

"(4) types of duty assignments; and

"(5) such other matters as the Secretary considers appropriate.

"§ 662. Promotion policy objectives for joint officers

"(a) QUALIFICATIONS.—The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that the qualifications of officers assigned to joint duty assignments are such that—

"(1) officers who are serving on, or have served on, the Joint Staff are expected, as a group, to be promoted at a rate not less than the rate for officers of the same armed force in the same grade and competitive category who are serving on, or have served on, the headquarters staff of their armed force;

"(2) officers who have the joint specialty are expected, as a group, to be promoted at a rate not less than the rate for officers of the same armed force in the same grade and competitive category who are serving on, or have served on, the headquarters staff of their armed force; and

"(3) officers who are serving in, or have served in, joint duty assignments (other than officers covered in paragraphs (1) and (2)) are expected, as a group, to be promoted at a rate not less than the rate for all officers of the same armed force in the same grade and competitive category.

"(b) REPORT.—The Secretary of Defense shall periodically (and not less often than every six months) report to Congress on the promotion rates of officers who are serving in, or have served in, joint duty assignments, especially with respect to the record of officer selection boards in meeting the objectives of clauses (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a). If such promotion rates fail to meet such objectives, the Secretary shall immediately notify Congress of such failure and of what action the Secretary has taken or plans to take to prevent further failures.

"§ 663. Education

"(a) CAPSTONE COURSE FOR NEW GENERAL AND FLAG OFFICERS.—(1) Each officer selected for promotion to the grade of brigadier general or, in the case of the Navy, rear admiral (lower half) shall be required, after such selection, to attend a military education course designed specifically to prepare new general and flag officers to work with the other armed forces.

"(2) Subject to paragraph (3), the Secretary of Defense may waive paragraph (1)—

"(A) in the case of an officer whose immediately previous assignment was in a joint duty assignment and who is thoroughly familiar with joint matters;

"(B) when necessary for the good of the service;

"(C) in the case of an officer whose proposed selection for promotion is based primarily upon scientific and technical qualifications for which joint requirements do not exist (as determined under regulations prescribed under section 619(e)(4) of this title); and

"(D) in the case of a medical officer, dental officer, veterinary officer, medical service officer, nurse, biomedical science officer, or chaplain.

"(3) The authority of the Secretary of Defense to grant a waiver under paragraph (2) may only be delegated to the Deputy Secretary of Defense, an Under Secretary of Defense, or an Assistant Secretary of Defense. Such a waiver may be granted only on a case-by-case basis in the case of an individual officer.

"(b) JOINT MILITARY EDUCATION SCHOOLS.—The Secretary of Defense, with the advice and assistance of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, shall periodically review and revise the curriculum of each school of the National Defense University (and of any other joint professional military education school) to enhance the education and training of officers in joint matters. The Secretary shall require such schools to maintain rigorous standards for the military education of officers with the joint specialty.

"(c) OTHER PROFESSIONAL MILITARY EDUCATION SCHOOLS.—The Secretary of Defense shall require that each Department of Defense school concerned with professional military education periodically review and revise its curriculum for senior and intermediate grade officers in order to strengthen the focus on—

"(1) joint matters; and

"(2) preparing officers for joint duty assignments.

"(d) POST-EDUCATION DUTY ASSIGNMENTS.—The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that—

"(1) unless waived by the Secretary in an individual case, each officer with the joint specialty who graduates from a joint professional military education school shall be assigned to a joint duty assignment for that officer's next duty assignment; and

"(2) a high proportion (which shall be greater than 50 percent) of the other officers graduating from a joint professional military education school also receive assignments to a joint duty assignment as their next duty assignment.

"§ 664. Length of joint duty assignments

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—The length of a joint duty assignment—

"(1) for general and flag officers shall be not less than three years; and

"(2) for other officers shall be not less than three and one half years.

"(b) WAIVER AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Defense may waive subsection (a) in the case of any officer, but the Secretary shall ensure that the average length of joint duty assignments meets the standards prescribed in that subsection.

"(c) CERTAIN OFFICERS WITH CRITICAL COMBAT OPERATIONS SKILLS.—Joint duty assignments of less than the period prescribed by subsection (a), but not less than two years, may be authorized for the purposes of section 661(c)(2) of this title. Such an assignment may not be counted for the purposes of determining the average length of joint duty assignments under subsection (b).

"(d) EXCEPTION.—(1) Subsection (a) does not apply in the case of an officer who fails to complete a joint duty assignment as the result of—

"(A) retirement;

"(B) separation from active duty; or

"(C) suspension from duty under section 155(f)(2) or 164(g) of this title.

"(2) In computing the average length of joint duty assignments for purposes of this section, the Secretary of Defense shall exclude joint duty assignments not completed because of a reason specified in paragraph (1).

"§ 665. Procedures for monitoring careers of joint officers

"(a) PROCEDURES.—(1) The Secretary of Defense, with the advice of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, shall establish procedures for overseeing the careers of—

"(A) officers with the joint specialty; and

"(B) other officers who serve in joint duty assignments.

"(2) Such oversight shall include monitoring of the implementation of the career guidelines established under section 661(e) of this title.

"(b) FUNCTION OF JOINT STAFF.—The Secretary shall take such action as necessary to enhance the capabilities of the Joint Staff so that it can—

"(1) monitor the promotions and career assignments of officers with the joint specialty and of other officers who have served in joint duty assignments; and

"(2) otherwise advise the Chairman on joint personnel matters.

"§ 666. Reserve officers not on the active-duty list

"The Secretary of Defense shall establish personnel policies emphasizing education and experience in joint matters for reserve officers not on the active-duty list. Such policies shall, to the extent practicable for the reserve components, be similar to the policies provided by this chapter.

"§ 667. Annual report to Congress

"The Secretary of Defense shall include in the annual report of the Secretary to Congress under section 113(c) of this title, for the period covered by the report, the following information (which shall be shown for the Department of Defense as a whole and separately for the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps):

"(1) The number of officers selected for the joint specialty and their education and experience.

"(2) The promotion rate for officers considered for promotion from within the promotion zone who are serving on the Joint Staff compared with the promotion rate for other officers considered for promotion from within the promotion zone in the same pay grade and the same competitive category, shown for all officers of the armed force and for officers serving on the headquarters staff of the armed force concerned.

"(3) The promotion rate for officers with the joint specialty, compared in the same manner as specified in paragraph (2).

"(4) The promotion rate for other officers who are serving in joint duty assignments, compared in the same manner as specified in paragraph (2).

"(5) The promotion rate for officers considered for promotion from below the promotion zone, shown for officers serving on the Joint Staff, officers with the joint specialty, and other officers serving in joint duty assignments, compared in the same manner as specified in paragraph (2).

"(6) An analysis of assignments of officers after selection for the joint specialty.

"(7) The average length of tours of duty in joint duty assignments—

"(A) for general and flag officers, shown separately for assignments to the Joint Staff and other joint duty assignments; and

"(B) for other officers, shown separately for assignments to the Joint Staff and other joint duty assignments.

"(8) In any case in which the information under paragraphs (2) through (5) shows a significant imbalance between officers serving in joint duty assignments or having the joint specialty and other officers, a description of what action has been taken (or is planned to be taken) by the Secretary to correct the imbalance.

"(9) An analysis of the extent to which the Secretary of each military department is providing officers to fill that department's share (as determined by law or by the Secretary of Defense) of Joint Staff and other joint duty assignments, including the reason for any significant failure by a military department to fill its share of such positions and a discussion of the actions being taken to correct the shortfall.

"(10) Such other information and comparative data as the Secretary of Defense considers appropriate to demonstrate the performance of the Department of Defense and the performance of each military department in carrying out this chapter.

"§ 668. Definitions

"(a) JOINT MATTERS.—In this chapter, the term 'joint matters' means matters relating to the integrated employment of land, sea, and air forces, including matters relating to—

"(1) national military strategy;

"(2) strategic planning and contingency planning; and

"(3) command and control of combat operations under unified command.

"(b) JOINT DUTY ASSIGNMENT.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall by regulation define the term 'joint duty assignment' for the purposes of this chapter. That definition shall be limited to assignments in which the officer gains significant experience in joint matters and shall exclude—

"(A) assignments for joint training or joint education; and

"(B) assignments within an officer's own military department.

"(2) The Secretary shall publish a list showing—

"(A) the positions that are joint duty assignment positions under such regulation and the number of such positions; and

"(B) of the positions listed under subparagraph (A), those that are critical joint duty assignment positions and the number of such positions.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—The tables of chapters at the beginning of subtitle A, and at the beginning of part II of subtitle A, are amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 37 the following new item:

"38. Joint Officer Management.....661".

SEC. 402. PROMOTION PROCEDURES FOR JOINT OFFICERS

(a) COMPOSITION OF SELECTION BOARDS.—Section 612 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) Each selection board convened under section 611(a) of this title that will consider officers who are serving in, or have served in, joint duty assignments shall include at least one officer designated by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff who is currently serving in a joint duty assignment. The Secretary of Defense may waive the preceding sentence in the case of any selection board of the Marine Corps.".

(b) GUIDANCE TO SELECTION BOARDS.—Section 615 is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "The Secretary of the";

(2) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (4)";

(3) by redesignating clause (5) as clause (6);

(4) by inserting after clause (4) the following new clause (5):

"(5) guidelines, based upon guidelines received by the Secretary from the Secretary of Defense under subsection (b), for the purpose of ensuring that the board gives appropriate consideration to the performance in joint duty assignments of officers who are serving, or have served, in such assignments; and"; and

(5) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary of Defense, with the advice and assistance of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, shall furnish to the Secretaries of the military departments guidelines for the purpose of ensuring that each selection board convened under section 611(a) of this title gives appropriate consideration to the performance in joint duty assignments of officers who are serving, or have served, in such assignments.".

(c) REVIEW OF PROMOTION LISTS BY CHAIRMAN OF JCS.—Section 618 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (b), (c), (d), and (e) as subsections (c), (d), (e), and (f), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection (b):

"(b)(1) After completing the requirements of subsection (a), the Secretary concerned, in the case of the report of a selection board that considered officers who are serving, or have served, in joint duty assignments, shall submit the report to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"(2) The Chairman, in accordance with guidelines furnished to the Chairman by the Secretary of Defense, shall review the report for the purpose of determining if—

"(A) the selection board acted consistent with the guidelines of the Secretary of Defense under section 615(b) of this title to ensure that selection boards give appropriate consideration to the performance in joint duty assignments of officers who are serving, or have served, in such assignments; and

"(B) the selection board otherwise gave appropriate consideration to the performance in joint duty assignments of officers who are serving, or have served, in such assignments.

"(3) After reviewing the report, the Chairman shall return the report, with his determinations and comments, to the Secretary concerned.

"(4) If the Chairman determines that the board acted contrary to the guidelines of the Secretary of Defense under section 615(b) of this title or otherwise failed to give appropriate consideration to the performance of officers in joint duty assignments, the Secretary concerned may—

"(A) return the report, together with the Chairman's determinations and comments, to the selection board (or a subsequent selection board convened under section 611(a) of this title for the same grade and competitive category) for further proceedings in accordance with subsection (a);

"(B) convene a special selection board in the manner provided for under section 628 of this title; or

"(C) take other appropriate action to satisfy the concerns of the Chairman.

"(5) If, after completion of all actions taken under paragraph (4), the Secretary concerned and the Chairman remain in disagreement with respect to the report of a selection board, the Secretary concerned shall indicate such disagreement, and the reasons for such disagreement, as part of his transmittal of the report of the selection board to the Secretary of Defense under subsection (c). Such transmittal shall include any comments submitted by the Chairman."; and

(3) by adding at the end of paragraph (1) of subsection (c) (as redesignated by paragraph (1)) the following new sentence: "The Secretary of Defense shall, before transmitting the report of a selection board to the President, take appropriate action to resolve any disagreement between the Secretary concerned and the Chairman transmitted to him under subsection (b)(5).".

SEC. 403. CONSIDERATION OF JOINT DUTY IN SENIOR GENERAL AND FLAG OFFICER APPOINTMENTS AND ADVICE ON QUALIFICATIONS

Section 601 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) When an officer is recommended to the President for an initial appointment to the grade of lieutenant general or vice admiral, or for an initial appointment to the grade of general or admiral, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall submit to the Secretary of Defense the Chairman's evaluation of the performance of that officer as a member of the Joint Staff and in other joint duty assignments. The Secretary of Defense shall submit the Chairman's evaluation to the President at the same time the recommendation for the appointment is submitted to the President.

"(2) Whenever a vacancy occurs in a position within the Department of Defense that the President has designated as a position of importance and responsibility to carry the grade of general or admiral or lieutenant general or vice admiral or in an office that is designated by law to carry such a grade, the Secretary of Defense shall inform the President of the qualifications needed by an officer serving in that position or office to carry out effectively the duties and responsibilities of that position or office.".

SEC. 404. JOINT DUTY ASSIGNMENT AS PREREQUISITE FOR PROMOTION TO GENERAL OR FLAG OFFICER GRADE

Section 619 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) An officer may not be selected for promotion to the grade of brigadier general or rear admiral (lower half) unless the officer has served in a joint duty assignment.

"(2) Subject to paragraph (3), the Secretary of Defense may waive paragraph (1)—

"(A) when necessary for the good of the service;

"(B) in the case of an officer whose proposed selection for promotion is based primarily upon scientific and technical qualifications for which joint requirements do not exist;

"(C) in the case of a medical officer, dental officer, veterinary officer, medical service officer, nurse, biomedical science officer, chaplain, or judge advocate; and

"(D) until January 1, 1992, in the case of an officer who served before the date of the enactment of this subsection in an assignment (other than a joint duty assignment) that involved significant experience in joint matters (as determined by the Secretary).

"(3)(A) A waiver may be granted under paragraph (2) only on a case-by-case basis in the case of an individual officer.

"(B) In the case of a waiver under paragraph (2)(A), the Secretary shall provide that the first duty assignment as a general or flag officer of an officer for whom the waiver is granted shall be in a joint duty assignment.

"(C) The authority of the Secretary of Defense to grant a waiver under paragraph (2)(B), (2)(C), or (2)(D) may only be delegated to the Deputy Secretary of Defense, an Under Secretary of Defense, or an Assistant Secretary of Defense.

"(4) The Secretary of Defense shall prescribe regulations to carry out this subsection. Such regulations shall specifically identify those categories of officers for which selection for promotion to brigadier general or, in the case of the Navy, rear admiral (lower half) is based primarily upon scientific and technical qualifications for which joint requirements do not exist.".

SEC. 405. ANNUAL REPORT ON IMPLEMENTATION

The Secretary of Defense shall include in the annual report of the Secretary to Congress under section 113(c) of title 10, United States Code (as redesignated by section 101(a)), for each year from 1987 through 1991 a detailed report on the implementation of this title and the amendments made by this title.

SEC. 406. TRANSITION

(a) JOINT DUTY ASSIGNMENTS.—(1) Section 661(d) of title 10, United States Code (as added by section 401), shall be implemented as rapidly as possible and not later than two years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The list of positions that are joint duty assignment positions, including identification of those positions that are critical joint duty assignment positions, required to be published by section 668(b)(2) of such title shall be published not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) JOINT SPECIALTY.—

(1) INITIAL SELECTIONS.—(A) In making the initial selections of officers for the joint specialty under section 661 of title 10, United States Code (as added by section 401 of this Act), the Secretary of Defense may waive the requirement of either subparagraph (A) or (B) (but not both) of subsection (c)(1) of such section in the case of any officer in a grade above captain or, in the case of the Navy, lieutenant.

(B) In applying such subparagraph (B) to the initial selections of officers for the joint specialty, the Secretary may in the case of any officer—

(i) waive the requirement that a joint duty assignment be served after the officer has completed an appropriate program at a joint professional military education school;

(ii) waive the requirement for the length of a joint duty assignment if the officer has served in such an assignment for not less than two years; and

(iii) consider as a joint duty assignment any tour of duty served by the officer before the date of the enactment of this Act (or being served on the date of the enactment of this Act) that was considered to be a joint duty assignment or a joint equivalent assignment under the regulations in effect at the time the assignment began.

(C) A waiver under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph or under any provision of subparagraph (B) of this paragraph may only be made on a case-by-case basis.

(D) The authority of the Secretary of Defense to grant a waiver under subparagraph (A) or (B) of this paragraph may be delegated only to the Deputy Secretary of Defense.

(2) REQUIREMENT FOR HIGH STANDARDS.—In exercising the authority provided by paragraph (1), the Secretary of Defense shall ensure that the highest standards of performance, education, and experience are established and maintained for officers selected for the joint specialty.

(3) SUNSET.—The authority provided by paragraph (1) shall expire two years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) CAREER GUIDELINES.—The career guidelines required to be established by section 661(e) of such title, the procedures required to be established by section 665(a) of such title, and the personnel policies required to be established by section 666 of such title (as added by section 401) shall be established not later than the end of the eight-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act. The provisions of section 665(b) of such title shall be implemented not later than the end of such period.

(d) EDUCATION.—

(1) CAPSTONE COURSE.—Subsection (a) of section 663 of such title (as added by section 401) shall apply with respect to officers selected in reports of officer selection boards submitted to the Secretary concerned after the end of the 120-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) REVIEW OF MILITARY EDUCATION SCHOOLS.—(A) The first review under subsections (b) and (c) of such section shall be completed not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act. The Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report on the results of the review at each Department of Defense school not later than 60 days thereafter.

(B) Such subsections shall be implemented so that the revised curricula take effect with respect to courses beginning after July 1987.

(3) POST-EDUCATION DUTY ASSIGNMENTS.—Subsection (d) of such section shall take effect with respect to classes graduating from joint professional military education schools after January 1987.

(e) LENGTH OF JOINT DUTY ASSIGNMENTS.—Subsection (a) of section 664 of title 10, United States Code (as added by section 401), shall apply to officers assigned to joint duty assignments after the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act. In computing an average under subsection (b) of such section, only joint duty assignments to which such subsection applies shall be considered.

(f) PROMOTION POLICY.—The amendments made by section 402 shall take effect with respect to selection boards convened under section 611(a) of title 10, United States Code, after the end of the 120-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(g) INITIAL REPORT.—The first report submitted by the Secretary of Defense after the date of the enactment of this Act under section 113(c) of title 10, United States Code (as redesignated by section 101), shall contain as much of the information required by section 667 of such title (as added by section 401) as is available to the Secretary at the time of the preparation of the report.

TITLE V—MILITARY DEPARTMENTS

PART A—DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY

SEC. 501. THE ARMY SECRETARIAT

(a) AMENDMENTS TO CHAPTER 303.—(1) Section 3015 is transferred to the end of chapter 305 and redesignated as section 3040.

(2) Sections 3010, 3011, 3012, 3013, and 3014 are redesignated as sections 3011, 3012, 3013, 3014, and 3015, respectively.

(3) Section 3016 is transferred within chapter 303 to appear after section 3017 and is redesignated as section 3018.

(4) Section 3019 is transferred to chapter 305, inserted after section 3037, and redesignated as section 3038.

(5) Chapter 303 is amended by striking out sections 3013, 3014, and 3015 (as redesignated by paragraph (2)) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"§3013. Secretary of the Army

"(a)(1) There is a Secretary of the Army, appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Secretary is the head of the Department of the Army.

"(2) A person may not be appointed as Secretary of the Army within 10 years after relief from active duty as a commissioned officer of a regular component of an armed force.

"(b) Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense and subject to the provisions of chapter 6 of this title, the Secretary of the Army is responsible for, and has the authority necessary to conduct, all affairs of the Department of the Army, including the following functions:

"(1) Recruiting.
"(2) Organizing.
"(3) Supplying.
"(4) Equipping (including research and development).
"(5) Training.
"(6) Servicing.
"(7) Mobilizing.
"(8) Demobilizing.
"(9) Administering (including the morale and welfare of personnel).
"(10) Maintaining.
"(11) The construction, outfitting, and repair of military equipment.
"(12) The construction, maintenance, and repair of buildings, structures, and utilities and the acquisition of real property and interests in real property necessary to carry out the responsibilities specified in this section.

"(c) Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Army is also responsible to the Secretary of Defense for—

"(1) the functioning and efficiency of the Department of the Army;

"(2) the formulation of policies and programs by the Department of the Army that are fully consistent with national security objectives and policies established by the President or the Secretary of Defense;

"(3) the effective and timely implementation of policy, program, and budget decisions and instructions of the President or the Secretary of Defense relating to the functions of the Department of the Army;

"(4) carrying out the functions of the Department of the Army so as to fulfill (to the maximum extent practicable) the current and future operational requirements of the unified and specified combatant commands;

"(5) effective cooperation and coordination between the Department of the Army and the other military departments and agencies of the Department of Defense to provide for more effective, efficient, and economical administration and to eliminate duplication;

"(6) the presentation and justification of the positions of the Department of the Army on the plans, programs, and policies of the Department of Defense; and

"(7) the effective supervision and control of the intelligence activities of the Department of the Army.

"(d) The Secretary of the Army is also responsible for such other activities as may be prescribed by law or by the President or Secretary of Defense.

"(e) After first informing the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Army may make such recommendations to Congress relating to the Department of Defense as he considers appropriate.

"(f) The Secretary of the Army may assign such of his functions, powers, and duties as he considers appropriate to the Under Secretary of the Army and to the Assistant Secretaries of the Army. Officers of the Army shall, as directed by the Secretary, report on any matter to the Secretary, the Under Secretary, or any Assistant Secretary.

"(g) The Secretary of the Army may—

"(1) assign, detail, and prescribe the duties of members of the Army and civilian personnel of the Department of the Army;

"(2) change the title of any officer or activity of the Department of the Army not prescribed by law; and

"(3) prescribe regulations to carry out his functions, powers, and duties under this title.

"§3014. Office of the Secretary of the Army

"(a) There is in the Department of the Army an Office of the Secretary of the Army. The function of the Office is to assist the Secretary of the Army in carrying out his responsibilities.

"(b) The Office of the Secretary of the Army is composed of the following:

"(1) The Under Secretary of the Army.
"(2) The Assistant Secretaries of the Army.
"(3) The Administrative Assistant to the Secretary of the Army.
"(4) The General Counsel of the Department of the Army.
"(5) The Inspector General of the Army.
"(6) The Army Reserve Forces Policy Committee.
"(7) Such other offices and officials as may be established by law or as the Secretary of the Army may establish or designate.

"(c)(1) The Office of the Secretary of the Army shall have sole responsibility within the Office of the Secretary and the Army Staff for the following functions:

"(A) Acquisition.
"(B) Auditing.
"(C) Comptroller (including financial management).
"(D) Information management.
"(E) Inspector General.
"(F) Legislative affairs.
"(G) Public affairs.

"(2) The Secretary of the Army shall establish or designate a single office or other entity within the Office of the Secretary of the Army to conduct each function specified in paragraph (1). No office or other entity may be established or designated within the Army Staff to conduct any of the functions specified in paragraph (1).

"(3) The Secretary shall prescribe the relationship of each office or other entity established or designated under paragraph (2) to the Chief of Staff and to the Army Staff and shall ensure that each such office or entity provides the Chief of Staff such staff support as the Chief of Staff considers necessary to perform his duties and responsibilities.

"(4) The vesting in the Office of the Secretary of the Army of the responsibility for the conduct of a function specified in paragraph (1) does not preclude other elements of the executive part of the Department of the Army (including the Army Staff) from providing advice or assistance to the Chief of Staff or otherwise participating in that function within the executive part of the Department under the direction of the office assigned responsibility for that function in the Office of the Secretary of the Army.

"(d)(1) Subject to paragraph (2), the Office of the Secretary of the Army shall have sole responsibility within the Office of the Secretary and the Army Staff for the function of research and development.

"(2) The Secretary of the Army may assign to the Army Staff responsibility for those aspects of the function of research and development that relate to military requirements and test and evaluation.

"(3) The Secretary shall establish or designate a single office or other entity within the Office of the Secretary of the Army to conduct the function specified in paragraph (1).

"(4) The Secretary shall prescribe the relationship of the office or other entity established or designated under paragraph (3) to the Chief of Staff of the Army and to the Army Staff and shall ensure that each such office or entity provides the Chief of Staff such staff support as the Chief of Staff considers necessary to perform his duties and responsibilities.

"(e) The Secretary of the Army shall ensure that the Office of the Secretary of the Army and the Army Staff do not duplicate specific functions for which the Secretary has assigned responsibility to the other.

"(f)(1) The total number of members of the armed forces and civilian employees of the Department of the Army assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of the Army and on the Army Staff may not exceed 3,105.

"(2) Not more than 1,865 officers of the Army on the active-duty list may be assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of the Army and on the Army Staff.

"(3) The total number of general officers assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of the Army and on the Army Staff may not exceed the number equal to 85 percent of the number of general officers assigned or detailed to such duty on the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(4) The limitations in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) do not apply in time of war or during a national emergency declared by Congress. The limitation in paragraph (2) does not apply whenever the President determines that it is in the national interest to increase the number of officers assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of the Army or on the Army Staff.

"(5) The limitations in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) do not apply before October 1, 1988.

"§ 3015. Under Secretary of the Army

"(a) There is an Under Secretary of the Army, appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(b) The Under Secretary shall perform such duties and exercise such powers as the Secretary of the Army may prescribe.

"§ 3016. Assistant Secretaries of the Army

"(a) There are five Assistant Secretaries of the Army. They shall be appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(b)(1) The Assistant Secretaries shall perform such duties and exercise such powers as the Secretary of the Army may prescribe.

"(2) One of the Assistant Secretaries shall be the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs. He shall have as his principal duty the overall supervision of manpower and reserve component affairs of the Department of the Army.

"(3) One of the Assistant Secretaries shall be the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works. He shall have as his principal duty the overall supervision of the functions of the Department of the Army relating to programs for conservation and development of the national water resources, including flood control, navigation, shore protection, and related purposes.".

(6) Section 3017 is amended—

(A) by striking out "(a)" at the beginning of the text of such section;

(B) by striking out clause (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) The Assistant Secretaries of the Army, in the order prescribed by the Secretary of the Army and approved by the Secretary of Defense."; and

(C) by striking out subsection (b).

(7) Chapter 303 is further amended by adding at the end the following new sections:

"§ 3019. General Counsel

"(a) There is a General Counsel of the Department of the Army, appointed from civilian life by the President.

"(b) The General Counsel shall perform such functions as the Secretary of the Army may prescribe.

"§ 3020. Inspector General

"(a) There is an Inspector General of the Army who shall be detailed to such position by the Secretary of the Army from the general officers of the Army. An officer may not be detailed to such position for a tour of duty of more than four years, except that the Secretary may extend such a tour of duty if he makes a special finding that the extension is necessary in the public interest.

"(b) When directed by the Secretary or the Chief of Staff, the Inspector General shall—

"(1) inquire into and report upon the discipline, efficiency, and economy of the Army; and

"(2) perform any other duties prescribed by the Secretary or the Chief of Staff.

"(c) The Inspector General shall periodically propose programs of inspections to the Secretary of the Army and shall recommend additional inspections and investigations as may appear appropriate.

"(d) The Inspector General shall cooperate fully with the Inspector General of the Department of Defense in connection with the performance of any duty or function by the Inspector General of the Department of Defense under the Inspector General Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. App. 3) regarding the Department of the Army.

"(e) The Inspector General shall have such deputies and assistants as the Secretary of the Army may prescribe. Each such deputy and assistant shall be an officer detailed by the Secretary to that position from the officers of the Army for a tour of duty of not more than four years, under a procedure prescribed by the Secretary.".

(8) Section 3033 is transferred to the end of chapter 303 (as amended by paragraph (7)), redesignated as section 3021, and amended—

(A) in subsection (a)—

(i) by striking out "office" and inserting in lieu thereof "Office";

"(ii) to the Commandant of the Marine Corps and the Headquarters, Marine Corps; and

"(B) ensure that each such office or entity provides the Chief of Naval Operations and the Commandant of the Marine Corps such staff support as each considers necessary to perform his duties and responsibilities.

"(4) The vesting in the Office of the Secretary of the Navy of the responsibility for the conduct of a function specified in paragraph (1) does not preclude other elements of the executive part of the Department of the Navy (including the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations and the Headquarters, Marine Corps) from providing advice or assistance to the Chief of Naval Operations and the Commandant of the Marine Corps or otherwise participating in that function within the executive part of the Department under the direction of the office assigned responsibility for that function in the Office of the Secretary of the Navy.

"(d)(1) Subject to paragraph (2), the Office of the Secretary of the Navy shall have sole responsibility within the Office of the Secretary of the Navy, the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, and the Headquarters, Marine Corps, for the function of research and development.

"(2) The Secretary of the Navy may assign to the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations and the Headquarters, Marine Corps, responsibility for those aspects of the function of research and development relating to military requirements and test and evaluation.

"(3) The Secretary shall establish or designate a single office or other entity within the Office of the Secretary of the Navy to conduct the function specified in paragraph (1).

"(4) The Secretary shall—

"(A) prescribe the relationship of the office or other entity established or designated under paragraph (3)—

"(i) to the Chief of Naval Operations and the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations; and

"(ii) to the Commandant of the Marine Corps and the Headquarters, Marine Corps; and

"(B) ensure that each such office or entity provides the Chief of Naval Operations and the Commandant of the Marine Corps such staff support as each considers necessary to perform his duties and responsibilities.

"(e) The Secretary of the Navy shall ensure that the Office of the Secretary of the Navy, the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, and the Headquarters, Marine Corps, do not duplicate specific functions for which the Secretary has assigned responsibility to another of such offices.

"(f)(1) The total number of members of the armed forces and civilian employees of the Department of the Navy assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of the Navy, the Office of Chief of Naval Operations, and the Headquarters, Marine Corps, may not exceed 2,866.

"(2) Not more than 1,720 officers of the Navy and Marine Corps on the active-duty list may be assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of the Navy, the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, and the Headquarters, Marine Corps.

"(3) The total number of general and flag officers assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of the Navy, the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, and the Headquarters, Marine Corps, may not exceed the number equal to 85 percent of the number of general and flag officers assigned or detailed to such duty on the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(4) The limitations in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) do not apply in time of war or during a national emergency declared by Congress. The limitation in paragraph (2) does not apply whenever the President determines that it is in the national interest to increase the number of officers assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of the Navy, the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, or the Headquarters, Marine Corps.

"(5) The limitations in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) do not apply before October 1, 1988.

"§ 5015. Under Secretary of the Navy

"(a) There is an Under Secretary of the Navy, appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(b) The Under Secretary shall perform such duties and exercise such powers as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

"§ 5016. Assistant Secretaries of the Navy

"(a) There are four Assistant Secretaries of the Navy. They shall be appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(b)(1) The Assistant Secretaries shall perform such duties and exercise such powers as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

"(2) One of the Assistant Secretaries shall be the Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Manpower and Reserve Affairs. He shall have as his principal duty the overall supervision of manpower and reserve component affairs of the Department of the Navy.

"§ 5017. Secretary of the Navy: successors to duties

"If the Secretary of the Navy dies, resigns, is removed from office, is absent, or is disabled, the person who is highest on the following list, and who is not absent or disabled, shall perform the duties of the Secretary until the President, under section 3347 of title 5, directs another person to perform those duties or until the absence or disability ceases:

"(1) The Under Secretary of the Navy.

"(2) The Assistant Secretaries of the Navy, in the order prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and approved by the Secretary of Defense.

"(3) The Chief of Naval Operations.

"(4) The Commandant of the Marine Corps.

"§ 5018. Administrative Assistant

"The Secretary of the Navy may appoint an Administrative Assistant in the Office of the Secretary of the Navy. The Administrative Assistant shall perform such duties as the Secretary may prescribe.

"§ 5019. General Counsel

"(a) There is a General Counsel of the Department of the Navy, appointed from civilian life by the President.

"(b) The General Counsel shall perform such functions as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.".

(5) Section 5088 is transferred to the end of such chapter (as amended by paragraph (4)), redesignated as section 5020, and amended—

(A) by striking out "Office of the Chief of Naval Operations" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "Office of the Secretary of the Navy";

(B) by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (d) and striking out "the Chief of Naval Operations" in such subsection and inserting in lieu thereof "the Secretary of the Navy"; ; and

(C) by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection (c):

"(c) The Naval Inspector General shall cooperate fully with the Inspector General of the Department of Defense in connection with the performance of any duty or function by the Inspector General of the Department of Defense under the Inspector General Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. App. 3) regarding the Department of the Navy.".

(d) TRANSFERS FROM CHAPTER 513.—Sections 5150, 5151, 5152, and 5153 are transferred to the end of chapter 503 (as amended by subsection (c)) and redesignated as sections 5021, 5022, 5023, and 5024, respectively.

(e) REPEAL OF SUPERSEDED CHAPTER.—Chapter 505 is repealed.

SEC. 512. OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF NAVAL OPERATIONS

(a) REPEAL OF FORMER CHAPTER ON OFFICE OF CNO.—Chapter 509 is repealed.

(b) NEW CHAPTER ON OFFICE OF CNO.—Part I of subtitle C is amended by inserting after chapter 503 the following new chapter 505:

"CHAPTER 505—OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF NAVAL OPERATIONS

"Sec.
"5031. Office of the Chief of Naval Operations: function; composition.
"5032. Office of the Chief of Naval Operations: general duties.
"5033. Chief of Naval Operations.
"5034. Chief of Naval Operations: retirement.
"5035. Vice Chief of Naval Operations.
"5036. Deputy Chiefs of Naval Operations.
"5037. Assistant Chiefs of Naval Operations.

"§ 5031. Office of the Chief of Naval Operations: function; composition

"(a) There is in the executive part of the Department of the Navy an Office of the Chief of Naval Operations. The function of the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations is to assist the Secretary of the Navy in carrying out his responsibilities.

"(b) The Office of the Chief of Naval Operations is composed of the following:

"(1) The Chief of Naval Operations.

"(2) The Vice Chief of Naval Operations.

"(3) The Deputy Chiefs of Naval Operations.

"(4) The Assistant Chiefs of Naval Operations.

"(5) The Surgeon General of the Navy.

"(6) The Chief of Naval Personnel.

"(7) The Chief of Chaplains of the Navy.

"(8) Other members of the Navy and Marine Corps assigned or detailed to the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations.

"(9) Civilian employees in the Department of the Navy assigned or detailed to the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations.

"(c) Except as otherwise specifically prescribed by law, the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations shall be organized in such manner, and its members shall perform such duties and have such titles, as the Secretary may prescribe.

"§ 5032. Office of the Chief of Naval Operations: general duties

"(a) The Office of the Chief of Naval Operations shall furnish professional assistance to the Secretary, the Under Secretary, and the Assistant Secretaries of the Navy and to the Chief of Naval Operations.

"(b) Under the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of the Navy, the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations shall—

"(1) subject to subsections (c) and (d) of section 5014 of this title, prepare for such employment of the Navy, and for such recruiting, organizing, supplying, equipping (including those aspects of research and development assigned by the Secretary of the Navy), training, servicing, mobilizing, demobilizing, administering, and maintaining of the Navy, as will assist in the execution of any power, duty, or function of the Secretary or the Chief of Naval Operations;

"(2) investigate and report upon the efficiency of the Navy and its preparation to support military operations by combatant commands;

"(3) prepare detailed instructions for the execution of approved plans and supervise the execution of those plans and instructions;

"(4) as directed by the Secretary or the Chief of Naval Operations, coordinate the action of organizations of the Navy; and

"(5) perform such other duties, not otherwise assigned by law, as may be prescribed by the Secretary.

"§ 5033. Chief of Naval Operations

"(a)(1) There is a Chief of Naval Operations, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Chief of Naval Operations shall be appointed for a term of four years, from officers on the active-duty list in the line of the Navy who are eligible to command at sea and who hold the grade of rear admiral or above. He serves at the pleasure of the President. In time of war or during a national emergency declared by Congress, he may be reappointed for a term of not more than four years.

"(2) The President may appoint an officer as the Chief of Naval Operations only if—

"(A) the officer has had significant experience in joint duty assignments; and

"(B) such experience includes at least one joint duty assignment as a flag officer.

"(3) The President may waive paragraph (2) in the case of an officer if the President determines such action is necessary in the national interest.

"(b) The Chief of Naval Operations, while so serving, has the grade of admiral without vacating his permanent grade. In the performance of his duties within the Department of the Navy, the Chief of Naval Operations takes precedence above all other officers of the naval service.

"(c) Except as otherwise prescribed by law and subject to section 5013(f) of this title, the Chief of Naval Operations performs his duties under the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of the Navy and is directly responsible to the Secretary.

"(d) Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Naval Operations shall—

"(1) preside over the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations;

"(2) transmit the plans and recommendations of the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations to the Secretary and advise the Secretary with regard to such plans and recommendations;

"(3) after approval of the plans or recommendations of the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations by the Secretary, act as the agent of the Secretary in carrying them into effect;

"(4) exercise supervision, consistent with the authority assigned to commanders of unified or specified combatant commands under chapter 6 of this title, over such of the members and organizations of the Navy and the Marine Corps as the Secretary determines;

"(5) perform the duties prescribed for him by section 171 of this title and other provisions of law; and

"(6) perform such other military duties, not otherwise assigned by law, as are assigned to him by the President, the Secretary of Defense, or the Secretary of the Navy.

"(e)(1) The Chief of Naval Operations shall also perform the duties prescribed for him as a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff under section 151 of this title.

"(2) To the extent that such action does not impair the independence of the Chief of Naval Operations in the performance of his duties as a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Chief of Naval Operations shall inform the Secretary regarding military advice rendered by members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on matters affecting the Department of the Navy.

"(3) Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense, the Chief of Naval Operations shall keep the Secretary of the Navy fully informed of significant military operations affecting the duties and responsibilities of the Secretary.

"§ 5034. Chief of Naval Operations: retirement

"An officer who is retired while serving as Chief of Naval Operations, or who, after serving at least two and one-half years as Chief of Naval Operations, is retired after completion of that service while serving in a lower grade than admiral, may, in the discretion of the President, be retired with the grade of admiral.

"§ 5035. Vice Chief of Naval Operations

"(a) There is a Vice Chief of Naval Operations, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from officers on the active-duty list in the line of the Navy serving in grades above captain and eligible to command at sea.

"(b) The Vice Chief of Naval Operations, while so serving, has the grade of admiral without vacating his permanent grade.

"(c) The Vice Chief of Naval Operations has such authority and duties with respect to the Department of the Navy as the Chief of Naval Operations, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, may delegate to or prescribe for him. Orders issued by the Vice Chief of Naval Operations in performing such duties have the same effect as those issued by the Chief of Naval Operations.

"(d) When there is a vacancy in the office of Chief of Naval Operations or during the absence or disability of the Chief of Naval Operations—

"(1) the Vice Chief of Naval Operations shall perform the duties of the Chief of Naval Operations until a successor is appointed or the absence or disability ceases; or

"(2) if there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice Chief of Naval Operations or the Vice Chief of Naval Operations is absent or disabled, unless the President directs otherwise, the most senior officer of the Navy in the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations who is not absent or disabled and who is not restricted in performance of duty shall perform the duties of the Chief of Naval Operations until a successor to the Chief of Naval Operations or the Vice Chief of Naval Operations is appointed or until the absence or disability of the Chief of Naval Operations or Vice Chief of Naval Operations ceases, whichever occurs first.

"§ 5036. Deputy Chiefs of Naval Operations

"(a) There are in the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations not more than five Deputy Chiefs of Naval Operations, detailed by the Secretary of the Navy from officers on the active-duty list in the line of the Navy serving in grades above captain.

"(b) The Deputy Chiefs of Naval Operations are charged, under the direction of the Chief of Naval Operations, with the execution of the functions of their respective divisions. Orders issued by the Deputy Chiefs of Naval Operations in performing the duties assigned them are considered as coming from the Chief of Naval Operations.

"§ 5037. Assistant Chiefs of Naval Operations

"(a) There are in the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations not more than three Assistant Chiefs of Naval Operations, detailed by the Secretary of the Navy from officers on the active-duty list in the line of the Navy and officers on the active-duty list of the Marine Corps.

"(b) The Assistant Chiefs of Naval Operations shall perform such duties as the Secretary of the Navy prescribes.".

SEC. 513. HEADQUARTERS, MARINE CORPS
